Chancellor Randolf W. Bromery, contacted last week for comment on the administrative dismemberment, said it was needed to exercise better management control to reduce the scope of the office of vice-chancellor for administrative services, which he called too large and too constricted.

He said he and his associates will eventually review management relationships for "accountability and cost effectiveness" in the offices of both the other vice-chancellors.

He said because the UMass budget is levelling off at around 65 million for this campus "errors we've made, inefficiencies in management, have to be eliminated."

He said he fears the administratives services post has become a "catch all" for everything the other two vice-chancellors can't absorb.

"Is it (administrative services) an operating entity or isn't it?", he asked. "We feel that it is probably not."

While no date has been officially suggested, the review of administratives services may be over in as little as two weeks, at which time new staff positions to fill the void left by Campion will be announced.

Perhaps the toughest question involved in the impending shake-up is why it is happening at all. Is it the result of Bromery's dissatisfaction with the performance of Campion or the office as an independent entity?

To be sure, of the three Vice-chancellors, Campion has the lowest ratings among campus figures both student and faculty, as well as at least one well-placed legal advisor to the University.

But it is also true that his two decades with the New York Times culminating as business manager speak well for his ability as an organizer.

And finally, it is practically impossible to separate Campion — the man — from what Campion — the administrator — faced when he came here: a food service system in chaos, a Campus Center losing money hand-over-fist, and a clogged campus parking system with regular violations and a non-existent bus transportation system.

Those kinds of problems could keep anyone from performing up to par individually, but Campion dealt with them all at once.

Pictures talk.
Some little boys don't.

Some inner-city ghettos have special schools. For little boys who don't talk.

Not mute little boys. But children so withdrawn, so afraid of failure, they cannot make the slightest attempt to do anything at which they might fail.

Some don't talk. Some don't listen. Most don't behave. And all of them don't learn.

One day someone asked us to help.

Through Kodak, cameras and film were distributed to teachers. The teachers gave the cameras to the kids and told them to take pictures.

And then the miracle. Little boys who had never said anything, looked at the pictures and began to talk. They said "This is my house." "This is my dog." "This is where I like to hide." They began to explain, to describe, to communicate. And once the channels of communication had been opened, they began to learn.

We're helping the children of the inner-city. And we're also helping the adults. We're involved in inner-city job programs. To train unskilled people in useful jobs.

What does Kodak stand to gain from this? Well, we're showing how our products can help a teacher—and maybe creating a whole new market. And we're also cultivating young customers who will someday buy their own cameras and film. But more than that, we're cultivating alert, educated citizens. Who will someday be responsible for our society.

After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

The U.S. capitol saw a relatively noisey month in January, possibly an omen of yet another turbulent year. There was Unification Church rally in support of the President; A "Right to Life" march against abortion, and a few screaming matches in between. Below left, a deceivingly calm White House, and left, Judge Sirica, looking a little like Columbo.

Around New England

Methuen

METHUEN, Mass. (AP) — Yoga and meditation gave Skip Ciccarelli and Dee Lopez the strength to sashay around a floor for more than 64 hours and win a dance marathon contest here yesterday.

Ciccarelli termed the experience "the best meditation we ever had" and said he believed they could go on for several more hours.

The young Cambridge couple outlasted 44 other entries in the old-time marathon, which began Thursday morning at the enclosed shopping mall. The contest was sponsored as a promotional effort by the mall and Lawrence radio station WLLH. A total of $5,000 in prizes was awarded.

Ciccarelli and Miss Lopez won a 10-day cruise to the Virgin Islands, a wadrobe and cash.

The couple became winners at 1:24 a.m. Sunday, when Jean Soucy and Alice Roy of Lowell finally dropped out. Miss Roy, who is planning to marry Soucy in August, said she was too tired to continue. As runners-up, they received $500 in furniture, a color television set and several gift certificates.

Legal pot?

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The Vermont Bar Association has released the Marijuana Law Reform Committee's final report that recommends immediate decriminalization of marijuana in Vermont.

The committee was formed a year ago by the bar association, which released the report Saturday. The committee held five public hearings on the subject throughout the state.

The report said "our current marijuana laws have clearly failed" because they have not minimized the damage of the laws to individuals, particularly young offenders.

The report recommended that marijuana be eventually sold in state liquor stores, but it added that "public opinion does not currently favor legalization."

Heavy trucks OK

BOSTON (AP) — The state could issue permits permitting trucks to load above the legal limit without losing federal highway aid, the special Legislative Commission on Overloaded Trucks was told Friday.

The commission chairman, Rep. Richard M. McGrath, D-Watertown, read a letter from David E. Wells, counsel to the Federal Highway Administration.

Wells said such permits would have to be discretionary on the part of the issuing authority "and not a mere general extension of weight limits."

Roger Matthews, counsel to the state Department of Public Works, testified there were "practical administrative problems" in the way of issuing permits as a general policy.

The department already issues 24,000 permits a year for special cases such as oversized loads.

Nixon's men

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) — Two former presidential advisors will discuss energy and the economy at the Valley Bank and Trust Co.'s fifth annual economic seminar here.

Dr. Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and Dr. Pierre A. Rinfret, an advisor to the Johnson and Nixon administrations, will discuss the economic outlook for the year at the seminar at the Treadway Inn here.

Heller is a professor of economics at the University of Minnesota and president of the American Economic Association. Rinfret is president of Rinfret-Boston Associates, a New York financial counseling firm.

Town clerk dies

WATERTOWN, Mass. (AP) — George B. Wellman, 69, Watertown's town clerk since 1936, died Saturday of an apparent heart attack.

Wellman, who held the position of town clerk longer than any person since Watertown was incorporated in 1630, was a former president of the Massachusetts Town Clerks Association.

He also was founder and first president of the New England City and Town Clerks Association.

Sludge out

BOSTON (AP) - The Metropolitan District Commission has approved a contract for specifications for a sludge incinerator and a waste heat recovery system that would eliminate sludge disposal into the Boston Harbor.

The contract, with Havens and Emerson, a Cleveland consulting engineering firm, will be processed in the Executive Department of Administration and Finance. Officials said the contract is the outcome of an 18-month MDC study for sludge disposal.

The results of a study commissioned in 1972 and an MDC task force on solid waste determined that incineration is an acceptable alternative to sludge digestion at the Deer Island sewerage treatment plant, MDC officials said. Considerations taken into account were cost, environmental and sanitary benefits.

Trucker's strike the reaction

Massachusetts

BOSTON (AP) - Fresh fruits and vegetables may be in short supply in Massachusetts supermarkets this week, food industry officials say, due to the nationwide strike called by independent truckers.

Malcolm McCabe of Melrose, Mass., executive secretary of the Massachusetts Grocers Association, said the food industry "is very much concerned with the walkout. The independents who truck in the meat from the Midwest have been reluctant to come here because of possible trouble. The same problem exists with produce."

He said supermarkets cannot afford interruptions in delivery of perishable items.

"It is a serious, a critical situation," McCabe said. He called for the federal government to intevene and end the walkout.

The truckers began this shutdown Thursday, complaining that fuel costs are too high and freight rates are too low. Nationwide, the strike has been marred by violence, including the death of a driver in Pennsylvania Thursday.

Richard D. Butler of Roslindale, Mass., a leader of independent truckers in the Bay State, said 250 independents in eastern Massachusetts are striking.

Butler said truck deliveries of nearly all fresh fruits and vegetables scheduled for this week to Massachusetts markets will not be made. Deliveries of eggs, poultry, meat and dairy products will also be sharply curtailed, he said.

"Ninety per cent of the fresh fruit comes by independent trucks from Florida and it just isn't coming," Butler said. "The situation will be less severe for vegetables.

Connecticut

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP)-The leader of dissident truckers who closed four Connecticut truck stops says he doesn't think protests over higher diesel prices and lower speed limits will remain peaceful.

Ernest Weiss summoned independent truckers to his deisel-repair shop at Martin's Truck Stop for a strategy session yesterday afternoon.

Truckers blocked the pumps and persuaded other drivers not to leave the four stops Friday night. Two of the stops closed voluntarily but the others were pressured to shot down, he said.

"We notified the police and they were real cooperative. They kept out of it as long as there was no violence, and there wasn't" Weiss said Sunday.

"But we're looking for a little more drastic action. We're going to try to shutdown the company drivers. When we get to the bigger companies, they're going to call the police in to more us." He said that could precipitate trouble the truckers didn't want.

Weiss said Friday night's demonstration was a token shutdown to show that the truckers were able to close fuel supplies to drivers who didn't join them. All stops reopened by 7 a.m. Saturday and reported no further disruptions.

"We stopped over the weekend because it's not too busy anyway," Weiss said.

He said the Connecticut protests would continue as long as the national shutdown lasted.

Weiss said the truckers already had effected the shipment of produce in Connecticut.

"The regional market in Hartford is taking a real good bite. I'd like to see our boys close that market," he said.

5 climbers OK 6th dead of cold

MILLINOCKET, Maine (AP)- Five mountain climbers were recuperating Sunday at a hospital here after an ordeal that left a sixth companion dead atop a windswept clift on Mt. Katahdin.

The five were together at Millinocket Community Hospital when they learned that a rescue party had located Tom Keddy's body on a ridge leading to Pamola, one of the mile-high mountain's five peaks.

Keddy, 26, of Wakefield, Mass., was stranded on the mountain with his five companions Thursday night after the weather took a dramatic turn for the worse.

The temperatures dropped from around 25 above to 20 below, and fierce sheets of snow lashed at the beleaguered party.

On Friday, the other climbers were able to straggle into Chimney Pond, a base camp about halfway down the mountain, but Keddy elected to remain on the cliff and wait for help.

"It was like being inside of a continuously exploding firecracker," said Mike Cohen, 30, of Brighton, one of the five.

He said the group set out from Chimney Pond Thursday to make a technical climb up 1.25 miles of ice gullies to Pomola Peak. The temperature was about 25 above when they started, but the group got separated and by the time they were reunited, sunset had come, he said.

He said with darkness the temperature plummeted to 20 below and it began to snow in a fierce, beating way.

In the morning, two climbers set off down the mountain for help. To get off the cliff they were on, they had to go up by rope about 200 feet to a trail. Several hours later when no help had come, two more left by the same route.

When rescuers were able to ascend to the unprotected cliff Saturday, they found him dead. The troup decided to leave the body on the mountain until weather improved.

"They were trapped in a horrible situation," recalled one of the rescuers, Frank Roberts of Old Town.

"The winds were fierce," he said. "And they had moderated by the time we climbed. Thursday and Friday were even worse."

Roberts said the climbers had excellent equipment with them, but had left it behind at Chimney Pond, where the temperature was a balmy 40 degrees.

"Either they didn't know the weather forecast or didn't believe it," he said.

The five survivors, all employees of the Appalachian Mountain Club's Pinkham Notch N.H. Camp were identified as Paul DeBello, 23, of Jackson, N.H.; Mike Cohen, 30, of Brighton, Mass.; Robert Proudman, 25, and Page Dinsmore, 19, both of Gorham, N.H., and Doug George, 21, of Concord, N.H.

They were all reported in satisfactory condition, with frostbite and the blisters and discoloration of exposure.

DeBello, the last to see Keddy alive, described how his legs were getting stiff with frostbite and Keddy was incoherent.

He said he tried in vain to persuade Keddy to attempt a 200-food climb by rope to a trail that would lead them to Chimney Pond.

Then, recalling the lone trek into camp, he said he fell about 40 feet off a ledge into snow.

"I couldn't see anything, it was all a blur of white."

Brazil blaze death toll reaches 182

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — The Sao Paulo morgue said yesterday the death toll in the Crefisul Bank fire had reached 182, but other sources said 200 or more perished.

An influential Sao Paulo newspaper said the fire chief was under threat of being fired.

A spokesman for the First National City Bank of New York, which controls 33 per cent of the stock in the Brazilian investment and savings bank, said he understood the death toll was over 200.

Col. Jonas Flores Ribeiro Jr., commander of the Sao Paulo fire department, was quoted in the newspaper O Estado de Sao Paulo as saying: "There are 200 dead."

"Dismissal Threatens Fire Commander," said a headline in the paper. Ribeiro complained after the fire Friday that Sao Paulo, a city of more than six million, needed at least 70 fire stations but has only 13.

The press secretary of the state government said he could neither confirm nor deny that Ribeiro might be fired. "We are not denying it, only saying that we have no information to that respect," the spokesman said.

Investigators have not speculated on the cause of the fire, but some officials have said it probably was a short circuit in a 12th-floor air conditioning unit. The 25-story building had no fire escape and also lacked a helicopter landing pad.

Sao Paulo's mayor said the reason the fire spread rapidly through the upper 14 floors of the building was that highly flammable plastic was used in its construction.

Dylan & Vietnam

By KEVIN MACK

The other day I read another article aoout Vietnam. This one was in the Globe and it was by Frances Fitzgerald, a woman journalist who also wrote an excellent book about the war and its effect on the Vietnamese people; Fire on the Lake. Evidently the war is still around. Only now it's American supplied Vietnamese killing other Vietnamese. There aren't half a million Vietnamese were killed in the country whose "peace" won Henry Kissinger a Nobel Prize.

In a way, it was nostalgic reading about Vietnam again. It brought back memories. Of childhood. Of the sixties. And of revolution.

Then there was the Dylan tour, which has also been very much in the news lately. Bob Dylan, like Vietnam, seems an awkward anachronism in these wishy-washy Watergate days. Dylan, the sixties musical and cultural revolutionary has just completed his first tour since 1965. Reading about Dylan's tour was nostalgic too. Dylan started most of his concerts with his "Like a Rolling Stone", a song from his 1965 album, "Highway 66, Revisited"; a song which like many of Dylan's other songs of that period expresses a peculiarly American sixties spiritual malaise. It is about a fallen socialite suddenly confronted with the bitter realities on the street:

"You used to laugh about everybody who was hanging out. But now you don't laugh so loud, now you don't seem so proud about havin' to be scroungin' for your next meal"

In a sense, the sixties were years when America became aware of the down trodden-of blacks and the poor, or life on the street. And they were years when many of America's chosen few "dropped out" and learned first hand what its like to be "scrounging" for your next meal."

They were also years of mass realization. People like Dylan and events like the War in Vietnam forced the conclusion that there must be something savagely wrong with the American dream. Dylan's musical negations became the catch-words of a whole generation of collegiate nay-sayers. (Twenty years of schoolin' and they put you on the day shift...Look out kid it's something you did, don't know what but you're doin' it again") His rebellious questioning both echoed and foreshadowed that of the rest of us. Not surprisingly, a group of young revolutionaries, committed to violent change, the Weathermen, took their name from one of his songs.

Like Vietnam, Dylan withdrew from the scene. Only hiswithdrawal was not as gradual. And, likewise, his withdrawal was only apparent. Dylan still sings his old songs, but, as one of his better known titles says, "The times they are A-changin". Dylan's new songs are products of a man who has grown out of his own personal and the national suicide trip of the sixties. His new songs are affirmations of life and of love. And they are hard fought after affirmations, paid for with a few grueling years of insane creativity and a near fatal motorcycle accident.

I am in favor of nostalgia, for no other reason than that it brings about the realization that things were not always the way they are now.

Perhaps in the future, in times of turbulence we will look back on these days as days when the nation was overly concerned with the petty misdemeanors of a bunch of D.C. politicians and rather inconsequential economic difficulties. But of realitive quiet, nonetheless.

Will Ferd Fishbane find success and happiness at UMass? How about identity? How about...?

Having been recently absent from these parts for five or so weeks, I was pleased to get back. And so I immediately took to as much carousing and gallivanting as I could muster. On one of my scourges thru the campus, a very strange thing happened. One of my friends, Ferd Fishbane, a Meat Tenderizing major from Fall River, came charging over like a pack of wild yaks in heat, as my man College is wont to say. He was livid with excitement, quite red in the face, and looked as if he had just come from the BlueWall fight.

"Zamir, do you recognize me? It's me! Ferd! Ferd! Ferd!" "Sure Ferd, whats happ'nin?" I replied. But with this he screamed in a great frenzy: "At last! Someone who knows me. I exist! I exist!"

"Calm down Ferd, calm down. Don't you know that you exist? Everybody around here exists in one form or another. Some are alive and some vegetate," I said in my most profound voice."

Ferd, still incapacitated with rage, bellowed: "You wouldn't believe what I went through in the last week. I've been erased from this University. I've been deleted. I've been folded, spindled and mutilated. It's as if President Nixon gave the order for Rosemary Woods to press some buttons and erase me, not once, not twice nor even thrice, but nine times. I am the fifty-two second gap! AAAAGGGHHHH!!!" With this Ferd broke down into a most heart-rendering tear jerking weeping. "Come on Ferd, take it easy, tell me what's it all about," I said trying out my latest Reader's Digest Do It Yourself Shrink Technique.

"Okay, Okay!" Ferd agreed. "First thing, I came back to my old floor, the zilchteenth in Kennedy Tower and I found to my horror that everybody from last semester had moved out. No one recognized me. My 'Its me Ferdie Fishbane and I'm back' yell fell on deaf ears. And then these two guys, unpacking into my room told me that I didn't live there any more, that I was to be temporarily housed in the Campus Center Hotel 'til they found me a new hole."

"That's not so bad Ferd, it could have been worse. They even have color T.V. there."

"But the girl at the desk never heard about it and refused to put me up. And so I have been reduced to sleeping in the Morgan Memorial Box at the Mall. Its not easy you know. Every twenty minutes or so someone drops in an old used out Chesty Morgan Bra or an empty can of beer."

"Yeah what a bummer!" I sympathized. "What happened next?"

"And then horror upon horror," he went on, "I went to register. Curry Hicks Cage didn't have my packet. Boyden didn't have my packet. Wope never heard of me. I was outraged, especially since I had paid my bill a month ago. And so I decided that it was time to tempt fate and I went to confer with Oscar the Computer over at Whitmore."

"And...."

"Oscar did not compute. I was wiped out of his memory banks. No card, no digital readout with my name on it was to be found. Oscar had never heard of me. I had lost my identity. With this I set out to regain my identity, to find out who I was. I felt like Ben Gazzarra with a five minute head start."

"What did you do?" I queried.

"I came back an hour later with a big wrench and a blow torch ready to smash the shit out of Oscar. But the Campus Police busted me before I got to him. It didn't matter anyway because they had to let me go when they realized that I had no identity."

"Hows that?"

"No fingerprints".

"AHHH!!"

"But when I got out, I realized what dire straits I was in. For here I had taken five semesters worth of Meat Tenderizing courses for nothing. I have to start all over. And even if I do, the fact that I don't exist may prevent me from learning anything. Meat Tenderizing is not easy you know."

"Yes, I know," I said, "its really tough."

Oh the Pain of it All!

Dieting

In heaven there is no beer, that's why we diet here.

By now, most of you must've heard about the woman who had her teeth cemented together in a drastic attempt to lose weight. In fact it may be so drastic that soon she'll be saying, "Look Ma, no teeth" once her diet is completed in a hospital where she is getting intravenous feeding. It's no teeth as there is no way they can be saved. She'll starve so bad that she'll get too weak to live.

Seriously, while one is losing weight, one must have nourishment. I know it's hard. I've been on diets a lot although those of you who know me see me with a protruding abdomen made up of beer.

I didn't diet until my sophomore year in high school. I was a wrestler then and had to lose the weight to make the team. It was only nine pounds so I could Metrecal it away. Metrecal, a popular product then, was used by many to lose weight. Funny, you don't see many of these products like Metrecal on the market anymore. It's because Big Brother's FDA found that if one drank 100 gaalons of cyclamate, a common ingredient in these diet foods, every day for 100 years, you would get cancer of the bladder. This is why Americans have become "fat and happy."

In my junior year, I had to lose twenty five pounds to make that wrestling team. The last ten pounds came off by dehydration with a rubber sweatsuit in a heated room while on a crash diet (mostly oranges). The same thing happened my senior year. You should see me now, I'm 5'3", 150 lbs., twenty pounds more than I should weigh and can't diet at all.

Actually, dieting is an ass. Nowadays, with no diet food, willpower, with sound medical advise must take over. In this world, willpower, more than anything else, makes things happen. The best way to diet is to pre-plan it first. See a doctor beforehand. There are a lot of diets being prescribed today and a competent physician should be able to find the one right for you. I would also recommend learning as much as possible about nutrition, calories and exercise. The best two people on campus I can think of who could help are Benjamin Ricci PhD and Dee Edington PhD of the Exercise Science Department. These men are research specialists in Exercise Physiology and their publications might offer some sound advice. Check the library.

I feel no one has all the answers. But I do feel that a doctor can give you the best answers to solve your weight problem. He will probably prescribe a program of diet with exercise that will take flab off your bod the best way possible.

As for me, I try the best I can. Now if I could only stop drinking beer. Dreams, dreams...

Sex ed. for men

By DEBORAH PORTINGTON

The University Health center has been udder attack by students who complain that they wait endless hours to be examined by a doctor, then wonder whether they receive appropriate attention. In spite of these unabated complaints of students, those who have utilized the contraceptive clinic realize the Health Center does allow easy access to contraceptives, inexpensively and confidentially with the proper medical attention.

When a woman contacts the contraceptive clinic because she desires some sort of contraception she is requested to attend an educational session. Here, she is introduced to various types of contraception, how they affect her body and what their effectiveness rate is. Some students wonder how effective the contraceptive program is. To anyone attending the educational session, it is blatantly obvious to them that a great majority of those present are women. These women should be commended for caring about their body but I wonder where the men are.

With the amount of information available at these sessions I should think that more men would be interested in attending. Almost everyone knows what the Pill looks like. It is the little white tablet sitting in the pastic case with the dainty flower grafted on its cover along with 20 other tablets identical to it. There are other facts to the Pill, such as it can increase the likelihood of vaginal infections in some women and some women cannot use the Pill for medical reasons.

There are basically three types of women sitting in these educational sessions. First, there are women who lead an active sex life either with or without a single, steady sexual partner. These women, of course, are ardently concerned with keeping themselves free of undesired pregnancies. The second type of woman has a sexual life, but she has already chosen a method of contraception. She is present to acquire a greater knowledge of contraceptive methods. She may or may not be thinking about changing her present method. The third type of women attending these sessions possesses a zealous curiosity to gain information about contraceptives for whatever she has.

One might deduce from these categories of women that there might be similar categories of men. I feel there are. There are the men leading an active sex life who wish to prevent their partners from becoming pregnant. Also, there are men I am sure, curious about contraception. Perhaps either of these men might want to attend one of these sessions but will not because he fears he will feel uncomfortable and unaccepted. Therefore, I suggest that women wishing to attend one of these sessions invite a man to accompany her.

The men would probably feel more comfortable knowing they are welcomed and that they are a necessary part of the clinic if it is to educate both men and women with the proper use of contraception. I venture to assume that men are a necessary factor in the sexual lives of most women attending the contraceptive clinic's educational sessions. Perhaps, through enabling men to understand that women are concerned about themselves including their bodies, some men will be less inclined to treat women only as pill consuming objects.

Campus voters get aid

This month an important advance was made in the poltiical lives of UMass students. The annual street listing which is used to update voter lists was changed to the benefit of students, administrators and town officials.

Three years ago when Attorney General Quinn ruled that students could vote where they lived many people expected hoards of hippies to take over Amherst. At the same time it was thought that the townspeople would erect defenses against this hoard. The first part of the scenario never occured. Young people have a poorer voting record than any other age group; and in local elections it is especially low. In the 1972 presidential elections we voted in great numbers but on a urban renewal referendum less than two months later very few of us bothered to cast ballots. Reasons for the lack of participation in local affairs include difficulty in registering, a high rate of mobility and perhaps a lack of interest.

Barriers, real and imaginary, were established or already in existence when we went to the ballot box for the first time. In the fall of '71 the Town Clerk came to campus to sign up voters but in January of '72 the street listing which few understood including the Heads of Residence who administrated it disenfranchised many of us. Voting in the November presidential elections was heavy and Democratic enough to drive almost every Republican out of office in Hampshire County. Almost as a response the Selectmen decided to hold the town's primary during school vacation. While they may be able to hide their reasons in rhetoric and legalism the town leaders must admit that they kept students from voting and it wasn't by accident. That election is now in the courts but the selectmen have learned from this fiasco and voting will take place during school this year. One can only hope that they will not take more steps against us.

Town Clerk, Estelle Matusko, has been charged with the difficult task of keeping the voting list up to date in this highly mobile town. Under state law she is charged with conducting a survey of the town each january and February to determine who is eligible to vote. As noted before she has tried to do this through the Heads of Residence on campus; they have expressed little interest in it however, and have done a very poor job. This year she is asking the University through the Housing Office to tell her who has moved from the town and is no longer eligible to vote. Ms. Matusko and her office deserve considerable praise for this new method; it means that student voters will no longer have to worry about being dropped from the voter rolls because they weren't informed what street listing was about or their Head of Residence didn't bother to take the time to find out. Now only has Ms. Matusko eliminated this worry but she has arranged to have the names of voters listed on campus.

I believe that the number of students who are interested in Amherst is very small, especially on campus. There is a great deal of insulation between the gown and town; outside of the Drake downstairs, Bell's and gas stations, the University can offer us everything Amherst can. Fears that we'll take over are groundless unless some extraordinary disaster occurs.

Voting should be as easy as possible. In this town that means polling places where the people live and without long lines. It means the Collegian covering more local news and giving greater attention to legal notices from town officials. It also means town officials giving greater attention to on campus students.

Five Colleges For Art

Now that the biggest snowstorm of the year has brought us back from the deceptions of Spring to early February, there are some observations concerning the beginning of the semester that I'd like to jot down.

Registration is always a pain. While waiting in Boyden Gymnasium to register, I looked around at the harried faces, moving from line to line filled with aggravation and frustration. If you received your "registration packet" without complications, you were one of the lucky ones. Many people opened their packet to find out that they had not been able to get various courses that they signed up for. Many others wished that their problems were that easy.

For those who found that their packets had not been "cleared", because the computer had not registered their term payments, there was the Bursar's line for "Problems and Questions". This line was so long and slow, that it resembled a bread line in Europe during the Marshall Plan. Some people had to wait for hours just to get to the front of the line. To make things worse once they got their, and had their bills "cleared" (as they say in Whitmore) and picked up their packets...they too found out that they didn't get some of the courses they requested.

Another question on this topic: Why are people ever cancelled out of courses? The question is not as absurd as it might at first seem. With the exception of science courses (that might need lab space) there is no substantial reason why Departments can't try and improvise to meet the demand for certain courses.

This is not to say that quality courses with a low demand should be dropped, but rather that the faculty and administration should try to improvise to accomodate all academic strivings, as long as they are reasonable.

If a certain professor is in demand, he or she should be willing to teach an extra section to meet the demand. Now I'm sure that this happens now and then, and I'm not advocating that it should happen all the time. However if you talk to students coming out of registration one thing is clear: it isn't happening enough.

The foremost example of this is with the Art Department. I've been told that the only way to get into a studio course at UMass is to be an Art major, a relative of Picasso or "know someone"!! Friends of mine have been signing up for years and say that they have never been able to get into "this or that" Art course. One day I was told by a friend of her plan to get into a ceramics course. It went something like this: "If the class starts at eight in the morning..you get there at seven-thirty. When the professor comes you smile to show just how much you want to get into the course. You sit through the first day of class..and you ask as earnestly as possible; then I'm-notsignedupforyourclass...butIwant veeerymuch tobeinit. Will you pleeesse..letmein!!!"

It just doesn't seem fair if only Art majors (to a great extent) are the only ones allowed in. This is a University, and if a prospective Engineer, lawyer, or whatever wants to enjoy an Art course..it should be a a real possibility and not a luxery.

What ever happened to Renaisance person?

On the possitive side, looking through the various course catalogs in the "Five College Area" I am amazed by the creative possibilities and course offerings available to UMass students in through cross-registration. There really are so many things worth taking at Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire; and yet a comparatively small percentage of umies are signing up. If you have a few minutes, drop by the Casiac office for "Five College Information". You may really be surprised by the possibilities.

For the people

UMass and legislation

By BOB MacKAY

One of the areas that "For The People" will regularly cover is legislation that will affect UMass students. Several House and Senate bills applicable to UMass are in the news this week.

House bill no. 423 would repeal the law granting fiscal autonomy to state (including community) colleges. The bill was filed by Rep. Arthur Desrocher (R-Nantucket), who explained that the bill had been filed in past years without success. Desrocher stated that passage of the bill would bring the UMass state-granted expenditures under the control of the State Legislature and Administration and Finance. Proponents of the bill say that repealing fiscal autonomy will mean greater financial efficiency at state colleges. Those opposed say that passage would "take education back 50 years."

Senate bill no. 123 directs UMass-Amherst to charge out-of-state students tuition, board, and room equal to the charges made by private universitites and colleges. The bill would take effect on Sept. 1, 1974...Senate bill no. 13 lists free tuition for those over 65 at state colleges...Also, Senate bill no. 115 provides for free tuition in police science and fire science associate degree programs for police officers and firefighters attending the state colleges. All of these bills will receive public hearings before the Joint Legislative Committee on Education, though the hearings have not yet been scheduled.

COLLEGE DEMOCRATS

College Democrats of Massachusetts (C.D.M.) is an organization in the making that is to consist of thousands of students from virtually all the major colleges in Massachusetts. C.D.M. will become an effective voice in communicating the interests of college students to our Beacon Hill legislators. Included among C.D.M.'s concerns are the rising tuition costs at nearly every college in the state.

Congressman Robert J. Drinan (Fourth District) is tentatively scheduled as the guest speaker at the first statewide gathering of College Democrats. The conference will be held at the Boston College campus in Chestnut Hill, February 16 at 1 p.m. in room 113 of McGuinn Hall. At the meeting, C.D.M. will solicit ideas concerning plans for a major caucus, to be held by the group in March. Candidates for the Massachusetts Constitutional Officers will be nominated by College Democrats at its March caucus.

It should be emphasized that YOUR participation is needed and wanted by College Democrats. Students in the Five-College area interested in discovering what College Democrats is all about are urged to attend an upcoming meeting on the UMass campus. The introductory session is scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 12 at 7 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center.

ON ABORTION...

Controversy over the abortion issue continues to rage. Rep. Raymond Flynn (D-Boston) says that Boston "...is becoming the abortion capital of the nation."

Rep. Flynn has submitted for approval to the Boston City Council both anti-abortion legislation and anti-fetus experimentation. Flynn's legislation has the support of such pro-life groups as Mass. Citizens for Life.

Also, Flynn has filed a resolution amending the U.S. Constitution in such a way that the Supreme Court decision of Jan. 22, 1973 — which legalized abortions — would be reversed. The resolution will come up for debate on the floor of the Mass. House of Representatives. Flynn's resolution is the first ever to be introduced into the Mass. Legislature demanding a reversal of a Supreme Court decision.

On the other side, Rep. Barney Frank (D-Boston) said, "It is nonsensical to say that Boston is becoming the abortion capital of the nation..."

"We are talking about a Supreme Court decision which grants every woman the right to have an abortion within the first six months of pregnancy." In accordance with the ruling, a woman is entitled to an abortion at any public hospital.

"As a matter of fact," said Rep. Frank, "a lobbying group tried to put through a bill giving the Boston City Hospital the option of performing abortions — and the House Counsel said that the bill was unconstitutional. City employees themselves do have a choice as to whether or not they wish to perform abortions — but the institution (hospital) itself cannot reject a woman's request for an abortion..."

PERMANENT STATE ENERGY COMMISSION

Within three months, Massachusetts could have a permanent state Energy Commission. House bill 4217, sponsored by House Speaker David Bartley (D-Holyoke), Rep. Raymond LaFontaine (D-Gardner), and Rep. Robert Ambler (D-Weymouth), would bring about such a commission. The bill is currently in Third Reading and most likely will go to the Senate next week for action.

Mr. Kenneth Robbins, legal counsel to the Committee on Government Regulations, explained that the proposed Commission would have three major responsibilities —

First, the Commission would act as a central repository for energy data. Presently, information regarding energy supplies is directed to several state agencies. However, there is no one department that has or attempts to collect all available energy information.

Secondly, the proposed Mass. Energy Commission would seek out and develop alternate energy sources. The Federal Government plans to spend $20 billion during the next few years developing alternate energy sources, and the Mass. Commission would serve as a lightning rod for some of this Federal money.

Thirdly, Robbins says that the Commission would draw up an "Emergency Load Curtailment and Distribution Plan." Input for such a plan would come from the public utilities, industry, the public, and energy experts. If the Governor declared an "Energy Emergency," the Commission's plan — which would be continously updated — would go into effect. Finally, the major role of the Mass. Energy Commission would be to recommend energy-use policy to the State. The Commission could also submit legislation to the General Court.

FROM THE MCAD

The Mass. Commission Against Discrimination recently released its "Activity Analysis for 1973." In the release, MCAD stated that "...its sole purpose is to protect the rights of (Mass.) citizens by enforcing the state's anti-discrimination legislation." The following is also from the report...

"...During 1973 one new law prohibits discrimination because of sex or marital status against persons seeking credit and services, and another law imposes a $1,000 penalty for violators. It is now unlawful to discriminate against widows or divorcees in the purchase, rent or leasing of residential real property."

"Another new law ends automatic exclusion from jury duty of women with children under age 15. Working women who are the main support of a dependent child can get the same unemployment compensation benefits without a waiting period. A woman granted a divorce may resume either her maiden name or that of any of her former husbands."

"It is now discriminatory to require that an employee violate his or her faith, and persons certified as mentally competent after treatment in mental health institutions must be considered along will all other applicants in hiring."

"Maternity leave of up to eight weeks must be granted for childbirth and recovery. The employee must be returned to her previous position or a similar position. Pregnancy is defined as a temporary disability insurance or sick leave plan shall be applied on the same terms and conditions as in other temporary disabilities."

"Of the 1600 cases alleging discrimination which were filed in 1973, almost 1100 dealt with employment. Fifty-one percent of these complaints were based on race or color, and thirty percent on sex discrimination. Cases alleging sex discrimination have been increasing in leaps and bounds, and it is entirely possible that 1974 may see an equalization of the number of cases filed in these two categories of discrimination."

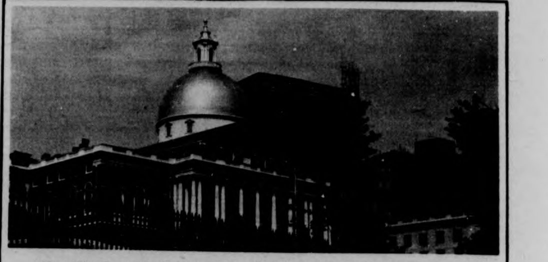
NEXT WEEK: Concerned Citizens and Walpole State Prison



"For The People" is a weekly column on Mass. state government and politically-related issues of interest to our readers. If you agree or disagree with what is reported in this column, remember that the most effective recourse is to contact your state representatives and senators. Elected officials are representing you, and most of them are anxious to hear from their constituents. Government operates most effectively when people get involved!

The Legislative Process

Your representative files a petition for legislation in the office of the Clerk of the House.

The clerk processes the petition, attaches a House number and assigns it to a joint committee.

A public hearing and executive hearing are then held on the petition by a joint committee.

The petition is reported to the House. If the House accepts an unfavorable report, the petition is not accepted and notice is then sent to the Senate. If favorable, the bill takes three readings and is passed to be engrossed.

Bill or resolve is then sent to the Senate for action.

If acted upon favorably after three readings and engrossed by the Senate, it is sent to the Secretary of State to be put on special parchment.

The Governor then has ten days to decide whether to sign the bill or veto it.

Some midwest firms shut by trucker's strike

He said the driver-owners want assurances of reasonable prices for diesel fuel and permission to pass through to shipping companies, on a dollar-for-dollar basis, any fuel price increases.

Federal energy chief William Simon and four Cabinet officials met Saturday night and appealed to the nation's governors to help restore peace to the nation's highways. At the same time, they said they were taking steps to ease the truckers' problems.

U.S. Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe said yesterday that the governors should "use every resource at their command to see that we do not descend into anarchy...This handful of truckers is not going to bring this country to its knees."

Saxbe, who said he once drove a truck himself, made the comment during a visit to his hometown of Mechanicsburg, Ohio.

Shapp, the chairman of the Mid-Atlantic Governors Conference, said: "A return to work now can prevent a national economic calamity..."

Industries unable to get raw materials or ship finished products have curtailed production and further layoffs were announced yesterday.

Shootings were reported late Saturday night or early Sunday morning in South Carolina, Tennessee, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Ohio. A rock-throwing incident was reported in Illinois and there were three arrests in Indiana.

National Guardsmen patrolled highway overpasses in Pennsylvania, scene of earlier shootings and one death.

George Rynn, president of the Ohio-based Council of Independent Truckers, said it was hard to estimate how many truckers were participating in the shutdown.

"There are approximately 100,000 owner-operators," he said. "About 90 per cent of them are shut down. There's probably a good 30 per cent of the company drivers on sick call and there are 300,000 company drivers."

In Minnesota Armour and Co. closed its large hog killing plant at Worthington because of the strike.

The Sterling Processing plant at Oakland, Md., which handles chickens, laid off 500 workers.

Joe Mercurio, a salesman for a produce wholesaler in Chicago, said he had enough supplies to meet demand for a little while, but added that spot shortages could begin today.

Wilson & Co., Inc., a meat and packing firm based in Oklahoma City, said more than 1,200 employes will be laid off because of the truckers' protest.

By yesterday, the shutdown had spread to more than 20 states. Officials in most states said traffic was light. In some areas, including the Northeast, bad weather added to the protest to keep vehicles off the road.

There was fresh concern over food supplies, many of which are delivered by truck.

An official of the Producers Livestock Association in Columbus, Ohio, said livestock buying was down 50 to 60 per cent by the end of the week because of concern over shipment of the animals.

The mayor of Jamestown, Tenn., which has no railroad service, said, "Without the trucks, we're in real trouble. I'd say by Tuesday or Wednesday, if they don't start up here again, the shelves are going to be bare around here." He said people were buying "about twice their usual groceries" on Saturday in an effort to stock up.

At least a dozen other meat packing plants and slaughter houses have shut down or cut back operations. By Saturday, at least 6,000 workers in Ohio had been told not to report for work Monday and 1,000 persons in Philadelphia had lost their jobs because of curtailments due to the truckers' shutdown.

Westinghouse Electric Co. said the 4,200 employes in the Columbus plant would work Monday, but added that there might be a shutdown later in the week because of a supply shortage.

Conte— watching a power plant

MONTAGUE -- Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) has told a reporter he will play an "environmental and safety watchdog role" during the application phase for construction of a nuclear power plant here.

Northeast Utilities, which serves Connecticut and Western Massachusetts, wants to build twin boiling-water reactors to generate 850,000 kilowatts each in this town of 8,500 about ten miles north of Amherst.

The project, to cost $1.3 billion before completion in 1984, is now under consideration by the Atomic Energy Commission.

In an interview with the Springfield Republican, Conte said he would not intervene directly in any public hearings, but will watch the utility's proposal carefully for "any moves that would tend to reduce the environmental safeguards that are currently required."

The Stop & Shop Companies
Commitment to the Consumer

Money by the pound.

That's what you stand to lose if you don't take advantage of unit pricing.

If you haven't paid much attention to it and aren't sure of how unit pricing works or what it really is, it's time to find out.

Unit pricing is a very special approach to pricing. It tells shoppers just how much they actually pay for the products they buy. Per item. Per pound or ounce. At a glance.

268 PL STEWING VEGT 24Z

Here's how it works. Tags like the one shown here are used on more than 7,000 items in every Stop & Shop. They're attached to the edges of our display shelves. They list the following information: 1. Brand name. 2. Type of product. 3. Package weight. 4. Retail price. 5. Unit price.

So if you're faced with the problem of deciding which of 6 brands of jelly, or 10 brands of cereal that all look the same, would be the best buy for you, you'll be able to solve it. Fast. But remember that price isn't the only consideration. Be sure to compare quality, taste, ease of preparation, too!

Stop & Shop has used unit pricing in its stores since April of 1970. If you haven't used it yet, try it. Who knows how much money you might save?

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarius is long-distance and Jupiter. These natives travel, pontificate, are sure in their knowledge and, at times, refuse to be disturbed by the facts. Many are slightly ahead of their time while others are deeply engrossed in studies of the past. Sagittarius is politics and religion and foreign travel; this is the sign of the Ninth House and also represents publishing and philosophy, medicine and the theater. Sagittarius is complicated, often brutally frank and many persons are alienated from them after first being fiercely attracted.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New approach is necessary if complications are not to be compounded. Be direct, original, creative--and assert yourself in dynamic manner. Family members, mate, partner may look aghast--but it is important to be you, not an imitation or a robot.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Light touch could work wonders. Tender, loving care is essential. Older family member needs encouragement. Give it and you will grow as a result. Follow through on hunch. Don't be sidetracked by one who sings the blues.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): There are unique ways to use material at hand. Your natural versatility, adeptness comes flying to forefront. If you suppress it to please the timid, you hurt chances for achievement. Know it and act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cycle is high--obstacle will break apart. You can step over debris. Check apparent minor points. Be specific, thorough. Step forward despite protestations of older, intransigent persons. You will be vindicated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be ready for change, including scenery. Your ideas, concepts are subject to change. Know it and don't fight personal progress. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. See and perceive--greater illumination is at hand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money and how it gets that way is of concern--and should provide humor, too. Some friends offer advice freely, whether solicited or otherwise. Taurus, Libra could be involved. Associates who "act up" are crying out for attention, compliments.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): See ahead--avoid wishful thinking. Process of tearing down for purpose of rebuilding may be necessary. You make meaningful contact with persons who can advance ambitions, career. Pisces, Virgo individuals may be in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Subtle approach brings best results. One who seems indifferent may merely be testing. Know it and accept challenge. Gain is indicated through written word. Study and get thoughts, ideas and concepts committed to paper.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends and money may be an oil and water mixture--key now is to finish, to be rid of burden not rightly your own. Aries, Libra individuals could be involved. Humanitarian gesture will be repaid. Be kind without being foolish.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look beyond the immediate. Your creative abilities can be successfully utilized. New contact can aid in proving that point. Leo, Aquarius individuals may be in picture. Be independent but also defer to special request by mate, partner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hunch pays dividends. Learn and teach--share knowledge. Rise above the petty; be confident in future. Those who can perform special services will be available. Know it and proceed accordingly. Another Aquarian could be in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Creativity and versatility combine now to bring unusual contacts, challenges and experiences. Horizons will be broadened. What appeared a roadblock to progress will be removed. Sagittarian might figure prominently.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY You are stubborn and talented, frank to point of being insulting at times. You are zealous in beliefs, often serve as an inspiration for those lacking in faith. August will be key month.

Women gymnasts vault by Towson St.

By CANDY GROSS

Despite some tight judging, the Minutewomen added another win to their record, defeating Towson State College this past Saturday, 96.50 to 88.75. As Coach Virginia Evans put it, "The judges certainly weren't giving anything away to either team."

The highlight of the vaulting had to be UMass freshman, Linda Nelligan's 8.60 handspring, which tied her for first place with Towson's top All-Around performer, Bonnie Corrigan. The next two places also went to UMass, with Jeannine Burger's 8.5 yamashita and an 8.3 handspring by Margie Combs.

Unfortunately, the usually strong bars event, proved to be the weakest for UMass. It was won by a greatly improved Bonnie Corrigan with an 8.20. Second place went to UMass' Linda Nelligan, 7.70, who had a good routine with only some form breaks. In spite of a fall, Betsy East finished third. The third highest score for UMass was All-Around Jeanine Burger's 7.25. The other three UM competitors, Anne Vexler, Heidi Armstrong and Gail McCarthy had various form breaks and falls, and this added up to a rather disappointing event score of 22.50, a slight advantage over Towson's 22.20.

The total score at the half way mark was UM 47.95 to Towson 46.10.

Although better than the bars, the low event score of 23.85 to Towson's 19.60 stopped any real hope of scoring 100 points. But the 4.25 point gap between the teams clinched the meet for UMass. The women of both teams suffered numerous breaks, with Towson unable to complete even one of their routines without a fall. Their highest score was a 6.75 by Bonnie Corrigan. First place was captured by Anne Vexler, with an 8.55. Jodi Hitt gave her strongest performance this year, for 8.20 and second place. Senior Heidi Armstrong's improved routine took third place with 7.10 and completed the UMass sweep of the beam event.

Floor exercise brought excellent first and second place performances from Anne Vexler and Jeannine Burger, respectively. Anne's usual exuberant dance and leaps were combined with some improved tumbling for a score of 8.65. Jeannine also had a strong routine which earned her an 8.35. These two women are fun to watch when they combine the strength elements of tumbling with their own distinct styles of dance. Third place went to Towson's Paula Feahr with a score of 8.0.

The All-Around event was barely won by Bonnie Corrigan with a 30.95.

Coach Evans was particularly pleased with the two new team members, Jodi Hitt and Linda Nelligan, who both competed and placed in two events. "They are contributing to the team's depth, as was hoped for at the beginning of this season's practice." On the whole Ms. Evans feels that "the team must do better on the road, having shown overall erratic performances this past weekend."

Trackmen lose to Northeastern

By SCOTT HAYES

At the start of the Indoor Track season, the UMass pole vaulters were being left at home because of the limited size of the traveling squad and some ineffective performances. Evidently, one vaulter, Dan Grigus, didn't like staying behind and was determined to improve enough to make the traveling squad. In Saturday's 76-42 loss to Northeastern, Grigus tied the school pole vault record by clearing 13'6".

By tying the record, Grigus entered the record book along with four other trackmen who vaulted the same height in previous seasons at UMass.

UMass started off the meet on the right foot, taking first and second in both the long and triple jumps. Bob Adamson placed first in both events. Adamson's jumps of 22'2" in the long jump and 44'11" in the triple jump gave UMass 10 quick points. Mike Geraghty captured second with leaps of 22'1" and 44'5". Mike Ebbots of Northeastern garnered third place in both of the jumping events. Adamson and Geraghty put UMass ahead 16-2 by passing out several NU jumpers on their last jump of the day.

Ken Silverman led a Northeastern sweep of the shot put, and Dov Djerassi took first in the 35-pound weight throw with an outstanding toss of 60'9". Bob Bocash took third in the weight throw for UMass.

NU's Mike Quigley, an outstanding freshman high jumper, captured first place in the high jump. UMass freshman Conrad Gees finished third with a jump of 6'2".

Northeastern took a slight lead into the running events. Mike Buckley and Mike Hickey widened that lead by taking first and second in the mile. Buckley was timed in 4:18 while Hickey followed, a second behind. UMass co-captain John Maloney took third in the mile with a time of 4:21.4.

Jim Hennessy and Curt Stegerwald cut the margin by coming right back with a 1-2 finish in the 50-yard high hurdles. Hennessy was clocked in 6.7, while teammate Stegerwald completed the distance in 6.8.

Barron Littlefield came up with a strong effort to win the 600-yard run. With about 40 yards left in the race, Littlefield put on a kick, starting on the turn to pass Nick Ayos and another NU runner.

In other running events, Bill Milton and Charles Vann took first and third for NU in the dash, while Tony Pendleton managed a second for UMass. Milton won the race in 5.6. In the 1,000 yard run, Ken Graham spoiled a fine effort by Chris Farmer. Farmer led the race until the last lap when Graham passed him and crossed the tape first in 2:15.8. Farmer finished the race in 2:16.2. In another battle, Howie Scribner edged Harry Kelley for third place.

Success for UMass chess

By MDC STAFF

Over intersession the UMass chess team went to Atlanta to play in the Pan-American Intercollegiate Championship. The result was their best finish in years, as they placed 29th overall and tied for first in their section. The sections were based on pre-tournament ratings, with thirteen schools in the "1600" section. UMass defeated Northwestern, Penn State, DuPage, and Georgia Tech; drew with UConn; and lost to Duquesne, Ohio State, and Drake. Top scorer for UMass was freshman Walter Gibson, with five wins, two losses, and one draw. Also on the team were Russ Gouveia (4½-3½), Jim Lane, and Marty Laine (each 4-4).

The UMass chess club, sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council, will hold its first meeting of the semester Tuesday, Feb. 5, in Room 904-908 of the Campus Center. Students and non-students are invited to a "get-acquainted" speed tournament, starting at 7:30 p.m., to be played at ten seconds per move. There is no fee, and club membership is not required.

Bullets led by Porter sink Celts

BOSTON (AP) - Young Kevin Porter sparked a third-period explosion as the Capital Bullets came back to completely disorganize the Boston Celtics Sunday in rolling to a 112-99 National Basketball Association victory.

Porter, getting a chance to play while veteran Archie Clark rested a sore elbow, scored 15 of his 23 points in the third period of the nationally-televised game at Boston Garden.

Trailing 52-48 at the half, the Bullets outscored the Celtics 36-20 in the third quarter and were in command the rest of the way. At one stage, Capital scored 13 straight points and outscored Boston 21-4 in just over five minutes of action.

Porter got plenty of help from backcourt mate Phil Chenier, who hit for 29 points, and big Elvin Hayes, who had 25. Mike Riordan contributed 20, mostly with his long bombs.

The Celtics jumped to a 25-19 first period lead on the shooting of Jo Jo White and John Havilcek. They managed to cling to the advantage, and widen the margin to nine points midway through the second period before the Bullets began their comeback.

Porter, a second-year player from St. Francis, Pa., stole the ball from Boston's Don Chaney and went in all alone to put the Bullets in front to stay 59-48, just 4:17 into the third period. Then the Bullets applied all-out pressure, forcing Boston to miss many easy shots and also throw the ball away.

Glee for the Minutemen skaters is the order of the moment during Friday's win over Boston State College. UMass will be hard-pressed in their next outing at Vermont, Wednesday night.

UMass women take a pair in basketball

By LINDA MACKLER

Thanks to a superb defense, the UMass women squeezed by Northeastern University 45-37 in their home gym Saturday afternoon. The junior varsity team won by the same margin in a 43-35 contest.

The varsity team were evenly matched. The lead changed with nearly every basket. Northeastern and UMass had the same problem; they could not run their offensive patterns. Each team had an effective 1-3-1 defense which protected the corners and the baselines, and the offense seemed unable to move the ball around it.

However, coach Jane Farr of UMass felt, "The team was tested for the first time. hey showed good teamwork and proved they could come through under pressure." The best example of this was Chris Basile. Late in the second quarter, Pat Glispin injured her ankle. The 5'8" center was already having trouble facing the six foot April Arturi from Northeastern. Even so, Pat was second high scorer with 12 points and top rebounder with five. Fortunately Chris was able to come off the bench and provide performance, grabbing five rebounds.

Nancy O'Neil, a varsity hopeful, put in a good all-around game. Nancy was outstanding both offensively and defensively with 20 points and 14 rebounds. J.V. Coach Ellen Greaves was very happy with the game. She stated, "We kept them from their favorite spot - the outside. The turning point of the game was that we kept our cool and were able to break their press."

Sachon ties record as...

Wrestlers edge Coast Guard

By JOHN BOCK

The Coast Guard would do well to trade in their "Always Ready" motto for the Postal Services "Neither snow, nor rain, nor gloom of night..." refrain, because they braved the elements to come to Amherst and give the Minutemen grapplers a run for the money before finally bowing, 23-17.

UMass was never behind in the scoring. At 118 pounds Minuteman Peter Sachon decked his Coast Guard opponent in 23 seconds, tying a UMass record held by former heavyweight Carl Dambman, Larry Reynolds caught Coast Guard's George Long in a five point move right off the first whistle and looked like he might get the fall but ended up settling for a tie as Long fough back from the 5-0 deficit. A point riding time in his favor clinced the tie for the Bear at that class.

Dick Muri suffered severe stomach pains during his bout with the Bear's Jeff Steuer but managed to outlast him, 10-6. Two timely takedowns helped Muri to win it. The Bears got on the scoreboard with their first win at 142 as Bill Parker bested Doug LeMire 12-8, by virtue of a reversal and near fall. Parker managed to suck LeMire's knee in and perform a Peterson roll good for a two and two.

Minuteman Russell Chateauneuf moved up to 150 and dropped a 9-7 decision to Glenn Burkherst. Burkherst managed most of the takedowns but Chateauneuf picked up the reversals and near falls. With ten seconds on the clock Chateauneuf took the Guardsman down but couldn't get any back points.

The 158 pound bout saw UMass' Cliff Blom beat previously unbeaten Dave Wygant, 10-8. Blom jumped out to a big lead with two takedowns but suddenly found himself down by two with ten seconds on the clock. He reversed Wygant and caught him on his back and won it. Blom showed a mastery at takedowns from an open position but was outmuscled when he locked up.

Captain Steve Benson boosted his record to 10-2 with a pin over the Bear's Stan Zdun at 3?45 in the second period. Benson was somewhat lethargic in the first period but managed to shake it and go to work in the second where he caught Zdun asleep and clamped him. This put UMass in the lead 20-8. That lead was almost gobbled up as Coast Guard got a pin in the 177 pound bout. Bob Connell pinned UMass' Bob Spaulding in the second period as Spaulding tried to standing switch.

Guardsman George Capacci added another three for the Bears with a 6-2 win over Minuteman Robin Osborne at 190 pounds. In the Heavyweight bout Dennis Fenton showed superiority on his feet as he beat Jim Murray of Coast Guard, 10-7. Fenton managed four takedowns to Murray's one, but couldn't ride him that well. Fenton is 7-3 on the year.

PIN POINTS The win over Coast Guard should definitely move UMass to the no. 3 spot in New England...

Hodge leads B's over Pens

BOSTON (AP) - Veteran right wing Ken Hodge scored his 34th, 35th and 36th goals of the season Sunday night in powering the Boston Bruins to a 5-4 National Hockey League victory over the Pittsburgh Penguins.

Hodge scored in each of the three periods as the Bruins extendedtheir long Boston Garden hex over the Penguins. Since being blanked 1-0 by goalie Les Binkley Jan. 28, 1968, Boston has compiled a 17-0-2 record at home against Pittsburgh.

Still playing without injured Bobby Orr, the Bruins were held to a 2-2 standoff until Hodge connected on a 50-foot slip shot to put his mates in front to stay at 5:48 of the second period.

Don Marcotte made it 4-2 with his 14th goal from a scramble late in the middle session before Hodge completed the fourth "hat trick" of his NHL career with his third goal on a wrist shot at 1:45 of the finale.

Steve Mayfield looks awestruck as Al Skinner leaps between two Niagara Purple Eagles to score two of his twenty-one points in Saturday night's UMass triumph. Will the Minutemen make another trip to the NIT or will they accept a bid to the NCAA tournament? Place your guess.

Skinner and company make Niagara fall

By EARLE BARROLL

Phase I of UMass' latest three part search for the post season tournament of its choice took care of two immediately pressing issues in an evening's outting Saturday night at the Cage and the usual 4200 plus. In the process of sending Niagara back to upper-state New York a decided 76-64 victim, the Minutemen not only kept their NCAA hopes above a glimmer, but also pumped some vigor into the NIT bid if the former doesn't come.

"I'd have to rank UMass with Providence and South Carolina of the teams we've played," said Niagara coach Frank Layden who just happens to be a member of the NIT committee. "I wouldn't want to argue about those three. I'm very impressed with UMass." In essence this was the type of performance that left a good feeling in the minds of those who filed out in the end.

In a word Layden's crew was taken by the basic of basketball fundamentals, that being execution. "A typical Leaman-coached performance," was the way he put it. "They just executed so well." Actually Niagara was into execution for quite a while, but in the final analysis, "I think the thing that helped UMass was their continuity," explained Layden

Translated: Offense, defense, shooting (55 per cent), passing and rebounding (34-26). The weakest link for UMass was strong and Niagara in turn could not sustain a counter for this gamut.

"This game couldn't have come at a better time for us," said Jack Leaman. "We had been struggling for a while and we needed this type of performance with Boston College and Connecticut coming up this week". These two of course are Phases II and III or if you will, Armageddon city.

The heavies for the Minutemen were many. Al Skinner rescued himself from his recent douldrums with 21 points, 13 rebounds and seven assists, including many patented gyrations we'll get to later. Rick Pitino (11 assists) and Bill Endicott (16 pts) were in the opinion of Leaman "outstanding." Peter Trow (11) had something to do with the ineffectiveness of Niagara's super-soph Andy Walker (20). And then there was one Greg Duarte.

"This was Greg's best performance against a good team for us," lauded Leaman. Duarte entered when it was tied at 23-all and everything was pointing to raggedness. From then on he was six for six from the field and had his inmate playground stuff under control. "This is the type of game that he's capable of," added Leaman. Said Du: "It was nothing but a happening."

Not that the Minutemen had an easy time of this happening mind you. It was 29-all when Niagara could answer only a mere once the following: John Murphy (12) jumpers, the second from a Skinner flying half-gainer assist. A Duarte layup that started from the top of the key. And a Jim Burke steal for another layup. 8-2. 37-31 at the half.

"It's one thing to get the lead," said Layden of this run. "It's an entirely different thing to know what to do with it and UMass certainly knew what to do with it." Concurring with Layden, the Minutemen allowed Niagara no closer than four (45-41) early in the second half. At this juncture a 19-8 spurt (64-49) left the visitors with no recourse. "For us to come back," said Layden "we would have had to be perfect being that we were in a system."

One of the peculiarities of this game that caught many an eye was the persistent uniform grabbing of Niagara's captain Cleve Royster. And save for the fact that UMass doesn't use mesh outfits Skinner and Duarte might have been inappropriately attired for public viewing. "It wasn't the normal under the basket tactics," smiled Skinner.

"He must have thought I was the roadrunner," brayed Duarte. "I went by him so fast on the break, he heard the 'beep, beep' and had to grab on."

For the Minutemen, now 14-2 (Niagara is 9-8) the emphasis is on winning and winning and winning. "At the very least," said Leaman, "we can only lose one more game if we want to go to the NCAA."

Merchant and Lyons ignite Minutemen over Boston State

By BILL BALLOU

There were 10 seconds left in the second period, Boston State led 4-2, and the PA announcer was just about to cry "Abandon Ship" when freshman Mike Merchant brought the puck down ice one last time.

He brought it into the State zone, backed a BS defenseman in on goalie Doug Brooks, used him as a screen, and zipped a 25-footer past Brooks' stick side, with five seconds left.

State still led 4-3 with a period to go, but the season suddenly looked a little longer.

The final 6-5 win for UMass in this, the most important game of the season so far, made the year a lot longer and put the Minutemen back into the thick of the Division II playoff fight.

Merchant hit for another goal, and sophomore Jim Lyons two in the final period, which also marked the end of Chick Rheault's goaltending slump.

Rheault had been bad against BU in the two periods he played, and while the first 40 minutes of this one weren't horrifying, he still wasn't the Rheault of old. A spectacular third period, especially in the final minutes when Boston had a one-man and sometimes two-man advantage, changed that.

"I was getting worried," he said after the game, "That had been four bad periods in a row and I was starting to think about it. It was getting to my mind and that's not good."

His mind should be more at ease after winning that was, despite the score, a tough goaltending battle with Brooks, who played quite well, until his defense broke down and UMass poured in their three third period goals.

The Minutemen had jumped out to an early 1-0 lead on John Muse's short backhander. But Duncan Campbell finished off a three-on-one by hitting a 25-footer from the left side and Paul McCarthy scored a little later to make it 2-1 Boston State after one period.

Then in the second period John Caccamo fired a 20-foot slap shot through Rheault's legs to wind up a two-on-one, giving State a 3-1 lead before Jim Lynch ripped one past Brooks from fairly close in to make it 3-2.

When Paul Fisher came back right after that and scored from a scramble in front of the net to move Boston back out in front by two, it looked like curtains for the UMass.

But Merchant hit on his key goal, and set the stage for a crazy third period that saw Brooks pulled from his net with 2:45 left in the game, four goals scored and two disallowed, and the first and only two penalties of the night (both on UMass) called.

Lyons, Merchant, and Lyons again put the Minutemen up 6-4, before Fisher scored again to make it 6-5. State had a goal disallowed when the puck was gloved from one forward to another, and Tim Howes had an empty-net goal called back when Jim Lyons was whistled off for hooking just before the goal.

BS had some good chances at the end, but Rheault held them off and UMass improved its Divisional record to 7-4.

INCIDENTALLY: The Minutemen are 7-7 overall...Vermont lost to Army, 4-1, over the weekend. Army's now a Division II team.

Lions "pommel" gymnmen

By WALT POWERS

There are two axioms about long winning streaks. A: They will eventually end, and B: they will resort to the most illogical means possible to perpetuate themselves. It was to the dismay of about 3500 partisans at Curry Hicks Cage that Saturday's UMass-Penn State Gymnastics meet was a demonstration of axiom B.

It mattered little that UMass rolled up its biggest point total of the season, or that nationally-ranked Penn State did not perform to their potential. There was no reason to expect that breaks by two UMass all-arounds would lead to a collapse in their strongest event, or that UMass would outscore a group of EIGL (Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League) finalists in what had been UMass' weakest event, or that defending Eastern League vaulting champion Jim Kruest would finish behind three Minutemen in that event. None of these things "should" have happened, and of course, since Penn State had beaten UMass nine straight times they did.

Penn State, last year's NCAA runnerups, led from the start, but showed clear superiority on only the pommel horse and parallel bars. A squad including three EIGL finalists opened with a 26.90-26.15 win in the floor exercises. Uncharacteristic lapses on the pommel horse then gave the Lions a nearly insurmountable lead.

In this event veteran all-arounds Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan turned in their lowest scores of the afternoon. "Good gymnasts like Gene and Steve are bound to break sometime, but I never imagined it happening on the same event", said coach Tom Dunn, "I was also surprised to see Tim Murphy out there." he added. Murphy, who won the event, had been injured, and wasn't even listed in the program.

Though State led, 53.40-50.95 with UMass' weakest events still to come, UMass was by no means finished.

Bill Bruillet's smooth execution on the still rings earned him an 8.8 and brought the crowd to life. In quick succession, Pete Lusk (8.85) and Gene Whelan (8.8) led the Minutemen to a surprising 26.45-all tie. The streak continued into the vaulting, where Scuderi, Bruillet, and Jay Thomsen hit 8.3, 8.7, and 9.0 consecutively. The crowd erupted and the UMass bench emptied after a charging, somersaulting handsrping vault by Jack Fabricante-gave him a 9.25. Gene Whelan followed with a 9.2 and UMass had its only victory of the meet.

It was their last gasp. Displaying awesome depth and technique, State calmly walked away with the final two events. Seven of their last nine scores were above 9.00; Steve Scuderi and Gene Whelan on the high bar were the only Minutemen to turn the trick. Though the scores given to Tim Beasley and Bill Bruillet drew boos from the disappointed crowd, neither side had any complaints against the judging.

The final score, 162.00-157.80, was the closest in the ten-year history of the series, and the crowd was one of the largest ever to attend a home meet.

Former Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall told a crowd of 500 in the Student Union Ballroom last night the energy crisis is not short term. He also said President Richard Nixon is "crippled" by Watergate and unwilling to impose gas rationing.

Udall: energy joyride over

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Stewart Udall, former Secretary of the Interior under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, said last night "the energy crisis is not at the gas pumps."

"What we are having in the United States today is child's play. We may have countries — yes, whole countries — bankrupt."

Udall proposed a re-orientation of American life, from new lifestyles to the end of all-electric homes to the building of bicycle paths and efficient mass transit systems to the exploration of new energy sources. He spoke of the automobile industry as one of the main causes of today's energy problems.

"The United States automobile culture has been the principal of our modern civilization," he said, adding, "the joyride is now over.

Udall, speaking to over too people in the Student Union Ballroom, spoke also about the "massive waste" of energy in architectural planning in this country.

"The new Sears building in Chicago and the World Trade buildings in New York are close to large boxes, they have no windows, they just plug in," he said.

"These three buildings, Udall said, take as much power as the entire city of Schenectady, New York." "We should just declare tham national monuments and leave them there," he said.

Udall proclaimed his support for gasoline rationing saying that "we should do it right now the sooner the better."

Meanwhile in a Collegian interview Udall said that President Nixon is afraid of gas rationing.

"He still has a hangup from World War II about rationing," Udall said. "Nixon thinks that rationing is communist or un-American," he said.

"The president is in trouble, he's crippled," Udall said. "He does not want to take the political risks of telling us we have to change," he said.

Udall offered some solutions to the problem.

"We should move quickly away from gas-guzzling cars and build bikeways and walkways in our inner cities," he said. "Free transportation should be provided, and above all we must bring the railroads back," he said.

On the same note he said: "The truckers are behaving like spoiled children — and it is to be expected, they are being sucked into this thing like the rest of us."

"The railroad has a truck beat six to one in efficiency," Udall said, "and eight to one in terms of pollution."

Nevertheless there is a future for trucking according to Udall. "Trucks are very efficient for short hauls," he said. As an afterthought he added, "If we have to nationalize some trucking — yes let's do it."

Udall repeatedly warned against belief in people who call the current crisis "short-termed" or non-existent.

"In my view, he said, the enrgy crisis is real because we have overshot — we have come to the end of what historians will call the 'Petroleum Age'."

"Some people, he said, think the current crisis is phoney. Others believe it is only temporary. I would suggest, he said, that you not put too much thought in these theses."

Udall answered several questions from the audience. One student suggested that since foreign countries are controlling the oil resources and since the United States depends on oil to such a great extent why not try armed intervention to get our oil.

"I would hope we learned something in Viet Nam," Udall said. "It would be an outrage," he answered. In answering another question Udall cautioned the audience about the use of nuclear power. "We need to go slow on nuclear power," he said.

"We're moving into a whole new period of history where we're going to learn self-restraint and a sense of limits," he said.

Nixon ordered to appear in L.A. court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Nixon was officially subpoenaed yesterday to testify in the Ellsberg burglary case.

The subpoena, requested by former presidential aide John D. Ehrlichman, ordered the President to appear in a Los Angeles courtroom Feb. 25 and again April 15.

Superior Court Judge Gordon Ringer, who ruled that the President is a material witness in the trial of Ehrlichman and two other former White House aides, signed the subpoena at 2:10 p.m. PDT. It was the first time in U.S. history that a state court judge had ordered personal testimony by a president.

Ringer took six days to finalize the legal form of the subpoena after agreeing last Tuesday to requests by Ehrlichman's attorneys.

The White House has said the President will resist the subpoena on consitutional grounds. The request for his appearance was granted to Ehrlichman, Nixon's former top domestic adviser, who wants the President to testify in his defense.

The judge's clerks said the subpoena will be sent by registered mail to the Washington, D.C., Superior Court, which may hold a separate hearing into the matter of Nixon's materiality as a witness.

Under the code covering out-of-state witnesses, the Washington judge to whom the case is assigned has the option of either ordering the subpoena honored or squashing it.

Ringer said he will be available to hear arguments in Los Angeles if the President chooses to challenge his order.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren has said Nixon's attorneys "will recommend to the President that he respectfully decline to appear...on constitutional grounds" and that Nixon will heed the advice.

Nixon is sought for testimony about the formation of the secret White House investigative unit known as The Plumbers. Ehrlichman, G. Gordon Liddy and David Young, all plumbers' unit members, are charged with burglary and conspiracy in the 1971 break-in at the Beverly Hills office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist. Ehrlichman is additionally charged with perjury.

Ringer, in granting the request last Tuesday, said he is convinced the President is a material witness in the case. Nixon has publicly acknowledged that he approved formation of the plumbers and assigned them to plug leaks of secret information such as the Pentagon Papers.

Later, the county issued two checks to cover the President's plane fare and other expenses during the two appearances as a witness. The checks, made out to Richard M. Nixon, were issued in the amounts of $405.24 and $385.24. The difference in figures was not explained.

The checks will be enclosed with the subpoena when it is mailed, probably Tuesday morning.

Nixon proposes $304.4b budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon sent to Congress Monday a $304.4 billion budget designed to balance the economy between the pitfalls of persistent inflation and rising unemployment.

As he signed the document at the White House before sending it to the Capitol, Nixon said the budget would "not add to the fires of inflation."

Truck strike spreads

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Violence, food shortages and more layoffs were reported yesterday in the spreading shutdown of independent truckers. National Guardsmen were on duty in three states to try to stop further violence in the five-day-old protest.

The effects of the strike spread from state to state. Shootings, tire slashings and other violence were reported in more than a dozen areas.

Schools in several states closed because they couldn't get gasoline to run the buses or didn't have heating oil; meat packing plants sent their employes home; produce markets said they were running out of fresh fruits and vegetables.

New England truckers were reported joining the national strike. Story, page 8.

Gov. William Milliken of Michigan joined the governors of Ohio and Pennsylvania in calling up the National Guard. Connecticut Gov. Thomas Meskill and New Hampshire Gov. Meldrin Thomson ordered the guard on stand-by alert, while authorities in several other areas provided police escorts for drivers who wanted to keep rolling.

Federal and state officials and truckers' representatives continued meetings in Washington, D.C., to try to end the shutdown that began last Thursday. The key issue is the drivers' demand for a rollback of diesel fuel prices.

The Nixon administration, meanwhile, asked Congress to allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to speed approval of new regulations that would allow drivers to pass increased fuel costs on to the shipping companies they work for.

Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania, who called the meetings in the capital, said 50,000 workers in his state already had been laid off because of the truckers' shutdown and predicted the total could hit 350,000 by the end of the week if the protests continue. More than 9,000 persons in Ohio also were laid off because of the shutdown.

A spokesman for the American Meat Institute said yesterday afternoon that slaughter was down sharply because of the truckers' shutdown.

Folk dancing: fun for anyone

By ROBERTA MARTONE

If you ever walk through the Student Union on a Monday night around 8 p.m., you'll be able to catch a little free entertainment. International Folk Dancing is the entertainment and anyone can join in the fun.

According to Dana Beth, a regular "member" of the dancers since last September, the group began because of a common interest.

"Anyone is welcome, and anyone who comes takes as much initiative as he or she wants," Ms. Beth said.

The gathering of dancers, which is loosely organized, is not really a club. But, there is a possibility that they may become an RSO group in the future, Ms. Beth continued.

The "group" began in the Fall of 1972. Ms. Beth added that last semester was conducted more as a regular class and offered one credit. It was taught by Ralph Jones of the UMass Math department.

The dancers presently meet every Monday night in the Cape Cod Lounge. There are also Friday night meetings at Smith College. Ms. Beth said the Friday meetings are usually larger than the meetings on Monday nights, and cater more to the five college area.

These Friday meetings offer a better opportunity to learn the dances. There are usually a few people at these meetings who do the actual teaching, said Ms Beth.

"Local residents of Amherst tend to frequent the Friday night meetings, while the gatherings on Monday night usually attract people of the UMass community," she continued.

The more advanced members of the group give performances which are usually performed at high schools or churches in the area. "Most of the performances aren't for admission. They're just for fun." The dancers will be giving a publicity performance at the Mountain Farms Mall on February 6 and 8.

The International Folk Dances range from Balkan to Israeli, to dances originating in Eastern and Northern Europe.

According to Ms. Beth, the dances are "picked up' by people who frequent professional workshops offered in International Folk Dance. "These people then come to us with their ideas," she explained.

P-10 Seminar to observe politics

The 1974 election year will not escape the careful observation of at least one small group of students on the UMass campus.

The students are undergraduates enrolled in the Political Campaigns Seminar in Project 10, the University's experimental college located in Southwest.

Seminar instructor Kenneth Mosakowski, who has worked in a dozen political campaigns, expects that "each participant will become directly involved in some form of political action between now and semester's end — whether it be canvassing in the Dukakis for Governor drive or lobbying Congressmen to impeach President Nixon."

The seminar will also feature appearances by well-known political figures. Mosakowski is inviting a number of candidates for state-wide office, as well as local politicians, to speak to the group.

When the seminar first met during spring semester last year, a number of local political figures spoke before the group: State Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst); Frances Crowe, regional coordinator for the American Friends Service Committee; George Scheurer, then a candidate for Selectman in Amherst; artist-revisionist historian John Gnatek; Robert Weiner, former national voter registration coordinator for the Democratic Party; John Lawlor, a delegate to the 1972 Democratic National Convention; and longtime political activist Henry Bubar.

Students interested in enrolling in the seminar prior to its first meeting on Thursday may obtain further information in the Project 10 Academic Office in Pierpont House, 545-0871.

Prof. Nerbonne stars in Tang commercial

By KATHY FRASER
MDC Staff

There is a television performer hidden among the faculty of the Speech Dept. Prof. G. Patrick Nerbonne and his family are the stars of a Tang commercial presently being shown on television.

Prof. Nerbonne and his wife were first contacted last June by a New York talent agent, J. Michael Bloom, and asked to do a commercial. Bloom, who had attended graduate school with Nerbonne, told the Nerbonne's that General Foods wanted an elementary school teacher and her family from a small New England town to do a Tang commercial.

Judy Nerbonne, a first grade teacher in Shutesbury, agreed since her family does drink Tang, she was flown to New York for a two-day interview.

During the last week of August, the Nerbonne's were informed that they were chosen to do the commercial. A 40-man crew was subsequently flown during the second week of September to Amherst.

The crew first filmed scenes of the Shutesbury elementary school then later presented a program on advertising to the students.

It was determined that the kitchen in the Nerbonne's home was too small, so real estate agencies were contacted to obtain a larger more suitable kitchen. One was finally found in the 200-year-old home of Robert Davis, on the staff of the Industrial Engineering Dept.

A full day was then spent filming Prof. Nerbonne and his family eating breakfast and drinking Tang to complete the 15 second commercial, which was not shown until late December.

Prof. Nerbonne said they did the commercial "just for the fun of it," although they were paid for the four days it took to shoot the commercial. In addition, they will receive a percentage each time the commercial is aired.

The amount of money spent on producing the commercial most impressed Nerbonne, and "how this cost is later passed on to the consumer, which is me," he said.

Printing no picnic

Putting out a college newspaper isn't always a picnic, as two news items illustrated last week:

Publication of the Canisius College students newspaper at Buffalo New York was suspended last week after the editors printed a nude drawing of the college President, Dr. Michael D. Langan.

The two students responsible were to be charged with violating a school regulation.

And Boston State College's newspaper, "The Lookout", continues to be distributed free on that campus, but dean of students James Morris won't allow it to charge circulation fees or to use college funds and facilities.

The new editors of the Collegian hope to avoid such unfortunate situations, but remember that they are not free from such censorship should they step out of line.

How to vote in Amherst

By SHARON HUGHES
MDC Staff

21 is still a golden age for UMies. Sure they can drink and vote at 18, but most students are bound by University rules to live in a dorm until they reach the old age of majority. And, many times the anticipation of moving off campus exceeds the pleasure of graduating.

But over a 1,000 students who moved off campus last semester face an unpleasant surprise — they've been dropped from the town voting list because they used a campus address when they registered for the last election.

State law requires all registered voters to verify their local residence each year. Many towns, including Amherst, relieve the burden on individual by mailing a census form to each residence. Returning the questionnaire to the Town Clerk's office automatically verifies residence and voting rights.

Students who registered to vote in Amherst in using a dormitory, fraternity or other on campus address do not receive a town census form in the mail. Verification of continued residence of on-campus students is being handled for the town by the University Housing office.

However, students who moved off campus after they registered will not be verified as town residents by the University. Instead, they must complete the census form and return it to the town hall.

Any town resident may check their voting status in Amherst by referring to the official voting list posted on the first floor of the Student Union next to the check cashing windows. Voters who are not listed may consult the "drop list", available at the Attorney for Students office on the second floor of the Student Union and the Collegian office. "Dropped" voters must re-register at the Town Clerk's office.

Town Clerk Estelle M. Matusko said that of 1500 students who gave a campus address when registering in 1973, only 413 still remain on the voting list. So the town is trying to locate the "missing" voters and re-register them as well as reaching the newly turned 18 year old's.

On Jan. 15 a short census form was mailed to every known house and apartment in Amherst with a stamped envelope pre-addressed to the clerk's office. The forms are due immediately according to Matusko and are the first step toward compiling a complete voter list for the town elections in March and state elections in November.

Virtually all Amherst residents have received the form and when it is returned and processed their voter status will remain intact. Blank forms are available at the town hall.

Completion of the census card only verifies a registered voter's status. It does not constitute registration for an unregistered voter.

If you're 18 years of age and a resident of Amherst (permanent or temporary) you're eligible to register. Registration is conducted at the Town Hall from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Proof of age, but not residency is required.

Persons registered elsewhere in Massachusetts who wish to vote in Amherst can make arrangements to do so through the town clerk's office. The Clerk will contact the person's home town and she-he will be removed from that town's voting list.

In the past special registration sessions have been held on campus by the Board of Registrars. Before they appear, however, they require that 10 registered voters sign a petition stating they know of 10 non-registered voters.

Before the end of the semster, the Town will send drop notices to persons whose residency has not been verified. Those persons must re-register at the Town Hall. Last year, 2,500 drop notices were sent out, according to town statistics.

Amherst records about 12,000 registered voters, a quarter of whom are students.

Town elections are coming up in April, with the possibility of a primary in March. The following seats need to be filled:

—Selectmen - two opening; three year term

—Town Moderator - one opening; one year term

—School Committee - two openings; three year term

—Jones Library Trustee; two openings; three year term

—Amherst Housing Authority; one opening; five year term

—Redevelopment Authority; one opening; five year term and one opening; two year term

—Elector under Oliver Smith Will (a local charity) - one opening; one year term

The calendar for the 1974 election is:

Feb. 13 - last day to register to vote in primary

Feb. 15 - last day to submit nomination papers

Feb. 22 - last day to file town officer nomination papers with clerk

Feb. 25 - primary call (if necessary)

March 5 - primary election (if necessary)

March 8 - last day to file town meeting nomination papers

March 20 - last day to register to vote for town election

March 25 - closing of annual Town Meeting warrant

April 8 - signing of warrant by selectmen, posting in precincts

April 9 - Town Election in seven precincts 12-8 p.m.

May 6 - Annual Town Meeting - Amherst Regional High School

May 8, 13, 15 - adjourned sessions of annual meeting (if necessary)

The last opportunity to file applications for absentee ballots is 12 p.m. on the day before the primary and the election.

Precinct polling locations are:

Precinct I - North Amherst Hall opposite Watroba's

Precinct II - Amherst Fire Station, next door to Louis Food

Precinct III - Odd Fellow's Hall, Kellogg Ave., by Post Office

Precinct IV - Masonic Hall, Main St.

Precinct V - Fort River School, new elementary school on S. East St.

Precinct VI - Munson Memorial Library, So. Amherst Common

Judge 'sitting' on oath case

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

A Middlesex County Superior Court Judge said yesterday that he will "sit" on the state loyalty oath court case decision involving UMass faculty and staff "until somebody screams for a verdict."

Judge Joseph S. Mitchell acknowledged last August that either the termination of hundreds of UMass personnel refusing to ascribe to the 1949 legislative enactment — or a direct challenge to a U.S. Supreme Court ruling are two "likely possibilities" resulting from his final judgment.

"Just as a practical matter, I don't think it would serve anyone any good to render an opinion as expeditiously as possible," Judge Mitchell told the Collegian.

"And I don't think that I will make a decision unless somebody stirs it up — it will cause a lot of pain for a lot of people."

The case developed in November of 1972 when three faculty members from the UMass-Boston campus filed a class action-suit against university personnel offices of all three University campuses (Amherst, Boston, and Worcester), seeking to bar dismissal of anyone employed between Oct. 29, 1969 and Sept. 21, 1972 who had not taken the oath.

In January of last year, the UMass-Boston plaintiffs, represented by Stephen Oleskey, joined their cause with Atty. William A. Norris of Cummington, legal counsel for 18 faculty and staff members from UMass-Amherst and a group of 33 from Berkshire Community College.

The state decided to combine the separate cases despite Norris' objection. He felt each should be heard separately to assure equal representation for the three groups.

If a verdict is ever issued, it would be appealed by either side, a spokesman for the oath opponents indicated.

Mitchell said he has a legal opinion available, but added that neither the University plaintiffs involved or the state's defense counsel has approached him on the matter.

"I haven't heard a word from both parties, and I don't think I will," Mitchell declared.

"It's obvious that nobody wants a decision. Nobody wanted to bring this issue out in the first place. Who wants to see professors thrown out of college."

Mitchell told the Collegian that he could make his opinion public "if the press wants it to come to this," but warned "it really doesn't serve the public or the press any good to issue such an opinion."

Although he was supposed to hand down a verdict last spring, Mitchell delayed and finally postponed the decision over the summer months to allow the administration, faculty and staff members to return from their vacations.

However, the oath issue seemed to fade out of everybody's mind.

A favorable verdict in behalf of those who have refused to sign the loyalty oath could be challenging a Nixon Supreme Court decision made five years ago which reversed the ruling of a Massachusetts District Court that a loyalty oath for teachers was unconstitutional, Mitchell has said.

"It's awfully difficult to in actuality overrule something the highest court in the land has upheld as constitutional," he told the Collegian in August.

"Since the constitutionality of public employees taking the oath is now being considered — and teachers are public employees — the possibility of overruling a Supreme Court decision exists."

Mitchell has maintained that a verdict upholding the oath as constitutional would "only create an emotional situation, especially if it leads to the termination of employees."

If a verdict is ever issued, it would be appealed by either side, a spokesman for the oath opponents indicated.

Attorney seeks oath verdict

By MARK VOGLER

An attorney for UMass plaintiffs involved in the state loyalty oath court case said yesterday that "judicial process shouldn't be blocked" and that a verdict should be issued.

Atty. William A. Norris of Cummington told the Collegian that Judge Joseph S. Mitchell should not sit on his legal opinion, and added that he would consult his clients as to whether the judge's final decision should be sought.

Norris is representing 18 faculty and staff members from UMass-Amherst and a group of 33 from Berkshire Community College who refused to ascribe to the state's loyalty oath for employees during the Fall of 1972.

Although contested by Norris, the state merged the two court cases with a class action suit filed by three UMass-Boston professors in November of 1972. Stephen Olesky of Boston, counsel for the three, could not be reached by the Collegian last night.

"One judge shouldn't take it upon himself to stop judicial process. We ought to have a decision," Norris said.

"The loyalty oath is invalid legally and ought to get knocked off the books."

Public Transportation Committee to consider format of open meeting

The Amherst Committee on Public Transportation will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Board Room of Amherst Town Hall (second floor).

The main item on tonight's agenda will be final consideration of the content and format of an open meeting on the feasibility of public transportation, to be held on February 14th in the auditorium of Amherst Junior High School. That meeting will be carried live on local cable television (Channel 8) and radio station WMUA (91.1 FM).

Tonight the full Committee must work out a detailed schedule for the February 14th meeting, based on recommendations of two subcommittees formed last December to handle preparations for the event.

Representatives of some 35 local college and civic organizations have been invited to the February 14th meeting to offer statement on their views of the need for public transportation in Amherst. To date, 10 groups have indicated an interest in presenting statements. Sierra Club, Valley Tenants Association, Graduate Environmental Engineering Association, League of Women Voters, Amherst Redevelopment Authority, UMass Transportation Council, UMass Student Government Association, Mass. State Employees Association, Long Plain Nature Center, and Amherst Environmental Concerns Committee.

Underground nuclear plant?

The Montague Nuclear Concerns Group (MNCG) has decided to petition Northeast Utilities to consider building its proposed nuclear plant udderground.

The petition will ask that the plant be built underground that there be a guarantee of no radiation releases, and that Northeast Utilities would help fund a third party to monitor radiation systems for Montague and surround areas.

Robert L. May, chairperson of MNCG said the petitions will be circulating by mid-week. May expressed hope that Montague selectmen would see fit to endorse the petitions.

On the other hand, if Northeast Utilities completely disregards the MNCG petition, May suggested that some of his members would feel it is necessary to move toward intervention during the upcoming hearings.

What are the truckers demanding?

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

What are the striking independent truckers demanding?

It depends on which one of them is speaking.

Lower fuel prices. Higher frieght rates. Higher speed limits. Higher weight limits. Adequate fuel supplies at truck stops. Guarantees that increased costs can be passed to the consumer.

That is a consensus of the various demands over which thousands of independent truckers have idled their rigs in at least 30 states. Here is a compilation of what they want:

FUEL PRICES - They say diesel fuel has risen from just over 25 cents a gallon to nearly 50 cents in the past year. They want the price rolled back to the low 30s, and a ceiling placed there. Energy chief William E. Simon and others are reluctant to favor such a move. Since fuel prices reflect the cost of oil, a rollback in diesel presumably would mean a rollback in crude oil prices.

FREIGHT RATES - Some truckers' organizations want a 14 per cent hike in the money truckers get for their cargo. Others are asking that freight rates rise on a dollar-for-dollar basis as costs of running a truck rise. The Interstate Commerce Commission has granted a four per cent increase for Midwestern and Eastern steel and iron haulers, and officials have promised other increases.

SPEED LIMITS - All truckers have protested the 55 mile per hour speed limit which is soon to be nationwide. They claim, although a number of experts say it isn't so, that their big rigs are more efficient at higher speeds. They want a 65 m.p.h. limit. Most government officials seem inclined not to budge on this demand.

WEIGHT LIMITS - Current laws generally limit truckers to an 80,000-pound load. But the truckers, who get more money if they haul more cargo, say this must be raised if they're forced to go slower. Some state officials say higher weight limits will tear up highways.

FUEL SUPPLIES - Truckers say they have to stop at every other truck stop to keep rolling because most dealers have limited diesel supplies and are limiting purchases. Simon has pledged to increase diesel fuel supplies to alleviate this problem.

Nixon releases fiscal budget

WASHINGTON (AP) - Here are the highlights of President Nixon's fiscal 1975 budget released Monday by the White House:

SPENDING - The administration proposes to spend $304.4 billion, the first $300-billion-plus federal budget in history. It is an increase of $29.8 billion over fiscal 1974, which ends June 30.

REVENUES - The government estimates it will take in $295 billion in taxes and other revenues, including about $2 billion from a windfall profits tax on the oil industry. The deficit will be $9.4 billion.

BUDGET PHILOSOPHY - Nixon said the budget provides moderate economic stimulus and promised to increase spending to prevent a recession. The increased spending is largely in uncontrollables, such as Social Security and welfare.

DEFENSE - Defense spending will rise $6.3 billion to a total of $85.8 billion, largest in history. Other defense-related expenditures, including funds for the Atomic Energy Commission, ring defense outlays to $87.7 billion. Most of the money goes for increased wages and prices.

ENERGY - Nixon is proposing $1.5 billion for energy research and development, primarily for development of a nuclear breeder reactor and for programs for making coal a better energy source.

INCOME SECURITY - For the first time, federal expenditures to support the income of needy Americans, through Social Security, public assistancs and other programs, tops $100 billion. It is an increase of $15 billion over the previous fiscal year. A large part of the boost is in Social Security benefit increases.

TAXES - Except for the windfall profits tax, the budget proposes no new levies.

HEALTH - Spending for health programs totals $26 billion, up $3 billion, most of that in Medicare spending. The administration plans to offer a national health insurance program this year, but federal funds for it would not begin until 1977, assuming it's approved by Congress.

INDOCHINA RECONSTRUCTION - The budget calls for $648 million for economic aid to Indochina.

Nixon budget highlighted

More defense funds

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress yesterday for authority to spend more money on defense in fiscal 1975 than in any single year of World War II.

The $85.8-billion spending request for the coming fiscal year tops 1945, when the $79.9 billion spent was the largest ever for America's non-nuclear armed forces.

The budget message notes that from 1968 to 1975, the size of U.S. military forces will drop from 3.5 million to 2.1 million men, but the cost of paying those soldiers rises from $19 billion to $24 billion.

Energy research

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Old King Coal may yet regain his throne. President Nixon's proposed budget for fiscal 1975 includes a $461 million "special allowance" to speed up energy research, much of it devoted to reforming dirty old King Coal into a clean-living citizen of the new environmental society.

Coal may have to share that throne, however, with a newcomer -atomic power, due for an even larger portion of research money in the new budget.

In transmitting the budget to Congress Monday, Nixon said it includes Project Independence.

Decreased oil profits urged

by EDMOND LeBRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's administration urged Congress yesterday to enact a tax that would skim off windfall profits from the big current jumps in crude oil prices, but phase out if price levels stabilize in coming years.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz, laying the proposal before the House Ways and Means Committee, took a firm stand, however, against a rollback in present crude oil prices - despite indications from elsewhere in the administration that such a step may be under study.

And Shultz brushed off as outrageous suggestions that the United States might consider nationalizing the oil companies.

Also included in the administration package were proposals to deny U.S. oil producers the depreciation allowance on crude oil produced abroad and to cut back the extent to which payment of taxes to foreign countries may be used to offset U.S. taxes on other foreign-generated income.

The windfall tax, Shultz said under questioning, would not affect one tax consideration important to the oil industry - the right to charge off in a single year the intangible cost of drilling wells.

He said the administration is standing by some earlier proposals relating to minimum tax and accounting losses that could have some impact in certain cases on the use of the intangible drilling cost privilege, but also was proposing direct encouragement of exploration for petroleum through a tax credit.

Shultz told reporters outside the hearing room he has the impression oil prices may already have peaked.

"We have seen signs that some of the very high prices are coming down," he said.

To the committee, he said it was his guess that the day of very high profits by U.S. companies from overseas production are about over.

He said 19 per cent fewer cattle were killed yesterday than one week ago and 23 per cent fewer than on the comparable day last year. Hog slaughter was down 39 per cent from last week, the spokesman said, and sheep slaughter was down 45 per cent over a week ago.

Florida citrus growers also reported problems.

Wade Meredith of the Florida City State Farmers Market estimated that farmers in south Dade County would ship only 10 to 20 per cent of their normal harvest yesterday.

Teamster Union President Frank Fitzsimmons condemned the shutdown.

More than 14,000 auto workers were idled at seven plants in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Ohio as parts deliveries dwindled to a trickle because of the continuing truckers' action. The shutdowns ranged from at least a day to a week.

The protesters are independents, but some company drivers have been staying off the road - sympathy or fear.

It was difficult to measure the exact impact of the shutdown. There are an estimated 100,000 driver-owners, but no one knew just how many were off the road. Authorities in more than half the 50 states said traffic was down and truck stops were blockaded.

Fresh violence was reported yesterday in over a dozen states. Most of the incidents involved shootings, tire slashings aad rock or brick throwings. There were only scattered injuries.

Farmers had trouble getting their goods to market and processing plants couldn't get shipments to process. The Department of Agriculture said produce shipments into Philadelphia were off 75 per cent over the weekend.

Republic Steel Corp., officials me yesterday to evaluate the effects of the truckers' shutdown. A spokesman said that "unless there is a drastic change in the situation, it appears there will be substantial additional layoffs...which may run into several thousand in northeastern Ohio."

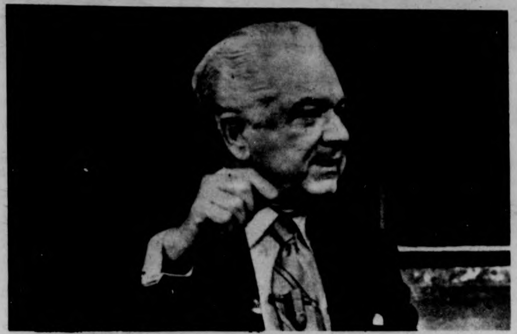
Jaworski seeks more White House material



Special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House acknowledged Monday that the special Watergate prosecutor has asked for more tapes and documents and said the request is under consideration.

"This matter will be discussed in....confidential conversations and communications" between the offices of the White House counsel and the prosecutor very soon, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren told reporters.

Leon Jaworski, the special prosecutor, said Sunday in an interview that he expected a decision Monday on his efforts to gain access to more White House material.

Jaworski was in Houston Monday for an American Bar Association meeting, and his office said there would be no comment on the White House statement.

In other Watergate-related developments:

-The White House distributed a statement by Nixon's chief Watergate lawyer, James D. St. Clair, chastizing Jaworski and his staff for supporting the veracity of John W. Dean III, Nixon's chief Watergate accuser. Nixon has said that he was unaware of any Watergate cover-up until Dean told him March 21. Dean, who was fired as White House counsel, has said that Nixon knew about it before then. Jaworski has said that his prosecutors have no evidence that Dean lied.

-E. Howard Hunt, who pleaded guilty in the Watergate break-in case, asked the U.S. Court of Appeals to reverse his conviction. He said the break-in had "government approval."

-Egil Bud Krogh Jr., who admitted he sent Hunt and three others to break into the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, surrendered to U. S. marshals in Washington to begin serving a six months prison term for violating the civil rights of the psychiatrist.

Warren said that in addition to subpoenaed tapes turned over by the White House to the special prosecutor, presidential aides have provided voluntarily 17 additional tape-recorded conversations and more than 700 documents.

Terrorists blow up bus

BATLEY, England (AP) — Terrorists blew up a busload of British servicemen and their families Monday with a 50-pound bomb that police said ripped the vehicle apart like a can opener, killing 11 persons and wounding 14.

It was the worst terrorist atrocity in Britain since guerillas blew up a paratroopers' mess hall in Aldershot, killing seven persons, in February 1972.

Police and the army say they suspected the blast was work of the Irish Republican Army, battling the British in Northern Ireland. Authorities launched one of Britain's biggest dragnets in an effort to capture the bombers.

The blast hurled bodies onto the expressway and spewed wreckage for 200 yards. The back half of the coach was ripped aprt. The right side was blown open. The roof was curled back.

One survivor ran down the road flagging down cars and trucks so they would not run over the bodies lying on the highway. Thick, freezing fog descended to hamper rescue operations. Ambulances carried casualties and the shaken survivors to hospitals.

The bus was carrying 56 soldiers, airmen and their families returning from furlough to bases around the Catterick military complex in Yorkshire.

Police said the time bomb was concealed in the luggage trunk at the rear of the bus.

The blast killed eight servicemen, most of them believed to be soldiers; a trooper's wife; and two children, a boy and a girl. Of the 14 wounded, one was reported in critical condition.

Police said Cpl. C. Houghton, his wife Linda, and their two children, Robert, 5, and Lee, 2, were among the dead.

Many of the 11,000 soldiers based at Catterick, including Houghton, have served in Northern Ireland, where the army has been operating since sectarian feuding flared in 1969.

Police sources said it centered around Manchester, the northern industrial city where the bus began its journey Sunday night.

Americans prefer Ford to Nixon

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The latest Gallup Poll says 46 percent of Americans surveyed would prefer to have Vice President Gerald Ford serve as president for the remainder of President Nixon's term.

The survey, taken Jan. 18-24, showed 46 percent preferred Ford to Nixon, 32 per cent chose Nixon and 22 per cent expressed no preference.

In the survey, 1,592 adults were asked, "Here is a question about President Richard Nixon and Vice President Gerald Ford: If you had a choice, which man would you rather have as president between now and the next presideetial election in 1976 — Nixon or Ford."

Among Republicans, 57 per cent chose Nixon, 28 per cent chose Ford and 15 per cent said they were undeecided. Eighteen per cent of the Democrats chose Nixon, 55 per cent chose Ford and 27 per cent gave no preference. Nixon was the favorite of 35 per cent of the independents, and Ford of 45 per cent, with 20 per cent naming no choice.

Traditionally, Democratic groups such as blacks, Catholics and labor union families favored Ford most heavily, the Gallup organization said.

Miners vote strike

LONDON (AP) — Eighty-one per cent of Britain's coal miners voted for a crippling nationwide strike, and their leader said Monday about the only thing that will head it off is "more cash on the table."

"If the government doesn't take the result of the ballot seriously then all I can say is that the government itself cannot be taken seriously," declared union president Joe Gormley.

The vote put Prime Minister Edward Heath's back to the wall because union leaders now have authority to order the miners out of the coalfields by Sunday."

The 4-1 vote in favor of a strke was the highest ever recorded by the miners' union. The Electoral Reform Society, which monitored the secret ballot, reported 188,393 for and 44,222 against with miners in the militant south Wales area returning 93 per cent in favor.

Provisional notice already has been given that the stoppage may begin at midnight Sturday, but the union's 27-man high command is meeting here Tuesday to consider timing in light of any new moves by Heath.

Coal supplies 70 per cent of Britain's electricity. An over-time ban by miners since November has already cut stocks by more than one-third. To save fuel the government imposed a three-day work week beginning Jan. 1. Lost production is costing Britain $2.2 billion a month. An all-out miners' strike could choke off electricity supplies to industry by spring.

The miners want pay raises ranging from $17.60 to $28.60 a week, an increase of more than 30 per cent over present wages. Unskilled surface workers now get $55.63 a week and skilled underground workers draw $79.83 a week.

The government has offered a 7 per cent raise for all, the top figure allowed by inflation controls. For most miners this would mean $5.06 to $5.64 more a week. About half the miners would get an extra $10.45 for working night shifts. Only 5 per cent of the miners would get the $22 more a week for permanent night shift work in the state-run mines.

The government says giving the miners more than 7 per cent would open the floodgates to a series of inflationary wage settlements. After the miners' last strike in 1972 they won a 25 per cent wage increase. The government argues that this led to a rash of similar settlements which helped produce the nation's current inflation rate of 10.6 per cent.

Syrians claim more Golan heights fighting

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syria reported its tanks and cannons traded fire with Israeli forces in the Golan Heights for two hours Monday in the 10th consecutive day of clashes along the jagged cease-fire line.

The fighting came as Arab newspapers said Syrian President Hafez Assad was winning his campaign to keep up the oil embargo against the United States until he gets a Golan troop disengagement pact to his liking.

Israeli military spokesmen said the clash was confined to the southeast section of the front and left two Israeli soldiers wounded. The Israelis have contested earlier Syrian battle reports as exaggerated.

The fighting broke out about noon when Israeli artillery shelled Syrian positions near the center of the irregular 40-mile line. The Syrians claimed destroying six Israeli tanks and 20 artillery batteries.

Assad returned to Damascus from a three-day trip to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Beirut newspapers reported he got firm pledges from the Saudi monarch, King Faisal, and from the Kuwaiti ruler, Sheik Sabah al-Salem al-Sabah, to keep up the oil embargo until he gets the Golan agreement he wants.

Assad's terms were outlined by his foreign minister, Abdel Halim Khaddam, in a statement on the official Saudi radio:

"Syria will accept military disengagement on the Golan Heights front only if it's made part of a plan for a total Israeli withdrawal from Arab territories conquered in both the 1973 and 1967 wars," he said.

"A disengagement by itself without an Israeli commitment for total withdrawal and an assurance of Palestinian rights is not acceptable to Syria under any circumstances."

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who negotiated the Suez disengagement accord between Egypt and Israel, is working on a similar agreement between Syria and Israel.

But the Syrian terms enunciated by Khaddam, coupled with Israel's public stand, appeared to spell trouble for his mediation efforts. The Israeli government of Premier Golda Meir repeatedly has made it clear that Israel insists on keeping some Golan territory captured in the 1967 war.

Oil embargo to continue

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Syria appears to have dashed American hopes for an early end to the Arab oil embargo.

Newspapers reported Monday that Syrian President Hafez Assad won firm pledges from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to continue the embargo until the Syrians sign a disengagement pact with Israel on Syrian terms.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam said Syria will settle for nothing less than an Israeli commitment to "total withdrawal from Arab territories conquered both in the 1973 and 1967 wars."

Arab oil ministers are scheduled to discuss the oil embargo against the United States at a meeting in Tripoli, Libya, on Feb. 14. The reports on Syria hinted at what conditions may be set for lifting the embargo.

Assad met with both Persian Gulf leaders over the weekend. Saudi Foreign Minister Omar Sakkaf announced Monday the embargo would only be lifted "when the United States stops taking a pro-Israeli stance" and guarantees Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territories, including the eastern sector of Jerusalem.

The energy crisis

Senate finds tax breaks inefficient incentive for exploration

By DAVID C. MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Senate study has found that tax breaks granted the petroleum industry as an incentive to further exploration are inefficient in stimulating new supplies of oil.

The same tax breaks, the study estimates, cost the treasury something in excess of $1.5 billion a year in revenues.

Additional revenues of between $600 million amd $1 billion are lost each year as a result of foreign tax credits which encourage the refining and distribution of oil abroad at the expense of domestic operations, the study indicates.

The 58-page report, prepared by the Library of Congress as part of a National Fuels and Energy Policy Study authorized by the Senate in 1971, was released Sunday by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash.

"The incredible tax benefits that the oil companies have enjoyed for years have produced billions of dollars of profit for the industry without inducing any additional production of domestic oil," Jackson said in an accompanying statement.

The study indicates that some of the tax privileges-specifically, the oil depletion allowance and the expensing of intangible drilling costs-actually discourage exploration for new sources of oil and "encourage producers to rely on over-drilling in existing fields" instead.

The oil depletion allowance permits a producer to deduct 22 per cent of a well's gross income before calculating his tax due.

The intangible drilling costs allow a company to deduct certain expenses-labor, materials and repairs-incurred in bringing a well into production.

Both measures, the study points out, apply only to producing wells and not to so-called wildcat or exploratory wells which prove to be dry.

"The only current incentive for exploratory drilling," the study says, "is the expensing of dry holes," a tax provision which allows an oil company to write off the cost of drilling a non-producing well.

The study adds, however, that expensing of dry holes is "not unusual from an accounting standpoint...nor is it different from the treatment of other businesses where losses are generally allowed to be written off."

The study suggests that a reduction in foreign tax credits allowed the oil companies may be necessary "in light of the goal of encouraging a domestic supply of energy."

Foreign tax credits allow companies operating abroad to deduct their foreign tax payments from the amount owed the U.S.

Simon: Government may equalize heating oil prices in East

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy chief William E. Simon said yesterday the government may step in to equalize home heating oil prices in 17 eastern states.

But Simon said voluntary actions already being taken by distributors may make the action unnecessary.

Home heating oil prices vary widely in many communities because some dealers are dependent on high-priced foreign oil or domestic oil exemp from price controls while their competitors are supplied largely from oil subject to price controls.

To solve the problem, Simon proposed yesterday that dealers be required to share their supplies in a way that would give each of them about the same proportion of domestic and foreign oil.

That would give each dealer about the same over-all cost which, passed along to the customers, would tend to equalize prices.

Simon's proposal would require reports from the 76 principal suppliers in the 17 Eastern states. The reports would be used to calculate their average foreign-domestic fuel mix.

The proposed regulation would then require the suppliers to buy or sell foreign or domestic oil to each other as required to give each of them about the same mix.

The transactions would be measured against the foreign-domestic fuel mix during the corresponding calendar quarter of 1973.

"This plan will do away with the problem of next door neighbors paying a difference of 50 per cent to heat their homes," Simon said.

He added, however, that the regulation may not be needed because "there are strong indications that the situation is being corrected by the voluntary action of the oil companies and suppliers.

"Prices have already begun to drop in the area as the result of comingling of foreign and domestic oil among suppliers."

The 17 states covered by the proposed regulation are: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

If adopted, the regulation would take effect March 1.

Regional rationing possible

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Federal Energy Office said yesterday it will ask New England governors to set up a regional gasoline rationing system unless something happens by the end of the week to dramatically reduce lines at the pumps.

"By the end of the week if things haven't improved we'll have to do something," said Hugh Saussy, deputy regional administrator of the energy office in Boston.

He said he was disappointed at reaction to guidelines issued by his office last week in an attempt to reduce panic buying and promote fuel conservation.

"The reaction has been very spotty," Saussy said. "We've had trouble getting the word out.

Boston Edison rate increase opposed

BOSTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, Lt. Gov. Donald Dwight and a dozen state legislators opposed a Boston Edison Co. request Monday for a rate increase aimed in part at offsetting a reduction in use during the energy crisis.

But at a hearing before the Department of Public Utilities, spokesmen for the electric company said they will have difficulty meeting expenses without an increase.

The company is seeking emergency increases totaling $36 million, as part of a $43 million increase already requested. Of this, $17.2 million would go to meet increases in costs and $18.9 million would cover decreased use due to conservation.

Quinn and several legislators favored a government takeover of electric companies.

Edward Hanify, counsel to Boston Edison, pointed out that by doing this, the state would lose $58 million a year in taxes and suggested that the government would not be able to buy fuel any more cheaply than a private company.

Quinn charged that part of the increase would go to remedy poor planning at the Plymouth Nuclear Plant, where output now is only half what was projected.

"In addition to power we did not use and the extra power the company hoped we would buy, Boston Edison is asking the consumer to pay for its mistakes," Quinn said.

Rep. James L. Smith, D-Lynn, was among several legislators who voiced strong opposition to a rate increase he said would penalize customers for conservation measures the company had urged them to take.

Gasland stations expected to reopen

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A chain of 175 service stations in the northeast hopes to be able to supply 150 million gallons of gas for the region during 1974, the firm's president said Monday.

More than half of the Gasland Inc. stations — most of them in Massachusetts and Connecticut — have shut down in recent months.

President Jack Stanley of the Springfield-based company said Monday that most of the stations would be reopened as quickly as possible. He predicted that half would be open by the end of the week.

Stanley said the chain could provide 150 million gallons to the region this year if Gasland is able to get feed-stocks, or raw materials used in the refining process, from the major oil companies.

The Federal Energy Office has pledged to help ensure feed-stocks for Gasland's Louisiana refinery, Stanley said.

The Springfield Daily News reported Monday that an unidentified Gasland official said 20 per cent of the refinery's 1973 production came to New England.

The official explained that Gasland honored contractual commitments in other parts of the country when the Arab oil boycott and federal price controls combined to make New England "not an economically viable situation."

With other commitments expiring and with price controls removed, "as of Feb. 1 every gallon of gasoline that we manufacture will be sold in New England," the spokesman said.

Besides Massachusetts and Connecticut, the chain runs stations in New Hampshire, Vermont and New York.

Dukakis calls for rationing

BOSTON (AP) - Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael Dukakis called on Gov. Francis Sargent Monday to immediately order a form of gasoline rationing for Massachusetts.

Dukakis said the plan should be based on systems in effect in Oregon and Hawaii where drivers whose license plates end in even numbers can buy gas only on even-numbered days and drivers with odd-numbered plates are limited to odd numbered days.

The former state representative, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor, said rationing plan should be imposed as law, and that if Sargent finds he does not have authority to do so, he should seek legislative approval for rationing power.

Dukakis also called for emergency mass transit service to supplement bus, transit and train service, and help ease the demand for gasoline.

He also suggested a half-fare plan for weekend service on the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority to aid motorists when gasoline is not available. Dukakis said the half-fare system has been in effect in New York City since early December.

Dukakis blamed the federal government for failing to aid the Northeast in fighting the energy shortage.

The federal government, Dukakis said, "has clearly abdicated its responsibilities" to assure equitable supplies of gasoline, especially to Massachusetts.

Dukakis said he favors the Oregon-style rationing system because it would be easy to implement and would not require a bureaucracy to administer.

NE gas supplies fair

NORTH ADAMS (AP) — Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., plans to ask gasoline stations and fuel dealers in his district to supply him with data about fuel allocations.

Conte said in an interview here he will ask dealers to provide him with figures showing their current allocations and their 1972 deliveries.

"I want to be able to go with some hard facts and figures to Federal Energy Chief Bill Simon and say we're not getting our fair share under the mandatory allocation program," Conte said.

Conte wants fuel figures

BOSTON (AP) — Gasoline supplies are fair throughout most of New England, according to an American Automobile Association special survey, except in Maine, where the outlook for the next few days is good.

Cities where stations report very low supplies include Worcester, Mass., Providence, R.I.; Manchester and Portsmouth, N.H., and Burlington, Vt., the association said Monday.

Limits on gasoline purchases are standard throughout the region, except in Maine, where about half the stations contacted set no limits.

Most stations in the AAA survey said they were pumping gas in the morning until they sell their daily quota, which is often before noon.

Regional independents join truck strike

By BOB GREENE
Associated Press Writer

Independent truck drivers in New England have joined in a nationwide slowdown that could force housewives to pay higher prices for what may be dwindling supplies at the supermarkets.

Only a few violent incidents have been reported in the six-state region, but protesting drivers met with New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomsen and Connecticut Gov. Thomas J. Meskill has alerted the National Guard in his state for possible duty.

The windshield of a tractor trailer rig was shattered in Haverhill when a meat hook was dropped from an overpass on 495, according to police. The truck driver suffered facial cuts from flying glass.

In Connecticut, a rock was thrown through a truck windshield on Route 8, between Thomaston and Waterbury, and a second driver reported that his truck's air hoses had been cut by a group of men along Interstate 84 in Southbury.

More than 30 tractor-trailer rigs pulled into parking spaces around the New Hampshire Sate House at Concord early yesterday. But they were removed before Thomsen met with five truckers and promised that he would do everything he can to get them diesel fuel.

The striking truckers are potesting the high price and scarceness of diesel fuel and the slower highway limits.

Throughout New England, fewer trucks were hitting the highways and supermarkets already are beginning to feel the pinch.

Robert Sirois, a Patucket, R.I., produce wholesaler, said his state is just starting to feel the effects of the slowdown. Fresh fruit and vegetables are becoming more scarce and the prices are going up on what fresh produce is available, he said.

Richard Tavilla of P. Tavilla Co. Inc., a Boston produce wholesaler, said the strike and the weekend snowstorm in southern New England is already showing signs of jacking up produce prices.

"Fifty pounds of green cabbage sold for $3 to $3.75 last week. It was $4 to $4.50 this morning," he said.

A Portland, Maine, wholesaler, Charles Redman, said if the strike continues, consumers will see the effects in "three or four days."

The biggest problem appears to be in foodstuffs that are transported into New England from the midwest, although longshoremen at Albany, N.Y., are reportedly refusing to load bananas onto trucks there.

Boxed Beef Co. of Hartford, Conn., has placed its last meat order from Iowa with the railroads rather than with trucks. The switch to rails was made a week ago.

In Gloucester, fish processors are worried that the strike will deal a severe financial blow to their industry. The year's largest fish sales are during Lent.

Nearly all of the Gloucester area's processed fish is shipped in refrigerated trucks operated by independents. Since the strike began, very little fish has been trucked out of Gloucester.

The supply problem will be heightened, many say, if panic buying or hoarding begins.

While many truckers have halted their rigs to protest, others have stopped rolling bcause of the fear of violence.

"We lose"--Olver

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts is forfeiting substantial sums of money by failing to take advantage of federal aid in medical care for the mentally retarded, the Senate chairman of a special legislative commission charged yesterday.

"I estimate it was $10 million a year in recent years," said Sen. John Olver, (D-Amherst).

Olver's Special Commission on the Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital released an interim report that did not mention a specific amount.

Under Medicaid, the federal government will pay the entire cost of brining intermediate care facilities up to its standards and half the cost of treatment afterwards.

The commission's report said the Department of Mental Health still has not promulgated guidelines for emergency medical care for the retarded in state institutions.

Four persons died in accidents at Belchertown in November and December, 1972, and a draft of emergency procedures was supposed to have been in the governor's hands last October.

SMU cleared

NORTH DARTMOUTH, Mass. (AP) - All buildings were cleared on the campus of Southeastern Massachusetts University (SMU) here yesterday after a female phoned state and city police warning that a bomb was set to go off on university grounds, city police said.

Buildings were cleared and searched and no bomb was found, police said. The call was received about 10:20 a.m. and the persons who were ordered out of buildings returned shortly after noon.

Spending ceiling

BOSTON (AP) - A small fleet of New England fishing ships plans to cruise up the Potomac River this spring to lobby before Congress for legislation they hope will save their industry.

The 10-day voyage will be timed to coincide with hearings on a bill drafted by Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., to temporarily extend the country's fishing jurisdiction from its present 12-mile limit to 200 miles.

Organizers of the effort say there will be at least one ship from each of the New England states of Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

Fishy cruise

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Taxpayers Association yesterday called for creation of a state Board of Revenue Estimates to set a target ceiling on state spending before budget preparation begins next year.

Richard A. Manley, pesident of the Taxpayers Foundation, told the legislature's joint Ways and Means Committee that the proposed board's estimate of available revenue would be used in all executive budgets and all appropriation bills.

Manley said the proposal would "encourage more straight-forward and less political budgets."

The Ways and Means Committee also heard testimony from several Massachusetts mayors and legislators who endorsed a bill to force the state to provide funds for all legislative programs forced upon cities and towns.

Brighton blaze

BOSTON (AP) - A three-alarm fire raced through two wooden buildings in a congested residential area of Brighton yesterday killing a woman and two small children.

Capt. John Collins of the Boston Fire Department identified the victims as Laura Tucceri, 21, who was found in a basement apartment, and Noela Tamarriello, 2, and Ralph Winsted, Jr., 11 months, who were found on the third floor of the same building.

The arson squad was called in to investigate the blaze, which erupted in one building's basement apartment and quickly spread to the building next door. Deputy Fire Chief George Thompson estimated damage to the buildings at $50,000.

Missiles killed

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts National Guard announced yesterday it was deactivating two Nike-Hercules antiaircraft missile batteries in Lexington and Hull.

The Defense Department is phasing out all 48 Nike-Hercules batteries because of what it believes is a reduced threat from enemy bombers. Of the 48, only 27 are manned by National Guard units.

Some 342 Massachusetts guardsmen man the two batteries and their headquarters. Of these, 201 are fulltime technicians.

The adjutant general, Maj. Gen. Vahan Vartarian, said the technicians would be offered other positions in National Guard units in the six New England states, with federal aid if they had to move.

Other Guardsmen will be reassigned to other units as vacancies develop, Kincaid said.

Black news service formed

A centralized news outlet has been proposed to improve the reporting of activities concerning the area's Black community.

Pat Grundy and Luis Medina, the project coordinators, stated that their chief aim is to "inform, stimulate interest, and finally to bring about a greater participation of the entire Black community in both campus and off-campus activities." Reports, questionnaires. viewpoints, and commentaries will be a part of regular items covered each week.

The project also plans to conduct interviews with speakers visiting the campus as well as highlighting student achievements such as scholarship awards and other areas of commendatory activities. Its coordinators seek the cooperation of faculty members regarding their academic activities as well.

An office has recently been opened in New Africa House, Room 115 (Cultural Center), where all events may be reported either in person or through the campus mail system. All students who are interested in such a project and have skills in photography, interviewing, news reporting, or essay and editorial writing are urged to contact Ms. Pat Grundy at 545-0794. Or, if they prefer, they may stop by the Cultural Center and leave their name and phone number.

Winemaking new national pastime

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Not since Prohibition has the pungent smell of fermenting liquids scented the air in so many homes. Thanks to home winemaking books, kits, and how-to classes the ancient and respected art is almost a new national pastime. And you don't need a wine cellar and a brewing shed to make your own. An apartment kitchen will do.

Find a recipe, assemble the necessary ingredients, and you're ready to begin, right? Wrong: To protect yourself, you had better comply with federal law and apply for a permit from the nearest district office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms of the U.S. Treasure Dept.

It's available free to heads of households, who are allowed to make up to 200 gallons of wine a year for home consumption.

You've got the permit, the recipe, and the ingredients. Add a little patience, and you're set. First crush, chop or press the fruit or pour the concentrate into a large clean plastic or wooden pail. Add water, sugar, a few other ingredients, and then sprinkle with yeast.

Stir this mixture once or twice a day for five or six days, then siphon it into a glass jug and attach a fermentation lock. Let the wine stand for three weeks, then repeat the siphoning process. After three to six months, your wine should be ready to bottle.

A space big enough for a gallon jug is all you need to make a gallon of dago red or dandelion wine. A 4 by 5 foot area will give you a perpetual supply of wine 20 to 40 gallons.

Utilize any relatively warm, draft-free spot. The kitchen, a closet, or somewhere close to a heating unit will work fine for the first week. After you've jugged the wine, you can move it to wherever you like - bathroom, bath, to a table or shelf.

Making your own need not drain your budget, either. Either champagne or a sparkling burgundy seldom costs more than $1.50 a bottle, and usually runs less than 75 cents a bottle. Your time investment should be equally low. Expect to spend only an hour per gallon.

Fermentation is the process which converts a prepared liquid into alcohol.

Fair planned for March

Planning for the 1974 International Fair is now underway and students and faculty are urged to join in brainstorming new ideas and approaches to this year's event. The planning meeting will be held Friday, at 3:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union and students and faculty are invited.

Those attending the Friday meeting are not committed to work on the Fair committees. But, if interested in booth design, overall layout, getting entertainment events together, arranging publicity, working in carpentry, circuitry, or food, one can meet and share ideas with others committed to the 1974 Fair.

The International Fair is scheduled for March 16-17, just over one month away, in the Campus Center Auditorium. Following the Friday meeting, those interested in working on the various committees will get together to plan their work schedules for the coming weeks.

Give and ye shall receive, is another.

Even the sceptics among us must realize that the end-results of an endeavor are pretty much in keeping with the amount of effort put forth.

Being at the University of Massachusetts, and being young, has advantages in terms of the energy we can expend.

Youth has its pitfalls - selfishness, impulsiveness, and tendency towards fashionable cynicism.

But youth also means flexibility, hyper-activity, and a capacity for creativity that is virtually boundless.

To channel this energy properly is of the greatest importance.

We must give our utmost to our relationships, to our academics, and to the pursuit of our aims.

We must also allow ourselves leisure time to sit back and see things in perspective.

This university gives us something invaluable, and that is time.

It is our responsibility, then, to experience UMass as fully as possible, and to experiment as much as we can in this act of giving.

DC pumps gas and theres no limits

By SAM HASSAN

I think I have a solution to the alleged gas shortage. Trouble is, man hasn't found a way to convert the gas I'm talking about into usable energy.

After last Thursday's chili con carne lunch, I became thoroughly convinced by crepitating circumstances that having a meal ticket is a rip-off, whether you eat the meals or not. Most everyone will agree that the food leaves much to be desired, and oftentimes many undersirable after effects, but what about the cost?

If you've purchased a 3 meal plan, you probably hadn't eaten the food before, and realize you've made a terrible mistake. Or you figured that $321.75 isn't much more than $284.75, and that you got a better deal. If neither of the above apply, your mother must be a lousy cook, but let's look at the 2 meal plan.

With a 10 meal ticket, you pay about $1.80 per meal. This is considering you eat every meal you've paid for. If you miss one meal a week, you pay $2.00 a meal, miss two and your paying about $2.20 a meal. Expensive? Sure, so you eat every meal during classes, but, how many people a) ate D.C. food until December 20th last semester, b) have finals until May 29th, and will stay for 16 meals after classes end May 17th, c) go home on week-ends and miss dinner every Friday? Expensive?

For $2.00 a meal, you could enjoy steak, a baked potato, and a salad every night, and still have enough for breakfast, lunch, and a bottle of wine. If you don't eat meat you could have all the chick peas, limas, lentils, and kidney beans you want, and drink Mateus. Instead, students are drinking Finast beer, and eating raunchy pizza and candy bars on week-ends to keep their budgets down. Expensive? no. Costly? Yes!

There are of course meal ticket students, I for one, who venture to Stop & Shop and buy a decent food supply for the week-end, but why can't we do it all week long? Because the University has four dining commons in opeation, and, as has been said before, we're the victims of poor planning. What can be done about it, and just how many students are paying for meals they never eat? Well, like RMN said in '68, "I have a plan."

If we're expected to eat on week-ends, there can be no just denial of a one meal per day plan on the basis of a students inability to provide for him or herself. If you can count, you can cook, and as far as facilities and economics go, if you can build, you can remodel. This plan doesn't do much for indigestion, constipation or regurgitation but Nixon never ended the war either! What it should do is ease the pain, offer an alternative, and at least interest some meal ticket students.

Hey!! Come back and pay attention

Return to academics

By NAT CLARK

I'm tired of being told that I'm just an idle dreamer and what I want is unrealistic. The time has come to begin to reflect, perhaps prematurely, but hopefully wisely on where our roads are leading us. Without a doubt, we, the students, are the pawns or guinea pigs, if you will, of this educational system. If what is the current revolution in education here at UMass is shown to have failed, we will be the students with no college education to fall back on.

It is appropriate to look analytically at the way in which we are being taught, what is being expected of us, and most of all, at where we will be at the end of our "educational journey".

"Isn't anybody concerned anymore about improving his mind?"

Last year while talking to a recent graduate of this University about UMass and its seeming lack of any standards of excellence, I was told that during the strike of 1970 he had been talking to a professor about the relevance of some of our requirements and the man's response had been, "isn't anybody concerned anymore about improving his mind? Are students only concerned with the day to day relevance of our courses?" I am rather inclined to agree with the Professor.

Education should be a process of building a mind to function keenly. A variety of disciplines should be taken in order for each to build a different dimension of a person's mind. Latin or French, or any foreign language, for that metter, should never be viewed solely for its day to day worth but for its ability to teach the skill of learning a new set of symbols and a new concept of mechanical principles necessary to have a manageable language. Similarly, Logic and Geometry should not teach solely, 'What is a major supposition" or "what is the requirement for congruence", but for their use as builders of an analytical mind.

This is not to say that certain concepts and facts must not be in the forefront of our mental field, for they must. Unpleasant as it may be, English grammar must be known in order to speak and write well, rather than good. Valences in Chemistry must be memorized in order to facilitate a manipulation of chemical problems. There is a very relevant side to most courses. There are really two realms of education.

I say this because simply that neither realm of the educational process is being explored rigorously enough here. If one looks around, he or she sees too many teachers who are lax in their responsibilities and "give away" grades for too little, or no, work in return. Far too many students use the "Pass Fail" and "F's not counted in your cum" systems for the wrong reasons. They should be used to explore, not evade, the realm of man's knowlege. Many too many classes drag on with the teacher having given up on demanding anything and the students wandering needlessly into the abyss of mediocrity.

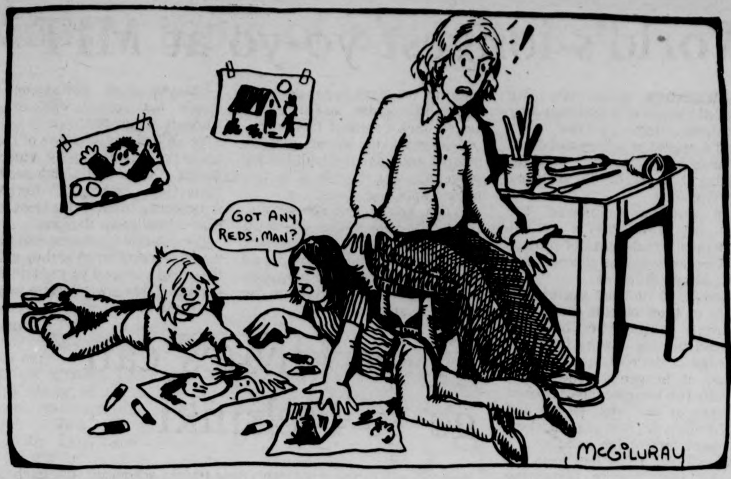
What is sadder is the only too real trap inherent in those two new grading policies, as we are lured toward them, as Odysseus might have been lured onto the rocks by the Sirens. The question of what ramifications an F or a P on your record have on an issue like graduate school admission's have never been explored, except possibly by the Pre-Law Office. Clearly a change must come.

The time is now to return to academics, pleding loyalty to excellence and rigorous standards. We, as students, must demand of our teachers the best. The blatant, "I came to you to learn how to write in clear, concise, expository prose. I don't want you to let me out of your class until I can do that" task to a teacher of writing is appropriate. It is also appropriate that a teacher ask the same standard of dedication. And it is of course warranted that a teacher who gives of his or her time be rewarded not only monetarily but with esteem. A good rigorous teacher should never fear a tenure selection committee.

"The renown which riches or beauty confer is fleeting and frail, mental excellence is a splendid and lasting possession."

What I dream of is that the University of Massachusetts, a state university, will be a place of academic excellence. I want teachers and students to come here to engage in a dynamic, hard, threatening, but enjoyable struggle to build a keen mind. Whether he or she aspires to be a Molecular Biologist, a Pianist, or a Social Worker, is incidental. To all areas must come the realization that the future belongs to those who are competent to live in it. That education is fun, not necessarily in its day to day goings on, but in its final triumph. That finally we will realize in the words of an ancient philosopher, "The renown which riches or beauty confer is fleeting and frail, mental excellence is a splendid and lasting possesion."

Perhaps I am an idle dreamer and an unrealistic sort. I hope not, not for me, but for us all as members of an academic community.



Genocide alive in US

By DENNY MATTEAU

Hello friends, colleagues, and other student-numbers. Even though most of you don't know me from Whitless, I must keep alive that writer's delusion that you all missed me over intersession. And so, I begin this article by saying that I missed the hussle and bussle of all of you. Welcome back and may the blessings of Oscar be with you!

Enough with the social amenities and into the political ravings:

I am discovering that History, which I used to believe was the "socially agreed upon preserved lie", didn't end on the day before I was born. Phenomena which were presented to me in books as events of the remote past are still happening, undisguised.

I think many people must have felt this way during the recent occupation of Wounded Knee. There was an aura of the absurd around the A.I.M.'s activities because the Indians have been presented to the general public as fantasy figures. After seeing a scary Western when I was small, I was told by grownups not to be afraid because there are no more Indians.

And now I find it easy to imagine a young German child in the 1940's being told not to be scared, there are no more Jews. Genocide, I learned in junior high school, is a word invented for the crime that Hitler invented, the murder of a people. Yesterday I was browsing in a bookstore and I opened a book of portraits of Indians and read about Wounded Knee, about remote history. The emotions I felt when reading about what happened in the past are unnameable. The objections I might be able to voice about old crimes become caught in my throat when I can't leave all the blame and infamy to distant ancestors.

The genocide of the American people and of Hitler brings me to another phenomenon I would like to believe belongs to another time and place; Nazis, and that Aryan problem: the sterilization of those judged unfit to breed.

During intersession I saw a newsreel in which about two dozen uniformed swastika'd brownshirted Nazis were attending a meeting somewhere in California, to support school segregation. Racial purity and all that. "My god," I thought, "just look at these sickees, these remnants of the past! Don't they remember that they lost the war?"

It was comforting to tell myself that these Nazis were (ARE) remnants, but even that assumption faded as I watched 60 Minutes Sunday night. I watched it in stunned silence, so forgive me for not remembering some of the details.

First, there was a short film of the Nuremburg trials, and the journalist (I believe it was Mike Wallace) spoke about the revelations of compulsory sterilization and the shock which the public felt when they were made. Then, into the body of the story: our government, that by-for-of-the-people group of men, has been underwriting forced sterilization of black mothers of illegitimate children and of so-called "mental defectives". These stories are not new, they began to hit the press last summer when a reporter discovered the case of two supposedly retarded black girls in the Deep South. As upsetting as those stories were, they too were remote. The Deep South and New England are, to each other, the remotest parts of the American Empire.

But the most startling and unacceptable piece of information is this: More than half of the states, according to the report, have bills before their legislatures to consider legalizing compulsory sterilization. I had taken comfort in the idea that the victims of the first sterilizations were now known about and had their cases before the courts, so of course justice would be done, and this horror (which I thought was the crime of only a few evil individuals, and not at all respected) would be stopped.

It seems to me that people used to wonder how the German people slipped into the terror of Hitler. Are we going to get that question answered now?

Letters To The Editor

I will return

To The Editor:

How do you say thank you to several thousand people with whom you had some great times over the past year. To the thousands who are responsible for your development and success as an entertainer. All I can do is to say thank you to all of you who came to the parties I played for, and to the dorms and fraternities for whom I spun the disks. For the next year I'll be traveling around the country, but as many have said in their famous last words, I will return!

Be battle ready

To The Editor:

Well, I have recovered my wits and I'm coming out yelling from my experience. I recently came before the Student Senate Budgets Committee and was very disheartened and disillusioned by our interaction. Give some students power and watch the power politics begin.

I represent an RSO group and had to submit to the budget ordeal. I was shocked. I had never had any exprience with coming before a budget committee and man, I got burned. There were no introductions. No courtesy was extended. I did not know who I was being confronted with, who to direct my qustions to and neither did anyone seem to care. Our proposed budget was chopped. We have exactly the same budget as last year. Rising prices do not allow for this type of budget, expecially with gas and food prices going the way they are (both of which play a vital role in our group). Just what favored groups do receive an increase in budget?

It seemed to be predetermined that wherever possible the budget would be reduced — all cut and dried. No one explained what was going on. I was a mere figurehead, ignorant of what went on and they seemed to want to keep it that way (things go much smoother without obstacles). I am afraid my inexperience was taken advantage of. The thing that bothered me most was I was exploited by fellow students!

I suggest to anyone going before the budget committee to come prepared for battle and be sure to bring a lawyer and an accountant.

World's longest yo-yo at MIT

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - The rhythmic yanks of a nine-foot-long aluminum finger jerked "the world's longest yoyo" up and down the side of a 21-story building Monday at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Ten students engineered the huge toy atop MIT's tallest building as a mid-semester project "just because it was there," said Prof. James Williams.

About 1,000 students stood in six inches of snow outside the Green Building while the builders wheeled the big orange finger to the edge of the roof.

Then it happened. The yo-yo, actually two bicycle wheels hooked together at the jubs, let go and glided down 265 feet of rope along the sheer face of the building.

When it got a few feet from the ground, there was a tantalizing pause. Then a 1½ horsepower motor on the giant finger gave the rope a little nudge, and the yo-yo soared back up about 15 stories.

Meanwhile, the crowd giggled, cheered and gave the frail-looking gadget a round of muffled, mitten-handed applause.

"Yeah, I'd say it was successful. Absolutely. Look at the enjoyment people get out of it," the professor said. But he admitted he would have been happier if the yo-yo had danced all the way back up to the end of the string.

"Maybe they turned on the motor too soon," one of his students suggested.

Yo-yo building was one of many projects undertaken by students during the school's independent activities period between semesters. Others, for instance, learned ballroom dancing.

The students, who spent three weeks working on what they called the world's longest yo-yo, said they thought it was a worthwhile way to use their time.

Three UMies can go to Helsinki

Next fall will be the third year of the UMass academic year exchange program with the University of Helsinki in Finland. Three qualified UMass students of junior or senior status are eligible for the exchange.

The expansive campus of the University of Helsinki is situated at the center of Helsinki, the capital of Finland. Its location offers a unique travel opportunity throughout Europe, including Russia. Helsinki is Northern Europe's largest university with a student body of nearly 25,000.

The University of Helsinki provides comprehensive academic, social and cultural facilities for its students. Helsinki includes faculties of Theology, Law, Medicine, Philosophy, Social Science, Agriculture and Forestry. The faculty of Philosophy is divided into two parts: the Humanities and Sciences. There is also an Institute of Physical Education. In the social realm, students conduct such things as theaters, clubs and films in their own houses. UMass students receive full credit toward their degree upon successfully completing their year in Finland.

A knowledge of Finnish is recommended but not required for participation in the exchange. Most lectures are given in Finnish or Swedish, but classes in English for foreign students are offered. Many professors are willing to give examinations in English as well as providing alternate English reading lists. American students find the language barriers further reduced as a large percentage of Finnish students study English as a foreign language.

The estimated cost for a year at Helsinki under the exchange program is the same as at the Amherst campus. The only additional expense is international air fare. A limited amount of financial aid is available towards travel costs. Students interested in applying should contact Judy Epstein in the International Programs Office at 239 Whitmore. The deadline for applying is March 22.

Vocational project starts

If you are uncertain about your occupational plans and would like to do some exploration, there's a new program on campus just for you.

It is offered from February 4 until March 22. Any student can come in between these dates to the Student Development and Career Planning Center and begin the project. You can work at your own pace and in your free time. It usually takes about 2-4 hours to complete the project.

The Vocational Project is also appropriate if you are just looking for more support for your present plans or are interested in exploring some alternatives. Sophomores and Juniors are extended a special invitation to engage in this career exploration as they make their educational and professional decisions.

The Center is located in Berkshire House. Interested persons should contact Sharon Zanowiak in room 212 from 9-5 on weekdays. Coordinators of the project will make every effort to accomodate all interested students.

Pulse has openings

Project Pulse, the student attitude and opinion survey project on campus, still has a few openings left for work-study students to work as telephone interviewers on Tuesday evenings. Because of the nature of Pulse's operation, Pulse can use only those students who, for some reason, cannot obtain enough hours or are not working their limit in hours on their present work-study assignment.

Interested students are welcome to stop by the Pulse office, 243 Whitmore Administration Building, or call 5-1543.

Racism topic of SW series

A series of interdisciplinary three-credit courses are being offered by the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding this semester. These courses may be of particular interest for students seeking to raise their level of racial consciousness as well as actively participating in discussions and projects that help people understand racism, both in themselves and in institutions, and through this understanding, to begin effectively combatting that racism.

Some of the courses include such topics as:

BLACK ETHNOCENTRISM - A course designed to explore the various ethnocentrisms of black people (West Indian, Afro-American, Latin, and Africans), and the effects of cultural contact between the various nationalities.

LITERATURE OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY STRUGGLE - This course will involve the reading and discussion of a variety of literary sources that contributed to anti-slavery sentiment before the Civil War.

SEMINAR ON BLACK WOMEN - An exploratory study group in reading analysis, discussion, and some fieldwork concerned with survival issues related to the identity of Black women in a White institutional environment.

All classes will meet at the Center located in the Moore House faculty apartment during the evenings (7:00-10:00). Registration for these courses will be taking place in the John Adams Lobby rooms 1 & 4 during the hours of 10:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m. For further information call (54) 5-2803.

Art show features John Hunter

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

Jones Library is sponsoring an art exhibition of John M. Hunter, a self-educated artist. His plastic creations, made from styrene, butyrate, plexiglass and polyester resin achieve a high sense of decorative style. Screws and other metal parts, butterflies, sea shells from Florida, as well as stamps and coins of foreign countries combine to form plastic geometric figures.

This is Hunter's third show in Jones Library. He said he became interested in the creative art while attending an art show in Western Massachusetts a couple of years ago. He then began his autodidactic art education and artistic creations.

The exhibition will be held during the month of February. Admission is free.

Kennedy boy's leg tested

BOSTON (AP) - Tests performed last weekend on Edward M. Kennedy Jr., 12-year-old son of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, indicate there is no persistence of the cancerous tumor that forced amputation of his right leg above the knee last November.

In a statement, the Children's Hospital Medical Center said all the routine tests were negative. The treatment and tests are to be repeated every several weeks for an indefinite period of time.

Kennedy was admitted to the hospital Friday for the tests and was released Monday morning, the hospital said. He returned to Washington Monday.

The hospital said it did not know when Kennedy's next treatment would be.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Hope seems to be a special quality of Capricorn. No matter how dismayed, this native maintains "hope." Many times, Capricorn cannot define the specific hope. However, there is always a goal where this native is concerned, even if it is not clearly outlined. Capricorn is the Tenth House and it is Saturn and the road for the native is strewn with adversity. But there is hope-- it springs eternal and finally lights a path out of the wilderness. Capricorn and crises go together--they are companions. Capricorn can maneuver, backtrack, get second emotional wind and finally define "the hope" and do something concrete about fulfilling it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Quick changes are likely to be featured. Mate, partner, one close to you is due to feature a surprise. Unorthodox legal procedure could play a paramount role. In all, you are pulled in two directions simultaneously. Move toward one who proved loyal in past.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Light touch is best--don't chide, cajole or make demands. Expand horizons by being versatile and receptive. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Short journey is likely to be on agenda. Relative is involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Member of opposite sex may be playing games--with your emotions. Know it and protect yourself in clinches. Avoid foolish extravagance. You cannot buy affection. Give of yourself without making a door mat of you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to what is practical. Family member who wants to experiment should be given guidelines, not license. Gemini, Virgo could play significant roles. Your own judgment is likely to be on target. Act in confident manner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Home, property and harmony in domestic area--these are featured. Taurus, Libra persons could be spotlighted. Secret is revealed. You will be in position to gain definite advantage. Diplomacy is an ally. Fixed view, with little give, could lead to setback.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Nothing will be handed you on proverbial silver platter. There is gift upcoming, but you will earn it. Apparent dilemma will be resolved. Spiritual insights are featured. Don't turn away from light--which is truth.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Chips are down and payoff is due. Older persons may be involved--authority figures play prominent roles. Accept responsibility, special or overtime assignment. You are able now to express a different side of yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish rather than be in projects. Refuse to be held back by imaginary barrier. You are capable of breaking through, of cutting away red tape. Aries, Libra persons may be in picture. Plan for journey. Your position will not be static.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friend could act in erratic manner. Maintain sense of balance, humor. Break that occurred with one close to you will work in your favor. You will have chance for greater independence, self-expression.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Wait and observe. Direct confrontations are not advisable. Goal changes. If you are not sure of what to do, it is best to do nothing. Sighting will be clarified. Defer to one who is familiar with legal and other aspects.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Study Capricorn message. Refuse to be stampeded into foolish action. You have right to measure moves, to decide only after careful consideration. Any who say otherwise are misinformed. Interesting offer is due from afar.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March20): Steer clear of one who is eager to spend--your money. Young person may have vigor but could lack wisdom. Heed your own counsel. Check details in thorough manner. No one intends to give up something for nothing.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are inquisitive, attractive to opposite sex, mercurial, fond of travel. Exciting new projects are upcoming, with July indicated as a significant month for you in 1974. Many born under Gemini and Virgo are drawn to you. You are fine when it comes to aiding others, often neglectful in area of self-help.

Sammy Davis Jr. now has second thoughts on Nixon

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Sammy Davis Jr. says his endorsement of President Nixon in the 1972 presidential campaign has caused him great pain and that he is very disappointed in the President's social programs.

Davis, who was photographed hugging the President at the 1972 Republican convention in Miami, said he was strongly criticized by blacks and liberals for his endorsement.

"Everybody jumped on my back and I had to deal with it alone. Only my wife and a few close friends know what happened. It was like open heart surgery with no novocaine or anesthesia of any kind," he said by telephone from a Reno, Nev., night club where he is appearing.

"I'm not disappointed that I endorsed him" Davis, a Democrat, said in a weekend interview. "But I'm sorry there haven't been more things done for the poor whites, the blacks and the disenfranchised.

"I thought if I could be there to give advice, I could be of some assistance to generate some goodness in terms of keeping him informed.

"Because if you have people around you who only give you one point of view, you need someone else to give the other viewpoint.

"It's not that he didn't have good people, but I thought that they were giving one point of view."

Davis said he hoped the President would still develop a good social program.

"Perhaps programs like Headstart have just gotten waylaid, but I hope the President will get about regrouping and get those programs back even if they're under another name," he said.

What's a Nighthawk? plus hockey tidbits

By SCOTT HAYES

The biggest turn-around in hockey this season has to be the play of the New Haven Nighthawks of the American Hockey League. Many hockey fans may never even have heard of the Nighthawks, probably because AHL hockey is not the most popular, and the fact that the Nighthawks have only been in existence for one and a half seasons. If you mention the Nighthawks, the responses will vary from "Where's New Haven?" to "What's a Nighthawk?"

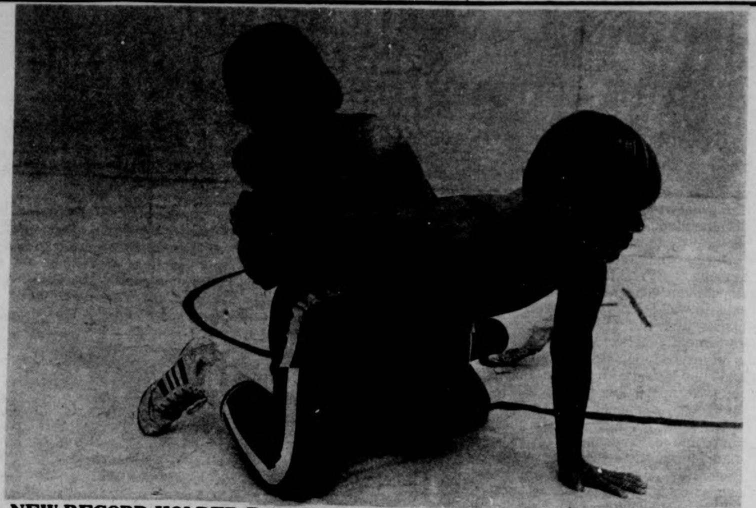
The Nighthawks shouldn't have this same problem next year. After finishing in a tie for last place with the hapless Springfield Kings last season, the New Haven club has enjoyed the best record in the AHL so far this year. The Hawks compiled a 16-40-20 record for all of last year, with a total of 52 points. Already this season, New Haven is 30-15-7 for mid-season a total of 67 points. The major factor in the trek from the cellar to the front of the Northern Division was the switching of the parent NHL club. Last year, New Haven played an important part in the New York Islander organization, but this season the Minnesota North Stars are running operations. Only two members of the original New Haven team are playing with the Nighthawks this year. Don Thompson, a small center, and Harry Shaw defenseman remain the favorites of the New Haven fans along with new goalie Lyle Carter. Shaw has become famous for his sprawling in front of slapshots and Carter, known as "The Cat", is among the best netminders in the league.

While Jerry Byers and John Rogers were called up to Minnesota during the season, the AHL's leading scorer, Steve West, has remained in New Haven. West seemingly has been overlooked, but the 23 year-old has stated that he is happy in New Haven and will wait for his big chance to make the NHL. At any rate, the Nighthawks will be around when playoff time comes, and hockey fans may just find out who the Nighthawks really are.

Last year's Stanley Cup statistics show Yvan Cournoyer as the top goal scorer and number one point getter. Montreal's right winger ripped the cords 15 times and picked up 10 assists for a total of 25 points. Dennis Hull was in second with 24 points. Frank Mahovlich had 23 points, while Stan Mikita and Jacques Lemaire were the only other players to reach the 20 point plateau. All of the top five Stanley Cup scorers played in 15 or more post season games. Pit Martin of Chicago was the only other player besides Cournoyer to reach double figures in goals. Martin scored 10 goals and had six assists for 16 points. Hull and Pat Stapleton, now of the WHA, led the scorers in assists, with 15 each.

Taking a look ahead at the schedules facing the two best teams in the NHL, the Boston Bruins and Philadelphia Flyers, it appears that the "Broad Street Bullies" have a tougher slate in the month of February. The Bruins host St. Louis on Thursday and then play the Flyers on Saturday, at the Garden. Last time the two teams met, the result was a 5-3 Boston victory in an exciting, nationally televised game. After the North Stars face the Bruins in Boston, the B's take to the road for a tour of Western Division rinks. The road trip starts in California, where Boston should have little trouble handling the lowly Golden Seals. The Bruins will have to be thinking of their last contest with the Kings at the Forum, a 4-1 loss. After L.A., the Bruins head back to the East. Stops in Minnesota, Pittsburgh and Buffalo precede Boston's last game of the month, a home contest against the Red Wings.

The Flyers host the Penguins on Thursday and then travel to Boston for what should prove to be another exciting NHL game. Philadelphia will then return home for a game against the always tough Montreal Canadiens. Two more testing games will follow for the Flyers, a game in Maple Leaf Gardens against the improved Leafs and a contest with the Rangers at the Spectrum.



NEW RECORD HOLDER Peter Sachon (on top looking towards camera). The freshman 118 pounder from Somers, New York is the new record holder of the fastest pin in UMass' 21 year wrestling history. He pinned his Coast Guard opponent last Saturday in 23 seconds, breaking the old record of 26 seconds held by Carl Dambman.

UMass bowling

On Saturday, February 2, the UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team sponsored the first annual Minuteman Classic bowling tournament. It was held at the Riverdale Lanes in West Springfield and considering the terrible weather it was a very successful tournament. Competition was held for both men and women in team, singles, and doubles events. College teams competing in this tournament were all members of the Tri-State League and this was a league match.

In the team event the UMass women swept to victory while Bryant captured the men's title. Members of the UMass women's team were: Nancy Heglin, Karen James, Barbara Holt, Cindy Adams, Maria Collette and Joan Felde. Members of the men's team were: Brian Elsden, Bill Fisher, Pete Henderson, Wayne Kowalski and Dave Dimmick.

In defeat Frazier still after title

By HAL BOCK

NEW YORK (AP) - His face is still puffy a week after Super Fight II, but Joe Frazier's priorities remain unchanged.

"The goal," the former heavyweight champion of the world said Monday, "is still to win that title back again."

So Frazier, after two weeks of rest following his 12-round loss to Muhammad Ali, will go back to the gym next week. "I've got to stay in shape." There is only one way that Frazier won't pursue his dream of winning back the title he held until being knocked out by George Foreman 13 months ago.

"If Kenny Norton beats Foreman," said Frazier, "I won't be champ again. I couldn't fight Norton. We've been friends too long. Eddie Futch managed him and now he's with me. We're too close. I couldn't fight him."

Norton fights Foreman for the heavyweight crown March 26 in Caracas, Venezuela.

Frazier said he though he had beaten Ali. "I thought I landed the more effective blows, but I can't condemn the officials," he saad.

"I feel if a man is going to dance and hold, there isn't going to be any fight. The game is not holding, it's fighting. All I can do is get out there and fight," Frazier continued.

"People say I lost because my face was all puffy after the fight. That didn't mean a thing. I always puff up. I puffed after the first fight and I won that one."

Asked if he thought a third fight with Ali might be staged, Frazier smiled. "It's up to him," he said. "I'll be ready to go back in about six months."

Frazier shrugged off reports of his retirement from the ring. "I'm still in tip-top shape physically," he said. "My main concern is that I don't miuse the game of boxing. I wouldn't hang on just for a payday if I thought I was through."

NBC hopes to showcase Aaron

By JAY SHARBUTT

NEW YORK (AP) — If current negotiations don't meet snags, NBC's "Monday Night Baseball" season may start early with what NBC hopes will be a big bang both for itself and Atlanta slugger Hank Aaron.

That's the report from Carl Lindemann Jr., vice president of NBC Sports. He says his network wants to begin its Monday night schedule by giving viewers a chance to see Aaron hopefully tying or breaking Babe Ruth's record of 714 home runs.

But he says the network now hopes to persuade baseball officials to let NBC push the starting date up to April 8, when Atlanta plays its season opener.

"We're awfully close to an agreement," Lindemann said. "We're sure trying to capture the excitement of Henry Aaron for the start of the season."

NBC's 15-game Monday night season this year also will have fewer show-biz types sharing the broadcast booth with Curt Gowdy and Tony Kubek, according to Lindemann.

When NBC inaugurated its celebrity service last year, such entertainers as George C. Scott, Charlie Pride, Danny Kaye and Glen Campbell were called in to discuss the grand old game.

Although viewers liked the idea, Lindemann said, the network now has decided to put more emphasis on famous baseball personalities as guest commentators.

NBC's Joe Garagiola, formerly of the "Today" show and the St. Louis Cardinals, Pittsburgh Pirates, Chicago Cubs and New York Giants, will be the guest commentator for four games this season.

Lindemann also said he hopes to get such baseball greats as Whitey Ford, Mickey Mantle, Ted Williams and retired National League umpire Jacke Conlon for the show.

Letters to Sports

We're wanted in Pennsy

Dear Daily Collegian:

I'm a native Bay Stater, '71 graduate of UMass at Amherst, and currently working near Philadelphia. The 73-74 UMass basketball schedule, which I just came across, appears disappointingly weak. Moreover, UMass doesn't play any Philadelphia area teams this season.

Southeastern Pennsylvania is exciting basketball country. They've developed some good pro players--Wilt, Wally Jones, Earl Monroe, etc.--and, locally, what they call the Big Five--Penn, St. Josephs, La Salle, Temple, and Villanova--, although not what they once were, still put on running, scrappy, noisy, and savvy games, expecially at Penn's Palestra.

New Englanders are plentiful in this area, too. Philadelphia is a college town, much like Boston and many New England students attend Philadelphia area schools. Whenever I see a Celtics-76er game there are nearly as many Celtic rooters as for Philly. WBZ, in Boston, sends down a strong signal for their Celtics and Bruins broadcasts, and their evening sports talk show attracts some local attention, including an occasional caller. So I'm sure there would be added local interest for a UMass-Big Five encounter.

If UMass wants at least eastern basketball recognition, which they were clamoring for during the Julius Erving era, they will have to play some Philadelphia teams. They ranked high in the Philadelphia Bulletin eastern basketball poll last year, probably on the basis of beating a good Penn team. Then they went on to beat a ranked Missouri team in the NIT and played well against North Carolina. So what's UMass doing playing Iona and St. Anselms?

New Hampshire, Harvard, Providence, and Rhode Island play this year in the Palestra. Boston College came to Villanova on January 10th. Holy Cross has already played a Big Five team in Worcester. These are teams the Minutemen will have to beat out for New England ranking, and for eastern recognition.

Vermont had the guts, and possibly some Green Mountain insanity to play No. Carolina and No. Carolina State. Providence pops all over the country contesting with some top teams. Where's UMass? If UMass athletic prowess is more than talk--which I think it is--come play basketball with the Big Five!

Cordially,
Edwin R. Witherell

Ed. Note: Confronted with the question of playing the teams within the Big 5, Jack Leaman responded "We would be more than glad to play them. But why should we always have to go to Philadelphia? Why can't they swing North?"

UMass basketball has, for a long time now, been thirsting for stiffer competition but no one, Providence included, will play us in our home Cage for fear of the crowd reactions and noise generated.

Women swimmers drown UConn

Intersession — vacation time for most of UMass — but that was not the case at NOPE pool where the women's swim team worked out twice a day in preparation for the upcoming season. If their first meet can be any indication of the future, this year's team is one to be taken seriously.

Last Thursday night saw a powerful and well prepared UMass completely dominate the women from UConn, taking first place in seven of the thirteen events, finishing two-three in another four and sweeping two for a total of 64 points. They were lead by Melon Dash, who took first in the 200 I.M., 400 free style, and 100 butterfly, and Cindy Whiting who ran away with 50, 100, and 200 freestyle events.

The strength of this team lies in its depth as Laurie Selik placed second in the 50 butterfly, 200 individual medley, and 100 freestyle, Kathe German finished second in the 200 and 400 freestyle, and Jean Franchebois was runner up in the 50 and 100 backstroke. Third place honors went to Roxanne Balducci, Carol Griffiths, Karen Johnson, Diane Perry and Lee Hart. Roxanne LaCoste, Patti Hogan, Sue White, Sandy Binny, and Mimi Ward all swam well and finished just behind the leaders. The determination and conditioning of the team was evident as they remained consistent throughout and took first place in the last event, 400 freestyle relay, with a time of 4.07.6.

Unfortunately, UMass divers were ill, which left UConn with a sixteen point advantage before the first gun had been fired and allowed them to edge out UMass with a score of 65. The real importance of this meet lay in the power, grace, and form of every UMass swimmer, due in no small part to the fine coaching of Ms. Pat Griffin, who in three years has made this team a serious threat to its opposition.

Varsity M dying too fast

Varsity M is dying. And nobody seems to care. They have temporarily cancelled all their weekly luncheons for lack of a place to serve them. At least for $2.00 per head.

The Newman Center was evacuated late last year in favor of Checquers, due to the parking situation at Newman. And you thought you had it bad. Many an outstanding alumnus had come to the luncheons only to walk out after listening to Dick MacPherson to find no car. He would then have to dial that number that is all too familiar to students who try to get away with parking illegally.

The move to Checquers was a good one. At least for the two weeks they were there. The Club was then informed that the main room at the restaurant was to be redone and that there would be a slight inconvenience to the Club.

The matter of food prices later came up, Checquers wanted more for the luncheon than the members wanted to pay.

Talks are going on now with the Top of the Campus Club in hopes of gaining a new home for the Wednesday meeting that has been the highlight of the campus since I can remember, and I grew up in this town.

The purpose of Varsity M has been diluted by the forming of the Bullpen Club, for baseball boosters. The Court Club, for those who love roundballers, and the newly formed Gridiron Club that held its first banquet Sunday evening.

These three organizations have taken over, on an individual basis, what Varsity M used to do for all the teams.

Who among us will ever even notice the loss of the M Club should it indeed die? Not many. Maybe not even the athletes who benefit so greatly from the help given the Athletic Dept. by this same Club. For the M Club is an organization that operates very quietly, but efficiently.

Varsity M, last fall, bought the travel shirts for the football team and consequently saved each and every ballplayer half of his travel money for ten first road games. They also try to raise scholarship money for the teams that do not get the big budget from the State Legislature.

They do these things so quietly maybe it would be better just to let it fade away into the West as all other good things seem to. I think NOT!!!

All the M Club needs to survive is more members! ANYONE is welcome to join the club and the membership costs a person only $10 per year. One then receives the benefits of a monthly newsletter keeping them informed of the doings in the world of UMass athletics, and other assorted priveledges.

The Club presently has 300 paid members and would feel much better if they had about 2,000. Seem like a lot? You're absolutely right! It is an awful lot of people. But figure in your head how many alumni there are from UMass. Staggerring isn't it?

Letting the M Club die is quite similar to the question of voting. We have an obligation to keep it alive.

This is a call to all sports fans to help the M Club keep its ship afloat. Just think...Maybe several years from now you'll be able to look back at all this and be able to say 'I had something to do with saving the M Club when it needed help the most.' Will you be there in the Club's hour of need? Many of you will be able to say 'yes' I'm sure.

WITH THE GREATEST OF EASE co-captain Rich Seikunas comes in for a landing under the apprehensive eyes of his coach, Tom Dunn.

Key to gymnastics success

Dunn stresses basics

By WALT POWERS

It looked like a family reunion. On the floor of a battered old brick circus tent called the Cage, two groups of young men in blue and maroon suits were intermingling, laughing, shaking hands. You'd never have guessed that a few minutes earlier, the blue suits from Penn State had beaten the maroon suits from UMass for the tenth straight time, but this, in a sense, is what college gymnastics is all about.

"Gymnastics isn't really competitive like football or basketball. It's a highly refined individual sport." says UMass all-around Gene Whelan. I try not to think of my opponents or listen to the crowd, because if I did, I'd ruin my routines."

Most gymnasts are quick to admit, however, that a home crowd and strong opponents exert an important, though indirect, effect on their performances. "It's psychological," said UMass co-captain Rich Seikunas, "You work a lot harder to please them. But because you're concentrating so hard on your routine, you almost never hear them while you're performing."

In this light, the lower than expected scores on Saturday's meet came as a surprise. But other factors were operating. One of them was the cold, which forced the judges to waive an NCAA rule prohibiting pre-event warmups.

"I think the crowd would have helped us more if it had been warmer", said Tom Dunn. "The cold made the floor mats about twice as hard, and it led to small, but important breaks on the pommel horse. The Nittany Lions were unaffected by the crowd. "When you're number one, you get used to playing before lots of people," shrugged high-bar specialist John Bizal. Bizal's comments about the judges were reiterated by almost everybody "They were very conservative. They wouldn't let us get away with anything, and it kept the scores down."

Though the Minutemen succumbed to State for the tenth time in as many tries, the score was the closest ever between the two. If UMass hasn't arrived, it's moving very quickly in the right direction. This progress has coincided wih the growth of the Eastern League. Other conferences may have stronger champions, but the second through sixth teams make the Eastern League the deepest in the country. The conference was strengthened this season when Southern Connecticut, last season's NCAA small-college champion, became an official member.

"This team is much better than the UMass team we faced last year" said veteran Penn State floor-man Dick Young. "Their technique has improved immensely." This improvement has been the major goal of Tom Dunn since he began coaching at UMass last year. His teams have been criticized for the lack of variety in their routines, but they've been successful. Last year was the best in UMass history, and even with the graduation of All-America Jay Aronstein, they appear well on the way to beating last year's record. Dunn's assistant, fellow Penn State alumnus Bob Koenig, summarized this philosophy of coaching.

"We're striving for technical perfection on basic routines. Each gymnast should learn his routine so well that he doesn't need to think about it when he's out on the floor. When a routine becomes an unconscious reaction, the gymnast can concentrate on the finer aspects of his performance like form and technique. We'll get fancy next year. Our team is very young."

Trackmen rank in New England

By SCOTT HAYES

Mike Muska, a member of the UMass Indoor track coaching staff, does more than just help out with the coaching duties. The graduate of the University of Connecticut compiles the results of the New England track meets and organizes the New England performance listings.

Muska's statistical work began at UConn when he worked with the Sports Information Office, as well as the track and cross country teams. Muska started the New England Cross Country Poll and put out the New England Rankings. For his work, Muska was presented with a distinguished service award by the New England Coaches Association last year.

The rankings list the top twelve or thirteen New England performers in every event. Given with the individual, or relay team is the time, distance or height (depending on the event) and date of the performance.

UMass has many performers who have earned a spot in the New England Rankings. The listings include all results up to January 30, 1974. Randy Thomas is fourth in the two-mile, with a time fo 8:57.9 back on December 8, 1973. Teammates Tom Wilson and John McGrail are listed tenth and thirteenth in the longest distance event in indoor track. Wilson was times in 9:08.4, wile McGrail's time was 9:13.2. The top two-miler in New England so far this season has been Charlie Duggan of Springfield. Duggan's 8:45.2 has stood since December 1 of last year.

Bill Gillin and Chris Farmer earned their rankings with two outstanding performances at Storrs, when UMass faced two of the best indoor track teams, UConn and Manhattan. Gillin ran the mile in 4:13.2 and Farmer was right behind with a fine 4:13.4 effort. Keith Francis of Boston College holds top honors in the prestigious event with a time of 4:08.7. Gillin is four positions behind Francis in fifth place, while teammate Farmer is in sixth.

Bob and Ken Adamson are among the top jumpers in New England. Bob is in third place in the triple jump at 46'4½". Ken has jumped 45'11¾", good for fifth place. Abe Davis of Springfield is in first place with a leap of 48'1½". UMass has three jumpers among the top long jump competitors. Bob Adamson leads the trio of UMass leapers with a second place effort of 22'11¾". Ken Adamson holds the fourth position and Mike Geraghty is in seventh place with a jump of 22'2½".

In the 600-yard run, Barron Littlefield and Steve Crimmin are in ninth and thirteenth, respectively. Littlefield was timed in 1:13.9 and Crimmin was clocked at 1:14.2 in the UConn-Manhattan Tri-Meet.

Jim Hennessy's 6.5 in the 50-yard high hurdles earned him third spot in the hurdling competition. Curt Stegerwald is in sixth with a time of 6.6.

Tony Pendleton and Bob Adamson are involved in a six way tie for second in the 50-yard dash. Pendleton and Adamson both ran the dash in 5.5 in the highly competitive meet at Storrs.

Steve Crimmin is in the fifth position in the 440-yard dash results. The only other UMass individual performer in the listings is Devin Croft. The half-miler was timed in 1:54.2, and that time is good enough for third place in the 880.

In the relays, the UMass distance-medley relay team holds top position with a performance that took place on December 19, 1973. The two-mile relay team of John Maloney, Chris Farmer, Jim Hunt and Devin Croft broke the school record in that event with a time of 7:45.8. The quartet's time erased the previous record of 7:49.3. Co-captain Maloney led the relay squad to its record-breaking performance on December 11 of last year. The mile relay team is ranked seventh with a time of 3:26.2.

SHORT SPRINTS — Coach Ken O'Brien is Secretary-Treasurer of the New England Coaches Association. As a result, all the statistics of all the New England meets come into O'Briens's office. Then, Muska takes over and uses the results to make up the regional listings. Northeastern's victory over UMass upped the Huskies record to 6-0. NU has to be the co-favorite along with defending champion UConn to take the New England championships coming up on February 23. Minutemen travel to Hanover N.H. on Friday to take on Dartmouth and the University of New Hampshire. Meet time is at 6:00 p.m., not 1:00 p.m. as listed on the Winter Athletic Schedule. Dan Grigus is tied with Dave Sadowsky, Bob Murray, John Kamb and Dennis Lombardo for the school record in the pole vault. Sadowsky cleared the height in 1965, while Murray did it in 1966. Kamb vaulted 13'6" in 1971 and Lombardo went down in the record books last season.

Men swimmers edge MIT

The men's varsity 400 yard relay swim team set a new school and pool record with a time of 3:27.5 to win the dual meet over M.I.T. last Saturday in Boyden Pool 60-53.

The meet was tied at 53 all going into the final relay when Ron Boucher led off for UMass. Joe Herbert and Duncan Lomis held down the middle quarters building a substantial lead. Dick Blaisdell was the key to breaking the record, as he put in a fast .47.5 hundred.

Boucher, also a breaststroker, broke the school record in the 200 yd. breaststroke event by .9 seconds. Ben Crooker captured first place in both the 500 and 1000 yard free style events.

The men swimmers are now just barely under the .500 mark with a record of 3-4. "We have been working very hard and should finish strongly this year. Most of the guys are waiting for the New Englands that are held in March," said coach Bey Malamad.

UMass scores in AP poll

By MDC STAFF

National recognition may finally be coming to the UMass basketball team. Though not quite making it this week, the Minutemen did gain votes for the AP top twenty. UCLA, once again, leads the pack, followed by N. Carolina St., Notre Dame, N. Carolina, Vanderbilt, Marquette, Maryland, Alabama, Long Beach, and Pitt in the top ten.

The second ten includes Providence, Indiana, S. Carolina, USC, Louisville, Michigan, Kansas, Tex.-El Paso, Oral Roberts, and Md.-Eastern Shore.

Out of the lion's den

By JOHN BOCK

It was a chance to see an honest-to-goodness nationally prominent college athletic team perform within the confines of Curry Hicks Cage. About 3200 UMies kept the Cage's reputation for stellar crowd performance intact as they left the Penn State Nittan Lions Gymnasts with the feeling that nothing less than the performances they turned in would have pleased them.

The temperature inside was the only factor that put a chill on the crowd. For a while PSU was asking where the sides of beef were hung but after explanations about "energy crisis" and a sudden brilliant performance by UMass on the long horse vault, they decided to turn their attention to the meet and ho-hummedly swept the rest of the events.

In pre-meet briefings and a chance viewing of the Lions against Springfield College, I found out that the man to watch for PSU was All-American Jim Kruest. I spent the day being impressed by this gymnast's cool appreciation of whatever event he was on. If it looked like only a real piece of showmanship would score then Kruest threw it as if he were throwing his compulsory routine.

I was really impressed when he scored a 9.35 on the high bar with a routine that was next to spectacular in his smoothness and cleaness. In a conversation with this soft spoken PSU star he assured me that the Lions did not consider UMass a team to be taken lightly. "We had to really throw our best stuff because we knew that it would be a close meet if we decided to slack off."

Kruest is married and I asked him if he thought it affected his performance or dedication to the sport. "It really works out pretty well because I get through practice and get home before my wife does and she understands about traveling."

The man who introduced me to Kruest was Penn State's Super Coach — Gene Wettstone. As I stood there listening to the former Olympic coach my thoughts drifted to the memories of Penn State with that same blue and white lion emblazoned on the warm up jackets of the football team as they stormed across the fields for confrontations with other football giants like Oklahoma and Texas. They represented State against the best competition they could find. Likewise Wettstone and his gym men.

"I think UMass is a team that has not jelled yet" said Coach Wettstone, the nation's foremost promoter of gymnastics. "They could come along real strong as soon as they recognize how good they really are."

The Lions are currently number one in the nation and it is only natural that I asked about how hosting the nationals would affect Penn State. "I believe that we really don't have all the experienced gymnasts to give us the championship but I do believe, more importantly, that if we can get the team to peak at the right time we do have the men to pull some surprises. It will be the same story for any other team that qualifies from the EIGL this year — if they peak at the right ime they can do the same.

"Holding any gymnastics meet at Penn State has never hurt any of our teams" smiled Wettstone. In the next two weeks PSU will face Southern Connecticut — the only team to beat them last season. UMass meets Southern Conn. Thursday night at home, and PSU assured me they would anxiously await the results. Then it is on to Ann Arbor where they face Big Ten champs Michigan in an extra-league contest.

They came from out of the Lion's Den to a Cage and continue on — untamed.

Under Sargent's plan a station will show a green flag if there is gas, a red flag if there isn't, and a yellow flag only for emergency vehicles.

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — A voluntary plan asking drivers to stay away from the gasoline pumps every other day goes into effect Monday in Massachusetts, Gov. Francis Sargent said Tuesday.

The "modified Oregon plan" asks that motorists with even-numbered license plates buy gas on even-numbered dates and those with odd-numbered or vanity plates buy gas on odd-numbered dates.

Among other provisions:

—Drivers whose plates end with a single letter should go by the last digit in their license plate number.

—Zeros are treated as even numbers.

—Stations should stay closed on Sundays.

—Both evens and odds may buy gasoline on the 31st day of each month.

Sargent also announced at a news conference that he would meet with Federal Energy chief William Simon in Washington on Wednesday to seek a greater gasoline supply for the state. "There are very strong indications that Massachusetts is not receiving its fair share of gasoline," Sargent said.

"Massachusetts will not become a dumping ground for the nation's shortages," the governor said.

Plans similar to Massachusetts' new one have been tried in Hawaii and Oregon. Hawaii's is mandatory and Oregon's is voluntary.

Under the voluntary plan announced by Sargent, no driver could buy less than $3 worth of gasoline. This, the governor said, is to prevent motorists from topping off their tanks, a practice which has contributed to the long lines at gas stations.

Stations will be requested to display a green flag if they are selling gasoline; a red flag is no gas is for sale, and a yellow flag if only commercial and emergency vehicles are being serviced.

Sargent said emergency and commercial vehicles, out-of-state cars and handicapped persons will be exempt from the program.

The Retail Gasoline Dealers Association reacted favorably to the plan at a meeting Tuesday morning, Sargent said.

He said he also will ask the governors of other New England states to implement similar plans because the "whole New England area is being short changed."

Sargent also announced that he would file legislation to make the Massachusetts program mandatory if it doesn't work on a voluntary basis.

"A fair distribution plan is now needed in this state, and we are acting to institute one," Sargent said.

But, according to Sargent:

—"In Massachusetts twice as many stations have reduced their hours compared to the rest of the nation.

—"And in Massachusetts, overall inventories of gasoline are more than twice as short compared with the nation as a whole."

Sargent said the federal government admits that shortages in New England are worse than the rest of the nation, "yet instead of helping with more gasoline, the federal government tells us to go it alone...We will not accept reduced supplies so that other states can continue as if nothing is wrong."

Nothing to stop Judge from withholding oath verdict

By MARK VOGLER

There is no legal impediment barring Judge Joseph S. Mitchell, Jr. from withholding a verdict on the controversial state loyalty oath court case, the judge and two lawyers conceded yesterday.

Faculty and staff members from UMass and Berkshire Community College who have refused to ascribe to the 1949 law, have awaited a definitive legal opinion from Middlesex County Superior Court since last spring.

The loyalty oath is a pledge of allegance which state employees must swear to the Commonwealth and the United States before they can begin work.

Judge Mitchell told the Collegian in a telephone interview Monday that it would be in the best interests of everyone involved for him to "sit" on the decision.

Mitchell maintains the only two "likely possibilities" resulting from his final judgment would be the termination of hundreds of personnel from UMass and BCC — or a direct challange being leveled at the U.S. Supreme Court.

Attys. William A. Norris of Cummington and Stephen H. Oleskey of Boston, legal counsel for three groups who are challenging the oath, said yesterday they expect a verdict and will seek one if it doesn't come soon.

Mitchell said he has a legal opinion "thought out in my mind". But he will not release it unless "someone wants to stir up the animals."

Warning that the press would be "ill advised" to seek a final opinion of the case, Mitchell said "Why not let sleeping dogs lie for a while.

"I don't know whether the political climate is such that we'll regress another 25 years. I don't want to take the chance of us going 'witch hunting' again. But nobody will do it unless provoked."

Mitchell would not indicate what his verdict is, but asserted "it will cause a lot of pain for a lot of people."

Norris, who is representing 18 faculty and staff from UMass-Amherst and a group of 33 from BCC, said yesterday that he is "pretty confident" that Mitchell's verdict is a favorable one for the oath opponents.

He said he would contact his clients to see whether they would want an immediate decision from the judge.

"Personally, I find the judge's handling of this as a blockage of justice, and I would like to know his final opinion. If it's not favorable, then we'll appeal it," Norris said.

"One judge should not take it upon himself to stop judicial process. We ought to have a decision. The oath is invalid legally and ought to be knocked off the books."

Oleskey said he never approached Mitchell, but thought a verdict was "forthcoming."

"I've had a verdict handed down within two days, others have taken as long as two years. I do expect Judge Mitchell will issue one in due time," Oleskey said.

He is the legal counsel for the three UMass-Boston professors who filed a class action suit against the University Sept. 21, 1972 which bars dismissal of anyone who refuses the oath on employment.

Both lawyers said they were concerned about the time limit on their preliminary injunctions which block the dismissal of anybody refusing to sign the oath.

Mitchell said the injunctions can legally "last forever, until such time that somebody comes into court and asks that they be disolved."

He said he considered that matter to be in "the press' hands."

Truckers reject offer of deisel price freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators for striking independent truck drivers rejected President Nixon's decision to immediately freeze diesel fuel prices late last night as inadequate and recommended the truckers continue their shutdown.

"We recommend the drivers continue to stand down and not return to work," said Leonard Fleet in announcing the truckers' decision.

Fleet, an attorney for the Council of Independent Truckers and a key spokesman for the negotiating committee, said the administration's efforts to halt the strike did not meet their needs.

The rejection of the administration's measures to end the dispute was announced by Fleet at a news conference after the negotiating committee met more than four hours. Negotiations to bring the crippling strike to an end began here Sunday at the instigation of Pennsylvania Gov. Milton J. Shapp.

Despite the rejection, he said the truckers were willing to continue negotiating here "as long and hard as necessary to bring this to a just solution."

Independent trucking operators, he said, "can no longer be made the scapegoat for absorbing the rapidly rising costs of moving goods."

The decision of the truckers came several hours after federal energy chief William E. Simon announced that Nixon had ordered diesel fuel prices frozen until the end of February, or until Congress acted on legislation permitting the independents to pass along increased fuel costs.

Fleet said the drivers wanted assurances that the price freeze would remain in effect "as long as necessary" until Congress had acted. He also said the truckers would not go back to work until they had immediate authority to levy an additional five per cent surcharge on shipments.

Layoffs continued at meat packers and industries dependent upon trucking. More than 75,000 workers have been furloughed since the shutdown over diesel

New Africa House Exhibit: a step into unity

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

An art exhibit that for the first time combines work by both white and minority artists went on display earlier this week at the New Africa House art gallery.

The exhibit, hailed as the beginning of a close understanding among different ethnic and cultural groups on campus, includes the work of fifty UMass students.

Textile designs, sculptures and paintings are intermixed with pieces of African art already acquired by the Gallery.

Among visitors at a reception for the new art show Sunday evening were campus Chancellor Randolf W. Bromery, Arts and Humanities Dean Jeremiah M. Allen. Allen, in short but precise statement called the exhibition "great."

Groundwork for the exhibit was layed by two professors in the W.E.B. DuBois department of Afro-American studies -- Prof. Raymond R. Miles, a sculptor; and Femi Richards, from Sierra Leone, Africa. Richards is an ex-consultant in cultural affairs for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural organization.

The exhibition includes work by students of both Richards and Miles. Miles has solicited the art work in classes as part of an effort to provide more opportunities for students.

Mary Byron, a UMass student from Northampton will have her work shown as part of the display. She took her first class in African and Afro-American art last semester, and became interested in ethnic art while taking a textile design course.

More cross-cultural exhibitions are planned, according to Michael M. Thelwell, head of the Dubois department on campus. He said the ratio of Afro-American to White American students in his department is 60:40. Theiwell's concern for having more integrated art shows was also expressed by Prof. Chester Davis, the sub-director of the Afro-Am studies department.

The exhibit may well be the first step in the creation of unity, better understanding, and more cooperation among different ethnic-and cultural groups on campus.

It is obvious that Chancellor Bromery, chairman Thelwell and professors Cole and Miles are proud to participate in the historical transaction of the W.E.B. DuBois papers acquired by UMass last summer.

The papers are by the noted scholar and philosopher William E. B. DuBois, considered a set of documents of national importance by most scholars. They are housed on the top floor of the library tower in paper boxes. They are not available to the public.

The persons attending last Sunday's reception and those who have already gone to see the exhibition all expressa positive feeling for an integrated exhibit.

Gary Owens, of Hampshire College, said the exhibit is "so powerful" that he would like to see others at the campuses of the other four colleges, Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges.

And for the nearly fifty students participating in the exhibit as contributors, the statement one unidentified woman artist could be motivating.

The woman artist said she was proud when Chancellor Bromery began to look at each piece carefully.

(The exhibit will be open until February 14 in the New Africa House Gallery, in the Central residence area. Gallery hours are from 10:00 to 5:00 p.m. weekdays.)

Trucking strike may affect People's Market

By LARRY CARPMAN

The People's Market is worried.

There is a possibility that when the market opens officially on Monday there may be fewer vegetables and fruit to choose from. The continuing truckers strike is causing spot temporary shortages of produce.

"Produce adds a lot to the store," said Patti Gibney, one of the coordinators of the People's Market.

"Over half our business is fruit and vegetables," she said.

A spokesman for the Pinecrest Produce Company which supplies the People's Market said: "Everyday brings up something else--one day something could be in short supply and the next day we'd have it. There is a temporary shortage," he said.

The spokesman said a trailer truck headed for his company from California had been delayed in Chicago when three of its tires were slashed at a rest stop.

Another People's Market supplier, The Charden Cheese Company, may also have some delays or shortages.

"Some of our deliveries are okay," a spokesman said. "Trucks from Florida and Pennsylvania may be delayed, though," he said.

Ms. Gibney cited another problem the market may have in getting all the produce it orders.

"Being a small place we get the shaft a lot," she said.

Meanwhile a Collegian survey of the Amherst area supermarkets revealed that only temporary and small shortages exist. The large food chains have their own trucks and so far have not been faced with shortages of any great degree.

The market which was opened last year at this time is a non-profit student co-op. It deals in fresh garden produce, grains or cereals, dairy products, and some health foods.

The market started with a loan of $4,000 from the Commuter Assembly.

Ski conditions are excellent

Weathermen are predicting snow tomorrow as local ski resorts are reporting good to excellent ski conditions.

Berkshire East has a 6" to 42" base with 6" to 8" of manmade snow. They say conditions are excellent on No. 2 chair, the Broken Arrow slope, and the novice slope.

Mt. Thom has a 12" to 30" base with good to excellent ski conditions on all slopes.

Weathermen say there is a better than 50 per cent chance of snow, though they are not quite sure at this time how much will fall.

Campus conservation's looking good

A 13 to 15 percent annual fuel savings will be achieved on campus if energy conservation continues at its present rate, according to statistics released by UMass physical plant officials.

In November when the campus began its effort to save energy, the UMass administration announced a 15 percent fuel savings goal.

An anticipated one million gallons of oil will be saved this year, compared to last year. Measured in money, that's about $315,000. Consumption of electricity has also been reduced, by 22.5 percent this January as compared to January, 1973.

In releasing the statistics, UMass officials noted that more energy conservation measures are being considered.

So far, thermostats on campus have been lowered by four to six degrees to 68 degrees, and during the January intersession they were brought down to 55 degrees in 80 percent of campus buildings. Power reduction measures on campus have also included a campaign to get people to walk more and ride those electrically powered elevators less. Elevator doors bear signs which read: "Walk don't ride; conserve energy." To remind people to turn off lights not in use, signs on light switches read: "Kill-A-Watt; conserve energy."

The UMass power plant uses coal and oil — coal supplying two-thirds the energy for campus, and oil supplying the other third, however energy savings statistics released give the savings totally in terms of oil, and totally in terms of coal, for convenient comparison.

Nixon vows improving health care system

By FRANK CAREY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Tuesday that his national health insurance proposal would strengthen the present health care system, not destroy it.

It is one, he said, under which "our entire health care system would not be placed under the heavy hand of the federal government."

Nixon gave a preview of his program in a speech to the annual convention of the American Hospital Association.

The proposals are to be sent to Congress Wednesday in a special message.

Under his plan, Nixon said, "we would continue to rely on partnership, not paternalism."

"Let us have a program where our doctors would work for their patients, not for the federal government," he said.

Under the Nixon proposals, a three-part system would be involved:

1. A special employment plan under which employer-employe contributions would cover health insurance premiums for employed persons, with the employer paying the bulk.

2. A government assistance plan to cover people with low incomes and "those who can't purchase health insurance at a reasonable cost, such as those already in poor health or those whose work entails risk."

3. A plan under which the existing Medicare program for persons 65 and over would be continued "but... would offer improved benefits matching those in the other plans."

There had been some speculation recently that the Medicare system, as such, would be discontinued.

"Coverage under all three plans would be identical," the President said.

"It would finance virtually all of the health protection people need — hospital and physician's care in and out of the hospital, drugs, laboratory tests, X-ray, medical devices, ambulance service, treatment of children, catastrophic illness, and even mental illness, including alcoholism and drug abuse."

Dispute grows over subpoenaed tapes

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House has made a written response to special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski's request for continued access to tapes and documents. A meeting is scheduled later this week to resolve a growing dispute.

The letter, from White House Watergate lawyer James D. St. Clair was termed "a lengthy communication" by a spokesman in the special prosecutor's office. The spokesman said it "will require further clarification and further discussion between Mr. Jaworski and Mr. St. Clair.

He added there will be no further comment until after the meeting, expected when Jaworski returns from a trip to Texas. There was no elaboration about what the letter said.

What is being sought by Jaworski isn't known and neither the White House nor the special prosecutor will say.

After relaxing its grip on non-subpoenaed material late last year even allowing an assistant special prosecutor to go through a file cabinet - there has been an obvious hardening in the White House attitude toward supplying all that Jaworski is asking for.

President Nixon signaled that in his State of the Union message when he said "I believe that I have provided all the material that he, Jaworski, needs to conclude his investigations and to proceed to prosecute the guilty and to clear the innocent."

St. Clair, the following day, told newsmen "there has to come an end at some point and we'll just have to consider the circumstances as they hereafter occur."

In a television interview last Sunday on ABC's "Issues and Answers" Jaworski acknowledged he had requested more documents and tapes from the White House and that he expected a decision Monday.

But the day passed with only the word from Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren that "this matter will be discussed in...confidential conversations and communications" between St. Clair and Jaworski. That led to Tuesday's announcement from Jaworski's office about the lengthy communication.

Jaworski left open the question of whether he will go to court as his predecessor, Archibald Cox, did. The White House eventually gave up that fight, but by then Cox had been fired for refusing to stop pursuing the matter in court.

Negotiations stepped up to resolve trucker strike prices and freight rates began last Thursday.

Meanwhile, there were scattered demonstrations and outbreaks of violence in New England as truckers joined the national protest against high prices of diesel fuel, lowered speed limits and low profit margins.

In Shrewsbury, a Massachusetts legislator told a truckers' rally that he would go to Washington later this week to present a plan he said would bring a quick end to the protest.

Rep. Richard McGrath, D-Watertown, chairman of the legislature's Committee on Overloaded Trucks, said one point of his plan would be a rollback of diesel fuel prices to prices in effect six months ago.

The freeze on diesel prices would do nothing to allow independent truckers to pass on their increased costs. They have been absorbing decreased revenues because of the sky-rocketing fuel prices.

And some of the truckers have maintained they will not roll their rigs again until their losses are made up.

Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz, in Kansas City for a speech, said that if the shutdown continues it will have a serious impact, especially on perishable food. He said that hundreds of millions of dollars worth of food could be lost.

Midwest stock markets reported another decline in the number of hogs and cattle available for sale. Eleven major markets said they received only 16,300 hogs yesterday — 32,000 less than a week ago.

The Senate Commerce Committee voted yesterday to speed federal action to permit truckers to pass on increased fuel costs to truck companies, and Pennsylvania said truckers operating in its boundaries could tack on a two per cent surcharge to cover increased costs.

Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe said the Justice Department would take steps to prevent the violence that has marred the shutdown.

Truck deliveries to the main produce center in New England were reported down 75 per cent; a Washington, D.C., wholesaler said the only meat in town was brought in last week.

The National Milk Producers Federation said the truck threatens the flow of milk from farms to big eastern city markets.

Pennsylvania State Police said there were 53 reports of violence — including four shootings — in the 24 hour period that ended at 8 yesterday morning. A spokesman said 10 arrests had been made.

Nixon flexible with budget

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is ready to compromise with Congress to get some of his budget and legislative programs through this year, a top budget official says.

"We've only got three years left," said Fred Malek, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget. "We're willing to give a little in certain areas to achieve some progress."

In Nixon's fiscal 1975 budget message to Congress, there were no threats of vetoes or program cutbacks as there were the previous year.

Malek said that "as we get closer and closer to the end of the term," and having learned from working with Congress in the past five years, "we feel that we should work more closely with them and be willing to compromise somewhat in order to move the ball ahead."

Lowered speed limits won't affect insurance rates

By JEFFREY D. ALDERMAN
Associated Press Writer

If you expected to have your auto insurance rates drop because of lowered speed limits, forget it. But the energy crisis may save you money on insurance bills in other ways.

A survey by The Associated Press shows that most insurance companies have no current plans to drop their rates because of the reduced speed limits brought on by the energy shortage.

More than half the states already have lowered speed limits to 55 m.p.h. The reduction is to become nationwide at the beginning of March.

The insurance companies give these reasons:

—They base their rates on how much the average accident costs as well as the number of accidents that occur. Repair costs have been rising because of inflation.

—Most accidents happen within about five miles of the insured person's home and not on the high-speed highways where limits have dropped.

—It's still too early to tell what effect, if any, lower speeds will have on the number of accidents and their severity.

But the crisis has produced some ways to save on auto insurance, the companies report — if you do something more than lower your speed.

Since there is a general shortage of gasoline, many people are driving fewer miles than before. Those that can prove this to their insurance company may get a rate reduction.

Most insurance companies also will drop your rates if you join a car pool. Allstate Insurance Co., the No. 2 auto insurer in the country after State Farm, has instituted a car pool rate that it says could reduce an individual's annual insurance by 22 per cent. The rate is based on the number of miles an individual drives to work, membership in a car pool and his annual driving mileage. State Farm has started a similar plan which it says reduces rates from 10 to 36 per cent.

Insurance firms have always given lower insurance rates to people who use their cars only for recreation. So if you recently changed from car to bus or train to get to work and save gasoline, you may be in for a reduction.

Insurance executives do say that the frequency of accidents could drop because of the energy crisis, but few expect it to be because of the lowered speed limits. Most say it would come from less total driving because gasoline is hard to find.

"Only a small percentage of all accidents occur at speed greater than 55 miles an hour," a State Farm spokesman said at the company's headquarters in Bloomington, Ill.

He said that the large number of small cars now being purchased by motorists to conserve gasoline could also keep rates up. Accidents in small cars are of an "increased severity," he said, meaning more hospital and doctors' costs.

Congressional election dampened by gas shortage and snow

By WILLIAM DIMASCIO
Associated Press Writer

JOHNSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Snow and the gasoline shortage hampered voters yesterday in a special congressional election where Democrats hit the Nixon administration on economics and Watergate.

Political analysts said the election for the seat held by Republican John P. Sayler for 25 years could be a testing ground for the impact of Watergate and administration policies in the off-year congressional elections in November.

Republicans were optimistic they could pull it out for Harry M. Fox, 49, Saylor's former administrative assistant, who faced Democrat John P. Murtha Jr. in this district of coal mines, steel mills and truck farms. Saylor died last October.

Murtha, 41, a state legislator, predicted victory by at least 6,000 votes in the six-county 12th District where Democrats have an edge of 8,000 among the 223,000 eligible voters.

Officials in both camps had estimated a 55 per cent turnout, but a scattered sampling of precincts at midday indicated something less.

Most gasoline stations in the area ran dry during the weekend and resupply was aggravated by the independent truckers' strike. A Fox spokesman said the gasoline situation would hurt the Republicans, whose strength is in rural areas where polling places are scattered.

Polls were open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. A third candidate, Duane H. McCormick, 70, was on the ballot, but was inactive for most of the campaign.

Murtha, a Vietnam veteran who like Fox opposes abortion and favors the death penalty, ran unsuccessfully against Saylor six years ago.

Syrians, Israelis clash

Syrian and Israeli artillery exchanged fire again today on the Golan Heights where Syria claimed Monday it knocked out six Israeli tanks and 20 artillery batteries, Damascus radio said.

The Syrian radio said today's firing "resulted in a number of casualties in the enemy lines."

There was no immediate comment by the Israeli command, which said two of its soldiers were wounded in Monday's two-hour tank and artillery battle.

Today's clash was the 11th consecutive day of fighting on the Golan Heights, Syrian territory captured by Israel in the 1967 and 1973 Arab-Israeli wars.

Regarding the separation of the Egyptian and Israeli armies along the Suez Canal, the Israeli state radio said today that Israeli troops will not withdraw entirely from the west bank of the canal until Egypt dismantles its missile sites on both banks of the waterway.

All-out strike for Britain's miners

By FRED COLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Britain's coal miners decided yesterday on an all-out national strike that could paralyze the country's industry by spring.

They vowed to lay down their tools Sunday. In response, Derek Ezra, chairman of the state-run National Coal Board, warned that Britain faces "a catastrophe unparalleled in our postwar industrial history."

Ezra, whose Coal Board employs the nation's 280,000 miners, urged the unions and the government to get together for last-minute talks to avert a stoppage.

But Joe Gormley, president of the National Union of Mineworkers, refused further talks unless the government "puts more cash on the table."

Prime Minister Edward Heath, answering questions in the House of Commons, charged that the miners' union had never been prepared to negotiate any aspect of their pay claim.

Announcement of the strike date by Gormley sent prices plunging to a six-year low on the London Stock Exchange. About $1.4 billion was wiped off the value of British-based companies.

About 70 per cent of the nation's electricity supply comes from coal. Coal stocks are already down a third because of the overtime ban the miners have conducted since November to back up their demands for higher pay.

The Heath government put the nation on a three-day work week Jan. 1 to conserve fuel supplies. An all-out strike raises the threat of a two-day work week, further production losses, a rundown of coal supplies by late March and eventually a shutdown of British industry.

The only bright spot in the picture was an assurance from Gormely that hospitals, schools and old-age pensioners would get coal supplies even if striking miners have to deliver it themselves.

But Gormley told newsmen miners wanted other unions to ensure that supplies of energy are unable to be transported around the country freely during the strike.

Asked how long the miners were prepared to strike, Gormley replied: "As long as the members feel it is necessary."

The rank and file voted last week 81 per cent in favor of authorizing Gormley's executive to call a strike. The miners stopped work for six weeks in 1972 before winning a 25 per cent pay raise. The difference this time is that there is no more cheap oil to import so electricity generators can be kept going without coal.

The miners this time want pay raises of $17.60 to $28.80 a week, about 30 per cent. Unskilled miners now make $55.63 a week and skilled underground workers get $79.83.

The Heath government has offered a 7 per cent raise, but insists any more would break its wage controls ordered to halt inflation.

Kent State guardsman requests immunity

By CHARLES R. HORNICK
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — An ex-Ohio National Guardsman called before the Kent State federal grand jury refused to testigy yesterday and asked for full immunity, his attorney said.

C.D. Lambros of Cleveland said James Pierce, one of his clients, pleaded the Fifth Amendment right to protection from self-incrimination when he was called to testify.

Lambros said Pierce was read his rights by Justice Department representatives. Lambros has previously said he believes any witness to whom rights are read is a potential target of indictment.

Pierce, a Kent State student in 1970, was mobilized as a member the Guard's Troop G, 107th Armored Cavalry, when it was ordered onto the university campus May 2, 1970 to control student demonstrations protesting U.S. military involvement in Cambodia.

Pierce is among those listed by the Guard as having fired his gun on May 4 when Guardsmen opened fire on students. Four students were killed, and nine wounded.

The energy crisis

Illuminated ads ban to be lifted; called a "failure"

By DICK BRAUDE
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Outdoor Advertising Board is about to back off from its emergency regulation which puts a total ban on illumination of all billboards and signs that use electricity or any other power source.

The regulation, adopted Nov. 15 on energy conservation orders from Gov. Francis W. Sargent, has proved to be an almost total failure, board chairman Charles C. Cabot Jr. said Tuesday.

The Massachusetts Outdoor Advertising Council, a billboard industry association, took the emergency regulation to Superior Court in Boston where the case is pending and billboard owners have ignored the ban ever since.

The state board is expected to announce tomorrow or Thursday that the emergency regulation will be modified from a 24-hour ban to one that sets specific hours when the ban would be in effect.

Cabot also held out the possibility that the ban on illuminated advertising — specifically billboards and signs not on business premises — could be revoked entirely. He said the three-member board has not yet decided what to do.

"It's no secret that the industry hasn't observed the ban," Cabot said.

But he also said that the state board is concerned that it may not be "fair" to single out the outdoor advertising industry for great sacrifices during the energy shortage.

"There's legitimate concern that we're picking on one industry just because it's visible," he said.

"No doubt there's a bad psychological effect on people who see these signs turned on then go home to a cold house," Cabot said. "But what we need is a regulation that has an impact on more than one business."

Cabot also said that the board has a difficult task in trying to enforce any state-wide regulations.

The billboard lighting ban was ordered in the wake of Sargent's call for government action on the energy crisis.

On Nov. 15, the Outdoor Advertising board said it was "in agreement with the governor that the critical nature of the present energy crisis justifies the implementation of the emergency regulation."

"We recognize and regret that this regulation may work hardship on the outdoor advertising industry, but urgently request and anticipate the industry's cooperation in the broadly based effort to conserve scarce energy resources."

Cabot, who was appointed to the advertising board by Sargent, said Tuesday that a major problem has been the lack of "across-the-board state regulations" by other government agencies to deal with the energy crisis, thus putting extra pressure on the advertising board and the billboard industry.

MBTA reveals solar lighting system

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority has unveiled a solar-powered second back-up emergency lighting system for rapid transit trains.

The solar cells are energized by solar panels on a train's roof. The cells can be recharged within 24 hours with enough energy to illuminate a train for three hours, an MBRA spokesman said.

The system is a second backup for the original emergency battery lights installed last year following a series of fires on MBTA trains, the spokesman said.

They key point of the system is its low cost per train — about 1600 for installation and $12 a year for maintenance, MBTA General Manager Joseph C. Kelly said.

The solar system, a spin-off of the nation's space program, is a pilot project for the nation's mass transit industry.

Siphoning gas nixed

BOSTON (AP) — Despite warnings of health hazards, Boston residents have been siphoning gasoline.

The emergency ward at Massachusetts General Hospital treated eight cases of gasoline ingestion last week, a hospital spokesman said.

One of the eight patients was admitted overnight, the others were treated and released.

Federal allocations blamed for NE gas shortage

WASHINGTON (AP) — New England is suffering more from the gasoline shortage than any other section of the country because of short-sightedness in federal allocations, Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R-N.H., said today.

"It's up to you to act to direct more gasoline into New England without delay," Wyman told Federal Energy Administrator William Simon.

"Congress gave you the authority to allocate a year ago. We even made it mandatory. This was so the burden of shortages would fall equally on the various regions of the country," Wyman told Simon.

"The burden if the gasoline shortage in New England at this moment is much heavier than in other parts of the country.

"Present distribution formulas are short-sighted."

Basin allocations on 1972 sales is the source of the problem, Wyman said.

"The trouble with this is that in 1972 there was a big movement by the automobile to the South.

"Distributions of gasoline under this formula to filling stations in Georgia, for example, are such that many of them have more gas than they can sell, while distributions to stations in the Northeast are too small."

He said there are indications "some major oil companies are distributing greater percentages of gas to the West than to the geographically further East."

In Concord, N.H., Paul Nelson, executive director of the Governor's Energy Council, echoed Wyman's criticism of the federal allocations.

Nelson said the major cause of the state's gasoline shortage is a new federal allotment program.

Learning to ski all over again:

The making of ski instructors

From the basic straight snowplow.....

by harry charych

...to shortswings.

By HARRY CHARYCH

Last weekend fifty of the more advanced skiers from UMass were up at Berkshire East Ski Area. The reason they were there was not to compete in a hot dog contest or to run gates in a slolom race, but to learn such advanced ski maneuvers as the snowplow, snowplow turn, abstem christie, and all the other basic maneuvers that a beginner would encounter. These experts were learning to be ski instructors and were participating in a unique, 1 credit phys ed course sponsored by the UMass ski club and Berkshire East Ski Area.

Since the teaching method used at Berkshire East is the new accelerated Teaching Method, many of the maneuvers were totally unfamiliar to some of the advanced skiers and they got a taste of what it feels like to be a beginner again. To the advanced skier it was strange to hear the Berkshire East instructors conducting the course yell things like "keep those skies further apart" or "stem those skies more." These are maneuvers which advanced skiers try to stay away from, but to teach skiing to beginners one has to ski and demonstrate like a beginner. Those that displayed exceptional teaching and skiing ability were hired by the Berkshire East Ski School as part-time instructors.

The course will be offered again this semester. Those wishing more information can get it at a UMass Ski Club meeting.

Hans Auer, ski school director, grades the participants and looks for potential employees.

Learning new things can create mishaps.

N.E. grocers predict shortages from truck strike

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Food dealers predict that supplies of meat, vegetables and fruit will begin disappearing from grocery store shelves by this weekend in New England because of the truckers' strike.

Small grocers, independent markets, restaurants, schools and institutions would be hardest hit by the action, industry spokesmen said yesterday. But some supermarket chains also said the outlook was grim.

Meanwhile, there were scattered outbreaks of violence in New England as truckers joined the national protest against high prices of diesel fuel, lower speed limits and low profit margins.

Florida-grown produce would be in extremely short supply because it is shipped mainly by truck, according to Roger Pevear, market manager of the New England Produce Center in Chelsea.

Pevear said truck deliveries to the center, which he called the major control point for produce distribution to New England and eastern New York, were off by 75 per cent yesterday.

By the weekend, he said, chicory, radishes, parsley, peppers, beans, squash, eggplant, escarole, oranges and grapefruit would be scarce.

A spokesman for A&P food stores said, "If this isn't settled, by this time next week, we'll have serious problems, mostly in meats, fresh fruits and vegetables. There could very well be shortages by the weekend."

A&P has about 250 markets in New England. As a stopgap measure, A&P said it was flying 70,000 pounds of beef from Chicago to Boston.

First National, another large New England supermarket chain, said it had managed to convert all of its usual truck shipments to railroads, and although there might be delays, no shortages were expected. The chain has 200 stores in the six-state region.

In Rhode Island, meat suppliers said they were running out of beef, pork and lamb. "The impact is going to be felt by the consumer," said Jacob Harpootian, operator of the Royal Packing Co. in East Providence. "I think they're going to be in tough shape by next week. They're not going to be able to fund too much in the way of red meat."

In Mars Hill, Maine, about 100 independent truckers voted Monday night not to take any shipping orders through Sunday. Many of the truckers haul potatoes to southern New England markets.

Among scattered incidents of violence, a Rockland trucker suffered minor injuries yesterday when a rock smashed through the windshield of his cab on Interstate 95 near Warwick, R.I.

In Auburn, Mass., police said a trucker was threatened by four men armed with a sawed off shotgun, but no shots were fired.

Two governors react...

Meskill

HARTFORD (AP) — Gov. Thomas J. Meskill yesterday told three representatives of independent truckers he would review state fuel taxes and highway weight limits, and the truckers promised Meskill their protests would continue nonviolently.

The meeting came after independent truckers, angered by high-priced diesel fuel and lowered speed limits, shut down four truck stops last weekend and reduced truck traffic throughout the state.

After meeting with the truckers for more than an hour, Meskill told a news conference the tax and weight restrictions would be reviewed, but he made no commitment to change them. He said solutions to most of the truckers' problems would have to come from Washington.

The truckers, Jack Dadonna of Oakville, John Pinchot of Naugatuck and Dan O'Brien of Hartford, said they felt the state "recognized" their problems.

Salmon

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Vermont Gov. Thomas Salmon said today he was in sympathy with independent truck drivers because of the problems the energy crisis has caused, but he said he could not condone any law-breaking acts by the truckers.

According to an aide to the governor, Salmon made the remarks in a telephone conversation this morning with Mark Pillsbury of Underhill, a trucker who hauls machinery and steel products. Governatorial assistant Norman James said Pillsbury called to seek an appointment to see the governor, but was put in contact with Salmon immediately. James said the governor wanted to clarify comments he had made in a radio interview Monday. On Monday, Pillsbury was publicly critical of Salmon's broadcast remarks. The Underhill man said the governor was "bad-mouthing the owner-operators who haven't done a thing to him or his state."

Mass. energy board

BOSTON (AP) — A bill creating a three-member state energy commission has won final approval from the Massachusetts House despite charges that the commission would become a "dictatorship" or a "political boondoggle."

By a vote of 169-44 the House passed the bill Monday and sent it to the Senate.

Amendments limiting both the life span and the powers of the commission passed with the approval of the bill's sponsor Rep. Robert Ambler, D-Weymouth.

One amendment would have the commission expire in two years, if it is not revived by the legislature. Another would limit its powers to allocate fuel resources to situations where there is a declared energy emergency. And an emergency must be declared by the governor and the legislature.

UMass police armed

BOSTON (AP) — Campus police at the University of Massachusetts' new Dorchester campus will be armed with revolvers from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. and while they guard large sums of money, Chancellor Carlo L. Golino said.

Officers have been instructed to use the firearms only to defend themselves or others from death or serious injury, Golino said. They may not fire warning shots.

Sullivan new mayor

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Cambridge, whose city council has been trying since early January to elect one, finally has a mayor.

Councillor Walter J. Sullivan, a former mayor, was elected Monday night on the 31st ballot.

The post is largely a figurehead in the city's council-manager government. But Sullivan will sit on the important school committee.

Less meat in R.I.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Wholesale meat suppliers in Rhode Island say they are running out of beef, pork and lamb as result of the truckers' strike. Shortages will begin to turn up by the first of next week as prices rise sharply, they say.

"The impact is going to be felt by the consumer," said state Rep. Jacob Harpootian, R-East Providence, operator of the Royal Packing Co. "I think they're going to be in tough shape by next week.

"They're not going to be able to find too much in the way of red meat," he added.

SUPREME COURT

Vermont land use tax held legal

By WILLIAM MORRISSEY
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The Vermont Supreme Court yesterday upheld the constitutionality of the 1973 capital gains tax on the profits earned in the quick exchange of open land.

The tax was a cornerstone of Gov. Thomas P. Salmon's 1972 election campaign. It was designed to slow the speculation in Vermont land and to help pay for a system of property tax rebates for Vermont residents.

Three Washington County land owners argued that the capital gains tax's sliding scale of rates, affecting only land held by one owner for six years or less, violated the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

They also contended that the state failed during a Washington County Court trial on the issue to show a reasonable basis for the six-year classification.

The state Supreme Court, in quoting from a 1958 decision from the U.S. Supreme Court, said the Constitution "imposes no iron rule of equality, prohibiting the flexibility and variety that are appropriate to reasonable schemes of state taxation."

The state court said what is required in state taxation laws "is that the discriminatory classification not be capicious or arbitrary, but rest on some reasonable consideration of legislative policy."

Thus, the court said, if any reasonable policy or purpose for a legislature's action "may be conceived of, the enactment will be upheld."

One apparent effect of the holding period classification, said the opinion, "is to discourage the rapid turnover of land at high profits."

The gains tax affects rapid turnover of land by imposing a tax burden that increases as profits from land sales increase and decreases the longer a person holds onto his land.

"This alone is sufficient for constitutional purposes to support the view that the legislature could have had as a purpose" the slowing of land speculation, said the court.

Limited shield allowed

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) - The Vermont Supreme Court yesterday extended to newsmen in the state a limited privilege to withhold testimony in some criminal proceedings.

In a unanimous decision, the court said a newsgatherer, "Legitimately entitled to First Amendment protection" is entitled to refuse to answer questions put to him in a deposition proceeding conducted in a criminal case, except in limited circumstances.

The court said the newsgatherer "is entitled to refuse to answer unless the interrogator can demonstrate to the judicial officer appealed to that there is no other adequately available source for the information and that it is relevant and material on the issue of guilt or innocence.

"If such a showing cannot be made to the measure consistent with the overriding of any First Amendment concerns, the dependant newsgatherer cannot properly be compelled to answer the question," said the court.

The court issued the opinion in a case involving a television newsman, John Gladding, affiliated correspondent of WCAX-TV in Burlington.

Gladding, according to the court, apparently was present at state police headquarters in Rutland when a drug raid was being planned in 1972.

The loyalty oath now required of all state employees.

Should UMass be embroiled in a McCarthy era witch-hunt, threatening the shut-down of the University, as hundreds of faculty and staff are terminated for refusing to sign the Mass. loyalty oath? The loyalty oath conflict surfaced again this week when the judge hearing the case of 18 UMass faculty and staff refused to render a verdict in the case. A judgement upholding the oath would force all those who have not yet signed the oath to sign it or lose their jobs. A judgement holding the oath unconstitutional would challenge the precedence of a five year old U.S. Supreme Court decision holding the Mass. loyalty oath as constitutional. Despite the optimism of the lawyers for those opposing the oath that the judge will rule in their favor, all signs point toward the judge ruling against the faculty.

It has been a year to this day since the Mass. State legislature voted down a measure to do away with the oath. The vote that day against a bill sponsored by Rep. James G. Collins and Sen. John Olver, both of Amherst was a solid 147-84. Rep. Louis Morini, R-Northampton, said those 84 opposing the oath were "bomb throwers".

Judge Joseph S. Mithell, the judge handling the case, is both politically astute and in a position to see which direction the feelings on this issue are blowing. Judge Mithell's inaction on the bill allows the State employees to keep their jobs without incurring the wrath of the State legislature.

Did you ever notice how many people you encounter in the average day at UMass? Try to figure out a rough estimate of how many people are sitting in the Hatch as you float through to go to your 11:15 class. How many people do you recognize? Then, how many people do you say hello to?

In a school as large as this, it is impossible to know everyone. But in a school as large as this, it is quite possible to become very lonely. The one thing that I've noticed is that no one says hello to anyone that they don't know that well.

There's this guy that picked me up hitchiking one day. We talked all the way to my house before he let me off. I've seen him about three times a week since. I also wave to him, but he never acknowledges my presence. I don't know, maybe he's shy, maybe he doesn't like me. But he could say hello. Christ, I don't want to marry him. I just want to say hello.

Or, how about the woman who sat next to me in three of my classes last semester. We'd copy each other's homework and all that. But whenever I see her walking through the Campus Center she always looks the other way. Jeez, I don't want to find out about her personal problems, I just want to say hi.

After a while I thought that maybe it was me. Maybe I'm funny looking, or that I embarass people or something as absurd as that. But a few friends mentiond that they always see familiar faces in the crowds who never take even a split second to smile at them.

Goddam. Here we are. Thousands of us. And what do we do? Walk through the Campus Center in a little beeline to our classes. Oh yeah, once in a while, we bump into a friend and ask them where they're living and what courses they're taking and all that. But what about the familiar faces that you see every once in a while? We usually just gawk at them and think, "I've seen that person before."

Next time say hello to someone that looks familiar. Smile at the person you've seen everyday since freshmen orientation. Where yoUMasses of people see each other all the time you'd think that people would be a bit more friendly. If you can't get a hello out (I admit talking before 11:00 in the morning is a bit harsh on the early morning nerves) just smile or even nod. And even a wink is just as good as a nod.

Crunch benefits compact cars, less unemployment, recycling...not entirely undesirable

By JACKMAN WILSON

By now everyone is well acquainted with the dire consequences the oil shortage may have for the environment, the economy and our way of life. It is also generally believed that new energy sources cannot become a significant part of the energy base until the 1990's because of technological and economic limitations. And so everyone expects twenty years or more of shortages, recessions and environmental catastrophe.

All this may indeed happen, but as long as we have the tea leaves on the table we might as well take a look at some of the other possibilities. For instance, if the price of gasoline goes up to ninety cents a gallon, a Bureau of Mines study predicts that 80 per cent of all new cars sold will be compacts. By 1980 the United States would be saving 2.1 million barrels of oil a day, based on current projections. That is more oil than the Alaskan pipeline will deliver.

As Stuart Udall pointed out Monday night, present architectural practices squander energy. Perhaps heating and lighting efficiency will be considered more carefully as energy prices rise.

It is possible that automation in industry will slow down because of the energy shortage. Man power may become cheaper than machine power in some cases. Such a trend would both save energy and alleviate the looming unemployment problem.

Environmentalists might think about the fact that 17 per cent of the production cost of metals is for energy. This percentage is bound to rise, making metal more valuable. Since recycling a can uses only one twentieth the energy it takes to make a new one, recycling of metals may become widespread and systematic.

The Office of Emergency preparedness recently took these and other possibilities into consideration. If these trends occur, the United States may use 7.3 million barrels a day less oil imports by one half and result in a 10.7 billion dollar a year balance of payments savings.

Of course no one wants to pay ninety cents a gallon for gasoline. American love to drive big cars, hate to hassle with recycling and live in dread of the day their air conditioning will be turned off. But when energy becomes a more precious commodity these attitudes may change and thrift may once again be a virtue.

The energy shortage has everyone thinking about the future, and for the most part it looks like hard times ahead. However, many of the changes likely to occur are not entirely undesirable. In some respects, the energy shortage may be a blessing in disguise.

Oscarmurder

By KAREN CMAR

Help! I am being murdered by a computer. I am being slowly strangled to death. It would be terrific if I was feeling suicidal, but I'm not. (By the way, if you are feeling that way these days, try signing up for five courses and betting your life you'll get three of them).

You probably think I'm kidding. But its true. The early symptoms are already there. The first sign of course is vericose veins from standing too long in line at the registrars office, the scheduling office, and line after line at the departments. The secretaries have been very sympathetic. They have offered a great deal of valuable advice and counseling. Suggestions like, "Wait your turn" and "Why don't you come back another day" have been very helpful.

Ulcers are the next most common symptom. Things like drinking dining commons coffee in the morning and picking up your grades in the afternoon can start the cycle. They don't start to really bleed until you hear things like "I'm really sorry but you're the 45th person to try to get in this course today." or "Don't blame me if you can't get into this course, I just teach it." The ultimate blow comes when none of your friends will let you in on the easy courses they've heard of because they want to leave room for themselves. That can really be a pain in the gut.

The migrane headaches usually begin with light flashes from the tow truck that is towing your car away. The pain intensifies when you find out that their going to charge you the full $25.00 even though you only parked there for a minute.

You shouldn't really start to worry until you start experiencing symptoms of emphysema. If the computer gave you a 1:25 in Grad Research and a 2:30 in Southwest somewhere, you may find yourself slightly short of breath. Then you may have heart failure waiting in line to see how many extra people the professor will take in his course. If he stops with the person in front of you, you may be well on your way to that great course description guide in the sky.

If you should get slightly worried about your condition you could take it to the Health Center. They're probably too busy remodeling to even notice you or at least just plain too busy. Anyway, I think somehow they wouldn't understand.

There is always the possibility of confronting Whitmore head on. (It is essential to do this before the heartbreak of psoriasis sets in.) If your eyesight is still intact steer yourself toward the great white hope but be sure not to look at the new Fine Arts building or you may experience dizzy spells. You have to face this whole thing with a positive attitude. Definitely avoid thinking about the fact that you might end up taking these courses. Thinking about lectures, papers, and exams has been known to cause fainting spells, blood clotting and even strokes. So drag your wearied, beaten body up the long rampway to plead with heartless OSCAR, but remember, if you swallow too much shit you could wind up with stomach cancer.

Letters To The Editor

Nixon memorial planned

To The Editor:

The following letter has been circulating in Boston. I felt you might want to reprint it for those who may be interested in contributing to this worthy cause.

——————

Dear__________:

We have the distinguished honor of being on a committee for raising five million dollars for placing a statue of Richard M. Nixon in the Hall of Fame in Washington, D.C.

The committee was in a quandary as to where to place the statue. It was thought unwise to place it beside the statue of George Washington, who never told a lie, nor beside the statue of Lyndon B. Johnson, who never told the truth, since Richard Nixon could never tell the difference.

..We finally decided to place it beside the statue of Christopher Columbus, who left, not knowing where he was going; and upon arriving, did not know where he was. He returned, not knowing where he had been, and did it all on borrowed money.

..Years ago, Moses said to the people of Israel, "Pick up your shovels, mount your camels and asses, and I will lead you to the Promised Land. "Nearly 5000 years later, Roosevelt said, "Lay down your shovels, sit on your asses, light up your Camels; this is the Promised Land." Now Nixon is stealing your shovels, kicking your asses, raising the price of Camels and mortaging the Promised Land. If you are one of the fortunate ones who has money left after paying taxes, we will expect a generous contribution to this worthwhile project.

P.S. It is rumored that President Nixon is considering changing the emblem of the Republican Party from an elephant to a prophylactic, because it stands for inflation, protects a bunch of pricks, halts production, and gives a false sense of security while one is being screwed.

Northampton volunteers needed

To The Editor:

How does the challenge of an untamed mind grab ya? Yes this is directed to you. Volunteer organizations are after you again, but read on!

..This is a new semester and are you going to let that taste of fire and life go before touching someone? No. Now that's just the spirit Northampton Volunteers is looking for. A bus of students leaves for Northampton State Hospital every Thursday at 6:30 and returns at 9:30. We visit patients at the Hospital who are said to be mentally ill, but not retarded. One of the big hang-ups of state institutions is that they are impersonal and routinized. One of our goals is to offer our friendship to patients. Relieving loneliness and boredom can be a challenge to your charisma - can your personality come across under pressure? We play cards, we organize basketball games and we discuss whatever is of interest, but most important of all we reach out to these special people. Patients are usually thrilled at the attention of people other than staff members. Remember many of these people are put in an institution and forgotten. We do everything we can to show them that someone remembers and cares. If you are sincere in your desire to help others, you will find that it takes time and a committment to people (patients) to feel the rewards of being involved with your fellowman.

Come along and bring an open mind and heart. Our first trip is February 14. For details see our table in the Campus Center (Feb. 11 to 14).

Law like a sailboat

By PAUL PUTES

It is easily perceived that the people of this country are dedicated to the principle that the United States is a government of laws. Each generation has enacted laws to relieve passionate social, political, and economic pressures and tensions which delineate the times of every generation, consequently leaving behind a significant amount of laws which usually become obsolete and somewhat futile and painful for future generations. The law must vigorously strive to perfect a common goal for its citizens; it must constantly revise and discard stale, stagnant, and insipid relections which unequivocally seem perpetual as the rusty perversions of time continue to produce a combination of intricately confusing social formations characterized by a great profusion of laws. The law must practice faithfully a compulsion of imagination in the creation of new laws associated with a constant use of ideas from the necessary depletion of the timeworn ones.

The law, like a sail boat, needs a compass to guide it and to steer it clear from the natural dangers involved in its daily excursions. The crew must be well versed in seamanship under the direction of a reliable authoratative master skipper. With this expertise aboard, the passengers can relax in an atmosphere of security and throughly enjoy the voyage. The law, also, needs experts (lawyers) at the helm to guide the vast majority of the populace who are not versed in law. Furthermore, if necessary, the law shall endure and act as a fulcrum for something extra, something that firmly establishes the warrant of a sense of right and wrong in tune with our national moralistic environment, which will also enable the laymen, who is not versed in law, like the passenger who is blind in the techniques and intricacies of sailing, to enjoy the civility, respect, courtesy, and compliance of the law with a supreme amount of rational and regard for human personality.

Ever since the Philadelphia convention in 1787, undoubtedly the most unique set of acts in our political history, the American government unquestionably has become a state run by pressures and not logic. Laws are forced into the American system by an ugly precipitance of greedy, selfish, pressures characterized by illogical schemes. These dreadful, selfish plans and laws exploit the common people both mentally and physically. Intelligence gone wrong...intelligence not used correctly and constructively...illogic substituted for logic due to selfish motives on the part of the greedy industrialist who add pestilance to all of nature in their actions. Who actually knows?

In summation, the American government must create laws with a minimum of force and a maximum amount of logic — laws that are characterized by logical pressures. The law must be more receptive to its people, their daily lives, their anxieties and desires, their joys and sorrows, their proud goals and colossal dreams.

Hearst daughter kidnapped

BERKELEY, CALIF. (AP) — Patricia Campbell Hearst, 20-year-old granddaughter of the late publisher William Randolph Hearst, was kidnaped amid gunfire from her fashionable apartment Monday night, police said Tuesday.

At least four shots were fired at people on the street as Miss Hearst, screaming and pleading, was blindfolded and tossed half naked into the trunk of a car and driven away by two men, police said.

No one was hit, said Richard Berger, press officer for the Berkeley Police Department. One bullet struck a car and another shattered a window in a house next door.

Some witnesses said they heard as many as 12 shots as the sandy haired, 5-foot-3, 110-pound young woman was carried off from her apartment. Furniture in the apartment was toppled and blood was splattered in the kitchen.

"No ransom demand has been made to the family as far as I know," Berger said. He said the woman's father, Randolph A. Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, was informed of the kidnaping and rushed to California from Washington, D.C.

Miss Hearst's fiance and a neighbor who came to her aid were badly beaten by the two men who smashed the heavy sliding glass door to the apartment, about one-quarter mile south of the University of California campus here.

"We head a scream, then three shots, We looked outside," said Sandy Golden, 21, who lives next door to Miss Hearst's two-story building.

"Two men were carrying a girl. She was struggling. She was half-dressed, naked from the waist up. She screamed, 'Please let me go!' She seemed to be blindfolded," Golden said.

"All of a sudden we heard a noise that sounded like firecrackers," said Donald Yamagishi, 22, who lives in the same apartment building and said he heard the men break in.

"There were two bursts, but it wasn't exactly like firecrackers so I went to look. There must have been 12 shots. I heard glass shattering."

Steven Andrew Weed, 26, Miss Hearst's fiance, said he opened the apartment door about 9:20 p.m. to a young woman who said she had been in an accident and needed help.

"That is when two black men — armed with rifles, maybe shotguns — burst in the door," he said. "In seconds they had me face down on the floor in the hallway. They kept kicking me in the face and forcing me to keep my face down."

Pope Paul removes Hungarian Cardinal

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope Paul VI yesterday removed Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, the flintly prelate who spent years in jail rather than bow to tyranny, as primate of Hungary and archbishop of Esztergom.

Mindszenty's 30 years in Nazi and Communist jails and 15 years in asylum at the U.S. legation in Budapest had made him a living symbol of resistance to oppression. But coupled with his move to Rome in 1971, the Hungarian archdiocese had been left with an absentee archbishop.

The Vatican announced that Pope Paul declared a vacancy in the archdiocese of Esztergom, the main Roman Catholic Church position in Hungary.

Anti-aircraft units to be closed in R.I.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Two anti-aircraft units in Rhode Island have been ordered closed by the Pentagon as part of a reduction of 48 Nike-Hercules firing batteries and supporting headquarters and activities throughout the nation.

The shutdown of the installations in Bristol and Coventry will result in the out-of-state transfer of 322 Army men and women. An Army announcement Monday said it will start taking the units out of service May 1 and they will be shut down completely by Oct. 31.

The cutback was characterized as part of a shift from defense against hostile aircraft to missile defense. Col. John H. Reeves, commander of the 24th Air Defense Artillery Group, said the Defense Department "has placed a lesser priority on maintenance of the existing posture for defense against manned aircraft."

The two Rhode Island units have a total monthly payroll of about $168,000. The unit at Coventry has 181 regular Army members; the one at Bristol, 141.

No ration coupons in Mass.

The governors said Massachusetts will not establish a coupon rationing system and "will not assume the federal role." He said his trip to Washington is "to make this clear to federal officials."

Initial reaction from a sampling of service station operators in Massachusetts was largely favorable. But most said the plan may be difficult to enforce.

"I wonder what's going to happen if a guy comes in, with his tank right on the empty mark, but his license is the wrong number for the day," said George Champer, manager of the Triple S station on Franklin Street in Quincy. "I mean, am I going to have the heart to turn him away."

Michael Bronchuk, manager of the Chestnut Hill Gulf Service Center outside of Boston, said the plan is a good idea but "it will never stop the long lines. It's a panic. People used to ride around until their tanks neared empty. Now, they come in when it approaches the half-way mark, because they're scared."

In western Massachusetts, Larry Andrews, manager of a Pittsfield Texaco station said he hoped the proposal "would help straighten out some of those long lines. Something has to be done."

"Modified" rationing starts Monday

BOSTON (AP) - Here is how the voluntary "modified Oregon plan" which will govern the sale of gasoline in Massachusetts starting Monday will work.

-Private passenger cars with odd numbered license plates and those with all letters vanity plates are asked to purchase gasoline on odd numbered days. Those with even numbers and plates which end in zero are asked to fill up on odd numbered days of the month. Final letters are excluded.

-Emergency vehicles, commercial vehicles, vehicles with disabled veteran or handicapped person plates, out-of-state vehicles and vehicles used by salesmen are exempt from the voluntary alternate-day restriction.

-There will be volunatary minimum $3 purchase for all but emergency vehicles.

-Dealers are asked to display signal flags notifying motorists if gas is available and under what conditions. A green flag means gasoline is available; a red flag means no gasoline is available, and a yellow flag means only commercial and emergency vehicles will be able to buy gasoline.

-The program is suspended on the 31st day of each month, meaning that anyone can buy gasoline on that day.

-The program will run six days a week, with stations continuing to remain closed on Sunday.

-Mayors and selectmen are requested to meet with gasoline dealers in their communities to work out staggered business hours so that fuel will be available in the evening and the early morning hours.

WHAT IS AN ORIENTAL RUG?

PERSIAN RUG AUCTION

BY KAOUD BROTHERS

What is an Oriental Rug? The term Oriental Rug refers to any hand-made rug that is made in the Orient, such as rugs made in China, India, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran, and Turkey. The term Persian Rug refers to any hand-made rug made in Persia, better known today as Iran. No matter where they come from Orientals have few characteristics in common, they are all hand-made. Almost all have soft pile of thousands of knots, usually wool, sometimes silk, as many as 800 to the square inch. All have rich designs and colors developed from centuries of tradition. The yarn is first dyed by hand with natural colors from minerals, insects, or plants. Weavers then tie the yarn into knots row by row on a foundation thread strung on the loom.

Weaving a large fine Oriental can take a family as many as 5 to 7 years to complete, and then it is usually traded for a few head of sheep or a piece of land. A fact which is enough to turn most of today's generation away from the loom. This plus the fact that the Iranian Government passed a very strict law forbidding any child between the ages of 5 and 14 years of age from weaving will eventually make this a lost art. It has been a proven fact that a fine Persian Rug will increase a minimum of 10 per cent a year in value.

Free promotional exhibitions and auctions of this nature are held by Kaoud Brothers with the cooperation of their overseas associates to promote the interest for Persian Rugs in this country and to help upgrade the life pattern of the traditional rug-weaving families of Iran in order to preserve this ancient art.

The care which Oriental Rugs require is the same as for any good wool rug. A weekly light vacuuming and a professional cleaning every 5 or 6 years is advisable. Oriental Rugs can be easily spot-cleaned with mild soap and water, a thin padding is required to keep the rug from slipping, otherwise enjoy your Orientals: WALK ON THEM, SIT ON THEM, AS THEY WILL GAIN BEAUTY AND VALUE BY AGE AND GOOD USE.

June will be one of your most significant months of 1974. You have innate dramatic talent. You often dramatize the mundane, much to the consternation of family and friends.

Art Buchwald gets in some licks

By GARY LUHR
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD (AP) — The White House rarely gets after humorist Art Buchwald for the things he writes about its occupants.

"They know it'd be a column if they bothered me," Buchwald said during a visit here yesterday.

The bespectacled satirist, whose thrice-weekly column appears in newspapers throughout North America, was in Hartford to inaugurate a morning lecture series.

He stopped by the Capitol to have coffee with Gov. Thomas J. Meskill and to regale Meskill's staff and the capitol press corps with the latest humorous notes from Washington.

"Somebody said if Rosemary Woods had been Moses' secretary there would have been only eight commandments," Buchwald said referring to President Nixon's personal secretary, who has said she may have erased part of the Watergate tapes.

"The new criteria for White House secretaries is they must be able to erase 120 words a minute," he said.

Watergate was the subject of Buchwald's lecture, which featured a slide presentation that included a number of old movie stills.

"The Marx Brothers are Nixon's lawyers, Laurel and Hardy are H.R.; Haldemann and John Ehrlichmann and the "plumbers" are Abbot and Costello," Buchwald said in describing his visual aids.

With Watergate, the economy and the energy crisis providing material, Buchwald says he hasn't had trouble finding column ideas for the past two years.

His favorite from among the thousands of columns he's written was one that appeared a few years ago when there was much clamor for the resignation of former F.B.I. Director J. Edgar Hoover.

"I said he couldn't resign because he didn't exist," Buchwald said.

"I said he was made up by the Reader's Digest and the pictures we saw were really a composite of 26 agents."

Court rules newsmen should reveal sources

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The Vermont Supreme Court today said a news gatherer can be compelled to testify as to the source of information gathered in the performance of a job.

But, the court said when a newsman objects to being asked questions about the source of information in a criminal case "he is entitled to refuse to answer unless the interrogator can demonstrate to the judicial officer appealed to that there is no other adequately available source for the information."

The justices also said that the information sought must be shown to be relevant and material on the issue of guilt or inocence.

The opinon, written by Associate Justice Albert W. Barney, and held unanimously, said if cannot be shown to a judge that there is no other source for the information or that it does not deal with innocence or guilt, a newsman cannot properly be compelled to answer the questions.

The opinion was issued in a case involving John Gladding, a news reporter for Burlington television station WCAX-TV.

Gladding was present at a drug raid in Rutland County last year, filming the arrest of several individuals. The defense attorney sought information from Gladding concerning the source of the information that led him to the raid site.

Gladding refused to give the information, claiming First Amendment freedom of the press rights.

He was held in contempt of court by a Vermont District Court judge in Rutland.

IRS help

Taxpayers filing Form 1040, with adjusted gross income of $20,000 or less, who take the standard deduction, can have the IRS compute their tax, John E. Foristall, Acting IRS District Director for Massachusetts, said today. This applies to taxpayers whose income is solely from wages, salary and tips, dividends, interest, pensions and annunities, he said.

Foristall advised taxpayers with questions to call or visit the nearest IRS office. Toll-free telephone numbers are shown in the tax forms packages this year.

New Hampshire to improve rail service

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Rail service in New Hampshire will improve, even if state aid is needed, Gov. Meldrim Thomson said.

"New Hampshire has the option of deciding whether a reorganized rail system or the Boston & Maine, our major carrier, would serve the state best," Thomson said Monday.

He said the "core system" reorganization proposed by the U.S. Department of Transportation last week is "unacceptable" because it would eliminate many miles of present rail freight routes.

Thomson said he would fight any cutback in essential rail-freight service in the state and would testify against the federal proposal in Interstate Commerce Commission hearings next month.

"The core-system proposal is alarming to the rail-using industries of our state.

"While the report is essentially a working paper and while there will be several opportunities for the state to express its position, we must make certain that no vital rail service is eliminated," Thomson said.

New Hampshire would lose the largest percentage of its track — 49 per cent — of any New England state, under the federal plan.

The bankrupt B&M has indicated reluctance to take part in the federal reorganization and has been negotiating with New Hampshire officials to see if it could go it alone.

"If the B&M does survive as a private entity, it will have to be with a commitment to serve the communities, large and small, whose industries depend on rail service," Thomson said.

Alcoholism talk

The Room to Move Alcohol Team will discuss alcoholism tonight at 7:30 in room 811 of the Campus Center. The public is invited. Alcohol is so commonplace in our society, that it is difficult to determine if the ordinary drinker is an early alcoholic or problem drinker." said Dr. Marvin A. Block, former chairman of the AMA committee on alcoholism.

Aging Palmer tries again

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP)-Arnold Palmer, 44 years, bespectacled and obviously in the twilight of a legendary career, seeks to defend the only current title he holds against the assault of pro golf's victory-hungry lions this week in the Bob Hope Desert Classic.

The five-day, 90 hold event - the longest and most grueling on the tour - begins Wednesday on four desert courses with $160,000 in total prize money up for grabs and $32,000 to the winner.

The money is only incidental to multi-millionaire Palmer. But the title is all-important. The still-proud champion is jealously conscious of his position among the game's great players and needs a victory to sustain that role. And, too, he needs to win to make it into the Tournament of Champions for the 20th consecutive year.

Just what is an automatic transmission Adjustment?

. . . and what should it cost?

A regular adjustment consists of tightening the bands, adjusting linkage, replacing the filter and refilling with fluid. Doing this once a year for about every 10,000 miles is like an insurance policy against major trouble, and it keeps your transmission shifting smoothly and efficiently.

"Night Train", "Toe" join Hall of Fame

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Tony Canadeo, Bill George, Dick "Night Train" Lane and Lou "The Toe" Groza have been named to pro football's Hall of Fame, it was announced Tuesday.

Formal induction for the four players will be July 27 at the annual Pro Football Hall of Fame game here. The new inductees bring to 81 the number of players enshrined in the hall.

Canadeo played in the Green Bay Packers offensive backfield from 1940-1952. The 5-foot-11, 195-pounder was used as a running back, quarterback, punter and kick returner.

Canadeo, who attended Gonzaga University, rushed for 4,197 yards, caught 69 passes for 579 yards and scored 186 points on 31 touchdowns.

George, who played college ball for Wake Forest, spent his pro career with the Chicago Bears as a middle linebacker from 1952 to 1965, making the All-Pro team eight times. The 6-foot-2, 230-pound George intercepted 18 passes, returning them 114 yards, and recovered 16 opposition fumbles during his career.

Lane, who never played college football, was signed by the Los Angeles Rams in 1952 after being discharged from the Army. He played pro ball until 1965 with the Rams, the Chicago Cardinals and the Detroit Lions.

In his rookie year he set an NFL record of 14 interceptions, a mark which still stands. During his career he collected 68 interceptions, which he returned for 1,207 yards. Groza also never played college football. He played for the Cleveland Browns from 1946 to 1967.

Although more famous for his placekicking ability, Groza also won all-NFL honors as an offensive tackle six times.

Groza played in nine Pro Bowl games and in 13 league championship games with the Browns, scoring a record 1,608 points with his kicking.

New Hampshire still no. 2

HANCOCK, Mich. (AP) — Michigan Tech lost a first place vote to Boston University in the national collegiate hockey ratings this week but retained a firm grip on top of the list.

In Monday's rankings voted on by coaches and officials of three major collegiate hockey leagues, the Huskies garnered nine of the ten ballots for the top position.

BU picked up a first place vote and remained in third place on the strength of a 2-0 victory over Vermont and a 15-1 thumping of Massachusetts.

New Hampshire remained in second place, turning in a 6-4 win over Vermont and a 5-2 victory over Boston College. Dartmouth was knocked out of the top ten as a result of a 4-3 loss to St. Lawrence and a 5-3 defeat from Princeton.

Minnesota-Duluth appeared in the rankings for the first time.

Here are the rankings, team, record and total points:

1. Michigan Tech (20-4-2)	99
2. New Hampshire (16-5-80)	79
3. Boston University (14-5-0)	71

Metallo inked as Packer

Paul Metallo, shown at the left during his playing days with the football Minutemen, was signed as a free agent by the Green Bay Packers several days ago.

Metallo, who played minor league football last year with the Western Massachusetts Pioneers, will report to the Packers in the spring. A call to the Packer offices in Green Bay could not elicit the information as to what position the Packers intend to play him at, but in any event, Paul could join alumni Greg Landry and Milt Morin in the NFL this season.

Beyond the NIT

The National Collegiate Athletic Association, more commonly known as the NCAA, holds a basketball tournament every March. Actually a better name for this post-season round-robin would be the UCLA Invitational. Why would I want to mention such an event now? The answer: UMass just might, with good fortune, have themselves a place there.

In previous years the field was composed of the twenty-five best college teams in the nation. (with the exception of those on athletic probation as was the case with North Carolina State last year). Next year the field will expand to thirty-two.

At this point in time, the Minutemen are 14-2. (not to mention that although not quite making it this week, they did receive votes for the AP top twenty teams) The defeats came at the hands of Providence and Syracuse. Of course season record is a major consideration in selection process. Here's how UMass can get in. It's a tall order, but the number one priority is to go undefeated the rest of the way. Providence and Syracuse have already lost three times each. Keep in mind that we outplayed the Friars for a good deal of time in a one-point loss. The NCAA selectors look at these things when sending out invitations.

Here's another way we can get in. Because of the expanded field, I know that doesn't go into effect until next year, but some selectors may already be looking ahead, the Yankee Conference should get consideration for the first time in many years. So another must is to finish first in the conference.

What would an NCAA berth mean to the Minutemen? First of all I would like to be realistic and say flat out that we are not even one-half the team the UCLA Institution of Basketball is. But, if we can get into the Eastern Regionals (and on TV with Curt Gowdy calling the play-by-play) national recognition would come our way. Not to mention what a victory or two would mean.

The regionals are held at various locations around the country. This year's semi-finals and finals will take place in Greensboro, North Carolina. Jack Leaman and his staff will be able to garner talent from places other than the northeast corner of the country. Al Skinner will graduate this year and a big need for next season is a rebounding forward to help John Murphy up front. Jim Town, academically ineligible this year, will certainly help, but an NCAA bid will allow us to be greedy and grab for all the talent we can.

We will at least qualify for the NIT, but an NCAA berth would mean so much more in the long run. There are a lot of steps to climb along the way, but the goal is reachable.

Sports Illustrated has recognized us every week this year. Maybe the NCAA selection committee will take a look too.

"Pistol Pete" suspended

ATLANTA (AP) — Pete Maravich, one of the National Basketball Association'a leading scorers, was suspended indefinitely Tuesday by Atlanta Hawks Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons "for disciplinary reasons."

Fitzsimmons refused to elaborate on the reasons.

Pressed by reporters, he would say only, "There's nothing heavy about this. These things have to be done."

Teammates said the action was not unexpected.

It followed a near-scuffle at a Hawks game in Houston Sunday, in which Maravich became upset after he was assessed a technical foul in the first half. Hawks Herm Gilliam and Lou Hudson had to restrain Maravich and Hudson's nose was bloodied, apparently by a blow from Maravich's elbow.

After the game, Fitzsimmons criticized Maravich's playing and said he obviously "didn't have his head in the game."

Maravich told The Associated Press in a telephone call to his Atlanta apartment, "I really have no comment to make on the matter."

He added that he had made no plans.

A Hawks office staffer said the suspension was announced shortly after Fitzsimmons summoned Maravich in and had a brief private conference with him Tuesday morning.

The technical foul against Maravich at Houston came in the first half of the game. Maravich returned to the lineup in the second half, but was ineffective.

Fitzsimmons then benched the highest scorer in college history for the final nine and one-half minutes of the game, won by Houston 123-112.

The 6-foot-5, 195-pound Maravich has been enjoying his finest pro season, averaging 28.3 points per game in 52 outings. He is the No. 2 scorer in the NBA this year.

Emerging Minutemen face big BC team

By EARLE BARROLL

The big basketball news, of course, was UMass' emergence on the "Alphabetical Others" list in the national ratings yesterday. Yes, the Minutemen (14-2) were there, after Florida State and before McNeese State.

There were fourteen "Others" in all, east and west, north and south, from Centenary to Purdue, from Las Vegas-Nevada to St. John's N.Y.

"It certainly made our kids feel good that we did get a vote," said Jack Leaman who's cameoed before in this group when a kid named Erving played for him. Leaman spent a good deal of time yesterday pondering the possible votes. His findings: "I think that someone from the Buffalo area who was impressed with out performance against Niagara must have voted for us."

Anyway, they are finally there. And where they'll be this time next week has a great deal to do with tonight's game at Boston College and Saturday's war at UConn. Where UMass is now, is where B.C. should have been at the least for most of this season. That is what the pre-season people said.

Still the Eagles are 11-4 and obviously in the mood to preen N.I.T. "They're good enough to do it," warned Leaman. Their record speaks for itself. Save for a freak loss in the finals of the Bean Pot to Boston University the Eagles have only lost to Maryland, Canisius and Providence (79-77 in ot.), nothing to be embarrassed about.

"You look at the games each of us had with P.C.," said Leaman, "and you know this should be one hell of a game. I expect a close struggle to the end unless someone does something exceptional or poor."

If you want names, try these: Jere Nolan, Mark Raterink, Bob Carrington, Bill Collins and Mel Wledon. These are the forces that make B.C. click. If you're a size buff, after the B.C. front line that measures 6'6, 6'7 and 6'9, there is 6'6, 6'7 and 6'11. BIG.

"Nolan and Raterink are the keys for us," said Leaman. "They're seniors and they've been able to keep the team together on the court." And when Boston College is without chaos it is as good as they come.

Action from a game the hockey Minutemen and all their fans would like to forget. Tonight, the Minutemen travel to Vermont to take on the nationally-ranked Catamounts. If they can put it together and perform at their peak, the Canniffmen could make us all forget BU.

Greg Duarte (24) snares a rebound away from Al Skinner and two opponents in a recent UMass encounter. The Minutemen will need more of the same hustle tonight when they meet Boston College.

WMUA

Contrary to announcements made on WMUA last night, tonight's basketball game at Boston College WILL BE AIRED LIVE, beginning at 7:20 with Don Gorski and Gerry Brooks. The UMass-Vermont hockey game will also be aired via tape delay one hour after the completion of the basketball game with Russ Small, Bill Ballou, and Paul Allen.

Goal key as UMass meets UVM

By BILL BALLOU

The most ferocious and most evenly matched rivalry in the history of Division II hockey concludes tonight with UMass a decided underdog — just like it's been through most of the last ten years.

The Minutemen journey to Burlington, Vermont to take on the Vermont Catamounts, one of the top teams in the nation. Vermont is going Division I next season, and in fact can qualify for the Div. I playoffs this season, so any future UVM-UMass games will be, as far as standings go, off the record.

Traditionally, Mass-Vermont games have been one or two goal affairs. Last year was no exception, but Vermont won both.

On paper, this one figures to break tradition. The Cats are having their finest season ever, and thus far have lost only one game in Div. II (Merrimack). They've split two games with Boston University, winning 7-6 and losing last week 2-0, and have generally done well in the higher division.

UMass, of course, is having an off-season. They're just 7-4 in Div. II, 7-7 overall, and playing inconsistently. Still, paper predictions haven't held true to form in this series.

The key to the whole affair is in goal. That's where Vermont is most vulnerable and where UMass is strongest. UVM's John Kiely has some fancy stats, but he isn't the goalie Chick Rheault is.

Rheault has been in a slump, but showed his regular form in the third period of the Boston State game. He'll have to be in form for tonight's game for the UMies to stand a chance.

Steve Nims will miss the game. He's not yet 100 per cent from the knee injury he suffered in the BU game, and coach Jack Canniff doesn't want to risk aggravating it.

Mark Sullivan is skating again but still hasn't fully recovered from his shoulder injury.

One piece of good news for Canniff, though, has been Brian Mulcahy's knee. It's still a bit gimpy, but really hasn't affected his play. It's a good thing, because a healthy Mulcahy is one of the best defensemen in the Division.

Game time at Gutterson Field House is 7:30 p.m. If you're thinking of going but don't have tickets, don't bother. The game will be sold out. It will be broadcast on WMUA at 9 o'clock.

The Future in Sports

With the appearance of the World Football League, World Tennis League, World Basketball Association and assorted other sporting delights, sports pages have been filled with stories of great stars making comebacks and young prodigies making good in the big time.

Here's what some sports stories will read like in the coming decades:

ST PETERSBURG, Fla. — The St. Petersburg Caskets, currently leading the Southern Divison of the North American Shuffleboard League (NASL) yesterday announced the appointment of Pete "Whizzer" McPrune as coach of the Caskets. McPrune, 74, is the youngest coach in the NASL and will also serve as a player.

McPrune replaces Lindsay Oyle, who died after burping during a league game with the Sarasota Serutans.

SUPERSTITION MT. Ariz. — Chico Chiliacos, President, General Manager, Coach, and Head Usher of the expansion Superstition Mt. Miners of the Western Hemisphere Frisbee Tossing Association (WHFTA) announced yesterday that the Miners would be featuring an exciting new between periods contest that frisbee fans would be sure to enjoy.

"We plan," the spicy executive said, "to feature authentic Indian torture between periods of our home games. Two lucky fans will be chosen during the first period to go down on the floor at the conclusion of that period and endure the most excruciating pain. The fan who can stay conscious for the longest period of time receives a facsimile of the map of the Lost Dutchman Mine."

"We think it will go over big," Chiliacos concluded.

CULPEPER, Va. — The Culpeper Ropes of the Seaboard Hopscotch League (SHL) have announced a major innovation in ticket sales.

The Ropes, starting with their game against the Bull Run Toros on Saturday, will now charge fans to get out of the arena rather than to get in.

Chauncey Hollingsworth, Ropes' General Manager said, "We've noticed that most of our fans have been leaving early in the first period and we've been losing our shirts on concessions. We'll stagger our prices, such as $4.00 to leave after the first period, $3.00 after the second, and this way hopefully keep fans in the building."

PARSONS, Ka. — The Parsons Parsons of the Universal Corn Shucking League (UCSL), mired in 37th place in the league's Midwest Division, yesterday completed a major trade.

Buck Wheat, the Parsons' coach sent last seasons UCSL rookie-of-the-year, six -year-old Mable Carling, and a Ford Tractor to the Dubuque Tassels for nine-year-old veteran Sally Shy and two babies to be born later.

The Parsons are in the midst of a streak that has seen them lose 16 shucking bees in a row.

MANCHAUG, Mass. — The New England Apple Dunking Association (NEADA) has announced the awarding of a provisional franchise to the Manchaug Ponds.

The Ponds would be the second team in the three-year-old NEADA.

However, the Ponds will not be allowed to kneel a team until they can guarantee clean water for the apples to be placed in.

Presently the entire water supply of Manchaug is polluted by waste from Buster's Egg Farm, a 42,000 chicken enterprise that is Manchaug's main industry.

BOSTON, Mass. — The Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League (NHL) have announced the call-up of Gary Radar, the leading scorer in the Tuesday-Thursday Phys. Ed. hockey class at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Radar played for the green team, which serves as the Bruins top farm club.

By MIKE HENAULT
MDC Staff

The highlight of last night's Student Senate meeting and possibly the keystone of this legislative session was passed into law as the Student Government approved a sweeping plan of reorganization.

The new shuffle was a proposal of the joint committees on Student Matters and Academic Affairs was accepted in near unaniminity after the Senate discussed the implications of the bill in executive session.

"We're not as close to the student body as we should be," said Student Senate President Nick Apostola. "There are many issues out there and the committee would direct itself to those issues."

The Organizing Committee, as the chief body of the new reorganization is known consists of five major sub-departments: a student organization collective, public relations, information and research, economic development, and a resource center. These divisions, according to Senate sponsors of the reorganization will facilitate the function of the student government at the University.

The goals of the new reorganization, or in the words of Senate Speaker Dave Booker, a move toward reorganization, would define problem areas, research solutions and involve more students in the process.

The Student Organizing Project would set up a number of specific student services as a credit union, a food and clothing store, hobby shops and concert programs among other things.

The plans for major innovations in UMass Student Government were produced after tedious investigation over intercession by the Student Organizing Committee which includes Elyse Cann, Dana Marchant, Marty Miller, Alwin Schmidt, Tom Spriggs, Bill Stewart, and Nora Faris. Their full budget of $23,995.00 was approved.

In other moves, the Senate approved the following:

-the constitution of the Organization of Lutheran students, the Art Group, The Aquatic Club, and The Coin Club.

-allocated $250.00 to a student filmmaker to make a working print of his film on the University to be shown on WCVB-TV.

-appred in separate moves the expenditure of funds by Treasurer Hamel and the Executive Committee.

Striking truckers' mediator asks to meet with Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) - Warning of spreading violence in the truckers' strike, Pennsylvania Gov. Milton P. Shapp requested an urgent meeting last night with President Nixon to try to end the dispute.

In a message telephoned to the White House, the Democratic governor told the President that "I wish to see you at once to solve this problem."

Shapp, who has been mediating talks between the independent truckers and the government since Sunday, said the violence was increasing and "even with our state police and National Guard we may not be able to control this."

He said the strike could "be solved easily and quickly tonight" if only he could meet with the President.

Will $65 fill it up?

(or: will this local station owner survive gas rationing?)

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Dick Yourga is worried.

"I wish I was 18 again and could just go drink beer," he said as he watched the line of more than twenty cars inch its way into the neighboring gasoline station.

Yourga is the owner of the Plaza Shell station on Route 9. This reporter spoke with him and two other owners yesterday about the proposed rationing plan to begin on Monday in Massachusetts. "I am in favor of any plan that will work," he said, but "it's up to the individual driver as to how well the plan will work."

Yourga believes if people are aware and use common sense "we can lose these long lines. "What we have to do, he said, is to change our basic buying habits — buy early in the morning and only when your tank is down at least to half empty." The other day he said, a motorist pulled up to the pumps and handed him a 20 dollar bill. "He told me to fill it up," Yourga said, but his tank would only take 65 cents." "The minimum of three dollars (in the rationing plan) is a good idea, he said, it should cut down the waiting time." But the Plaza Shell owner wanted to drift away from speaking about the rationing plan and insisted on discussing what he called "the outstanding problem that is being ignored in this whole thing. The problem is the complete lack of common courtesy on the part of the drivers. It's threatening to put a lot of small businessmen out of business," he said.

He stared out the window at the long line waiting for gas at the Gasland station next door. "People always block my driveways," he said. "I'm always open for servicing but customers find it hard to get through the line.

"A courtesy campaign needs to be run," he added. In a seperate interview yesterday a spokesman for D&M Sunoco said he will abide by the plan outlined by Governor Sargeant but he does not feel the plan will reduce the long lines at the pumps.

"Right now I look inside each car to see how much gas the customer has - if he doesn't have less than a half of a tank — I tell him to keep going.

Before he began checking up on people, the spokesman said, he (like Yourga) was asked to fill a tank. This time the car needed only 35 cents worth of regular — less than one gallon.

Gary Graves, manager of the Campus ARCO station on Route 9 is cautiously optimistic about the rationing program.

"I like it, he said, everyone should give it a while to work. It's like anything else — you have to give it a trial period."

Graves explained what he would do if someone drove in on the wrong day.

"I would just explain to them when they should come in and when they shouldn't. That would be the only fair thing to do." he said.

Graves is typical of the attitude of Amherst area service station owners. There is basically a wait-and-see type of feeling.

Meanwhile the lines keep getting longer and tempers subsequently shorten as men like Dick Yourga and Gary Graves wait for rationing to begin.

Students keeping stations busy

By KATHY SHEEHAN
MDC Staff

The student return to the Amherst area after semester break has caused longer lines at most gas stations in and around Amherst.

In a recent survey, attendants from 7 area gas stations agreed that the college return is the major cause of longer lines and shorter working hours for the stations. The stations are closing earlier rather than limiting sales.

However, the College Town Service Center on N. Pleasant St., Amherst, whose business has "at least doubled" this past week according to one attendant, has limited their customers to purchasing not more than $4 worth of gas, and is open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

According to Joe Rock, employee of Amherst Gulf Station on 48 N. Pleasant St. in Amherst Center, the return to the campuses was a "marathon week" as students and homebound parents consumed all their gas in two days. The Gulf Station was forced to close until another delivery of gas would arrive.

Formerly open all day to gasoline customers, gas will now be sold only from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. to assure every day sales. This is a sort of rationing, but the customers may fill up their tanks.

Rock also said that the length of the lines has increased 99 per cent, and that a fire hazard has been caused by the cars blocking the firehouse exit and most of the street.

"Students do make a difference" in the length of the waiting lines of cars and the general traffic according to John Backe of Bill's Arco Station on College St. in Amherst. There are 2 islands with 5 pumps, and there is a 20-30 car back up. Bill's Arco tries to stay open from 8 a.m.-12 p.m., but it was forced to close at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday after selling their daily limit.

Backe said that they should sell not more than 800-1,000 gallons of gasoline per day in order to stay open every day. Customers may fill up their tanks, but rationing might occur if a delivery is not assured.

When the station opens in the morning, there are already 5-7 cars waiting for gas. "It's scarey!" Backe commented.

Tom's Texaco on Belchertown Rd. in Amherst was forced to shorten its hours to 7 a.m.-12 p.m. because they can't afford the college students. The station has been "quite a bit busier" with the added student customers, and the lines are long according to attendant Ted Piekara. Tom's Texaco will, however, serve regular customers after 12 p.m. (Last Saturday, a fight almost broke out when a regular customer, who felt he had the right, cut the line of 25 cars).

"Each day it gets longer and longer," commented Andrea Herring on the line of cars waiting for gas at Amherst Service Center on College St. Since December, the station has shortened its hours to 7:30 a.m.-12 p.m. Monday through Friday. There are usually 15-20 cars in each of the 2 lines, and they block the street according to Ms. Herring.

Campus Arco on Russell St. in Hadley has also experienced the waiting lines which have doubled and perhaps tripled in length since the beginning of the spring semester.

The Exxon Station on College St. in Amherst is probably the only station where gas consumers do not have a frustrating wait. On January 14, the station initiated an appointment system so that their customers will be assured gas on a weekly or bi-weekly basis. They are able to stay open from 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, and customers may fill up their tanks.

However, since this system was begun during intercession, students have a poor chance of getting an appointment. The waiting list for appointments now numbers 500; most of these were added this past week.

Sarge moving in on cover charges

By CINDY-LOU ROGERS

Governor Sargent may sign a controversial regulation today requiring more bookkeeping for nightclub owners who have cover charges.

The regulation, proposed by the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABC), will require nightclub owners to issue receipts for cover or admission charges and to keep records of them for a period of not less than 2 years.

For area students who must pay cover charges, this will mean a numbered ticket stub receipt at the door.

As a result of dissatisfied nightclub owners, the regulation has been redrafted several times since its initial proposal, 4 months ago.

The latest draft further prohibits the collection of a cover charge or admission fee in advance to gaining entrance to a licensed premise. The charge must be posted outside the premise in letters no less than one inch in height, stating the amount of the charge.

This wording has led to a misinterpretation of this regulation. Stanley Lapon, and alcoholic beverage commissioner, clarified for the Collegian that cover

Ghanian ambassador to visit UMass

Ambassador H.R. Amonoo of the Republic of Ghana will be visiting the University as a guest of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American studies this week. The ambassador will open the series of lectures on "Europe In Africa" being presented by Paramount Chief Nana Kobina N'ketsia IV, meet with faculty and staff of the university and with local officials while in the area.

The first lecture in the series which is open to the public will be in SBA 120 at 7:30 this evening. Professor N'ketsia discuss the intellectual and political currents leading to African independence in the first lecture.

A career diplomat Ambassador Amonoo has held significant diplomatic posts in his nation's government during every regime since Ghana's independence. In 1959 he served as Ghana's permenent representitive to the United Nations in Geneva and later as Chief of Protocol in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and later as principal secretary in the Ministry was in charge of Ghana's relations with Eastern Europe, China, Cuba and other socialist countries.

As secretary of African Affairs under President Nkrumah, Mr. Amonoo attended all sumit meetings of the Organization of African Unity and was prominent in the movement towards Pan-African cooperation. He was appointed Ghana's Ambassador to the United States and Mexico in 1972.

According to spokesmen for the Department the visit of the representative of the government and people of Ghana represents another step in the ongoing program of greater understanding and cooperation between African peoples on the continent and in this country.

Meanwhile, back at the dining commons

By SAMUEL HASSAN

According to figures furnished by the University Food Services Department, over 27 per cent of board plan meals purchased by students went unattended last semester. This is an increase of 3 per from spring semester 1973, but represents no significant upsurge in absenteeism.

Assistant Director of Food Services Marie Cappadona said that the absentee rate has fluctuated some 3-4 per cent in the past two years, and has remained at about 25 per cent. Two years ago, students with 10 meal tickets ate 82 per cent of their meals.

In a November 5th to 9th survey, one of many conducted by the assistant director, 10 meal ticket holders missed 23.8 per cent of meals while those students boarding on 15 meal plans never went to 31.2 per cent. There were nearly twice as many 10s, and an overall 27.1 per cent of both tickets weren't used. This doesn't mean the meals weren't offered, but they were definitely not over-prepared.

Miss Cappadona has a 1966 bachelors degree in food science and a 1970 masters in nutrition from the UMass and worked with the Food Services Department while earning her masters. Her job is to perform what she called, "mathematical gymnastics," in keeping track of food services. Possibly the most important figure is absenteeism.

She stressed that absenteeism is definitely taken into account when she projects the number of meals to be both sold and eaten.

Figures also show that the average student eats between 1.2 and 1.6 meals per meal. Her figures, she says, must be very accurate to minimize over-preparation, and to facilitate buying, to keep operating costs down, as well as that of the board plan. The U.F.S.D. is financially independent, receives no University grants, and operates on a boarding hall trust fund.

Food costs are high, but only about one third of the budget is expended for food buying. The rest is for operating costs.

When asked about the feasability of initiating a 5 meal plan for those students who are required to have a meal plan, but obviously aren't eating the meals, she agreed that there's definitely a problem. It costs a great deal more for every meal when you're not eating the ones you've bought. She believes one should pay for something not used. "There's no way we can beat the price if students cook for themselves and don't get paid for it, but we do offer nutritional convenience."

She explained that when the Southwest Residential Area was built, it was planned that all students living there would have meal tickets. When they changed the rule after having built the dining commons, "We got stuck."

"We're in a difficult position," she stressed, but was more than willing to work with students on the plausibility of a 5 meal plan. She pointed out that if such a plan were offered, the price would be forced up. "Services might have to be cut to allow for such a program."

Most importantly, perhaps, there first must be a general student response to the idea so that a rough figure can be presented as a possibility. This will require an honest consensus of students' feelings and involvement through the Student Advisory Board, or Food Services Committee.

UMass trustees hold meeting

By BILL DENSMORE
and SHERM BOYSON
MDC Staff

The UMass trustees yesterday approved the list of graduating seniors for the Amherst campus at a one-and-a-half-hour meeting in the Campus Center.

Meeting for the first time this year, the board also elected new officers for 1974-1975, announced the June 30, 1976 retirement of Worcester campus Dean Lamar L. Soutter, and approved an interim report proposing new community-University cooperation at the Columbia Point campus in Dorchester.

In other Amherst-related action, the trustees formally accepted two new buildings in South Deerfield and Amherst, and approved tenured appointments for three Amherst professors. More tenured appointments will be considered next month.

Joseph P. Healey was elected chairman of the Trustees, in his second consecutive term. The Chairman presides over meetings and makes committee assignments in consultation with the President, Robert Wood.

Dean Soutter, 64, will stay at UMass-Worcester with the new title of campus Chancellor until 1976 so that he can oversee the completion of the seven-story teaching hospital on that campus.

The trustees agreed to form a search committee to look for Soutter's successor. The move allowing Soutter to retire at age 67 is seen as a concession by Wood, who wanted Soutter out at 65 next March.

Dean Soutter, unlike Amherst Chancellor Randolf W. Bromery and Boston Chancellor Carlo L. Golino, was appointed in 1962 during the term of former UMass president John Lederle.

In a report of the Special Trustee Committee on Columbia Point, the new Boston campus, trustee Muriel S. Snowden said "extensive discussions" between UMass and the Boston School Department are underway for a joint program "identifying college-capable young people early and ensuring that they have the preparation and the confidence necessary when the time for college arrives."

If such a program were established, it would go a long way towards muting one long-standing criticism of UMass-Boston — that it has ignored the needs of Boston city youth while reaching out to suburbs for students.

The report by Trustee Snowden, who heads the special Columbia Point committee, also said the University is trying to set-up a non-profit corporation to serve as a buffer between community groups and the just-opened $64 million campus.

One source said the plan is to include representatives from community groups, the city of Boston and the University in a quasi-public development corporation possibly funded by a national foundation or federal money.

The two buildings approved were the greenhouses beside Morrill Science Center, and a new animal facility for dairy cows in South Deerfield.

Faculty gaining tenured appointments were: Neal R. Shipley, Virginia A. Beal, and Charles H. Page.

Nightclub owners dispute ruling charges may be collected at the door if the entrance way constitutes a part of the licensed premises. He said he felt that the excitement over the regulation is all "much ado about nothing." Lapon called the new regulation solely a bookkeeping one.

Opposition by the drinking establishments was cited by a Boston Globe article of Jan. 30. An owner's attorney was quoted as saying, "the proposal would create an obstruction to running a business and would become a record-keeping nuisance."

The proposed regulation, which the ABCC expected Sargent to sign in early January, also prohibits minimum charges for alcoholic beverages. The Globe article stated that most nightclub owners do not object to this because "few levy such a charge."

Minimum charges for food and-or non-alcoholic beverages may be made if the customer is issued a written receipt that is permanently recorded. But if the customer incurs charges of alcoholic beverages equal to the posted minimum charge then no minimum charge for food or non-alcoholic beverages can be imposed.

WMUA women's show back on the air

By B.J. Roche
MDC Staff

The Woman's Show, a weekly, hour-long presentation, is back on the air this semester with new ideas as well as the "personpower" to see them through.

Broadcast on WMUA each Tuesday evening from 8-9, the show seeks to present women with a positive image of themselves through music and interviews, as well as information regarding women's centers in the Pioneer Valley area. Coordinator Robin Rich sees the show as an outlet for expression not only beneficial for women, but for any oppressed group.

"Part of the problem is that groups think they have separate interests, when really they are seeking the same thing, that is control over their own lives." Ms. Rich would like to see a "Radio Free People" movement in the media on campus, with a "real commitment to the liberation movement."

One program featured ex WBCN (Boston) disc jockey, Dinah Vaprin, who was alledgedly fired from her job due to discrimination. Ms. Vaprin had been active in providing programming similar to that of the Woman's Show. Accompanied by such songs as Pointer Sisters' "I Know We Can Make It," and "Down on Me" by Janis Joplin, the format combined an interesting and revealing interview with women's music to provide the audience with new ideas, as well as entertain. The Show now has tape exchanges with WBCN, one of which will be used in an upcoming edition on Wounded Knee.

Though plans for the show were made last year, the actual production did not begin until last September. There were a few problems incountered, due to mistakes in timing, and misunderstandings at WMUA, but the show is now running smoothly.

Because of the amount of time and energy necessary to produce the show (a minimum of ten hours is necessary to produce a one hour show), Ms. Rich, along with Elana Nachman from the Valley Women's Union, proposed a course to be sponsored by the Southwest Women's Center. The proposal was accepted, and the course, Women and the Media, is now being taught in Southwest. One objective of the course is to assist in the production of the show.

For the future? Ms. Rich would like to see more stimulation in the media, as well as more programming related to peoples' struggles. Students, working collectively through the Southwest Women's Center, are presently working to achieve that goal.

Jaworski asks limited tape use

WASHINGTON (AP) — Special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski asked a federal judge today to consider limiting the Senate Watergate committee's use of any presidential tapes it receives from the White House.

In response to an order issued Jan. 25 by U.S. District Judge Gerard Gesell, Jaworski submitted a memorandum on the possible effects on future prosecutions if the Senate committee is given access to White House tapes.

Gesell also asked the President to submit a letter outlining his reasons for continuing to refuse to comply with a committee subpoena demanding the tapes of five conversations.

Gesell took the action in connection with the committee's request for a civil judgment upholding its authority to subpoena the tapes and Nixon's responsibility to comply.

Jaworski said he expects the grand jury investigating the Watergate break-in and cover-up to return any indictments by the end of this month and that the tapes "will be important and material evidence at any future trials resulting from the grand jury's investigations."

HUD adds units

BOSTON (AP) — New England will get 275 of the almost 7,000 additional units of non-leased, low-income public housing released Wednesday by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

James J. Barry, HUD regional administrator for New England, said these conventionally-constructed and "turn-key"-type units are in addition to 1,644 units previously released for processing in New England for fiscal 1974.

In the units released Wednesday, Stamford, Conn., was authorized 100 units through conventional construction; Johnston, R.I., 50 units acquired for existing housing that needs no rehabilitation; Brewer, Maine, 50 units through the turn-key program; and Salem, N.H., 75 units through conventional construction.

A department spokesman said that in conventional construction, the local housing authority puts a building proposal out for bids and contracts for the housing. In the turn-key program, he said, the units are built by a private developer from whom the local authority buys the housing once it is completed.

Treaty refused

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today refused for a second time to choke off a filibuster against U.S. ratification of the 25-year-old genocide treaty.

The vote on a motion to invoke the Senate's cloture rule was 55 to 38, 7 short of the required two-thirds majority. On a first test Tuesday the vote was 55 to 36, 6 short.

The action probably ends for this year the effort to pass the treaty. Sponsors indicated they will try again next year if the political makeup of the Senate looks more favorable.

Hearsts wait for phone call

By JACK SCHREIBMAN
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) - The father of kidnapped newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst appealed again to her abductors on Wednesday, saying he and his wife were sitting by the phone and "just hoping whoever has our daughter will call us."

Randolph A. Hearst, his wife Catherine at his side, spoke at a news conference shortly after the FBI reported unspecified new developments in the case.

Miss Hearst, 19, a sandy-haired college sophomore, was kidnaped Monday night from her apartment and tossed screaming into the trunk of a car. Her captors beat her fiance and a neighbor and sprayed gunfire at witnesses.

There has been no word from the kidnapers. "We sit by the phone and wait," said Hearst. "They have not killed yet. And they haven't yet seriously injured anyone. I just hope they don't go any further."

Thomas Drunken, assistant special agent in the charge of the FBI's San Francisco office, reported the new developments, but he refused to disclose any details and said no ransom note had been received.

The girl's parents maintained a vigil at their estate in suburban Hillsborough about 15 miles south of San Francisco. Her father is president and publisher of the San Francisco Examiner. Her mother is a member of the University of California board of regents.

In a statement issued earlier, they pleaded for their daughter's safe return and promised that they would not prosecute her kidnapers.

Berkeley police confirmed that Peter Benenson, a 31-year-old radiation laboratory worker, was kidnaped shortly before Miss Hearst. They said he was in the car and probably tied up when she was thrown in the trunk.

The kidnapers - identified as two black men and a white woman, all in their 20s - abandoned Benenson and his car seven blocks from Miss Hearst's apartment. Then, police said, they apparently transferred the young woman to a second old white station wagon and drove off.

Violence shadows trucker shutdown

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Meanwhile, the independent truckers' shutdown triggered new violence Wednesday as negotiators in Washington, D.C., tried again to hammer out a settlement to the seven-day-old strike.

Lawmen in several areas moved out to escort truck convoys carrying food, fuel and other needed items in short supply. Layoffs continued to mount and totaled more than 100,000.

Shipments of beef to market have been seriously curtailed and prices skyrocketed. Dressed, carcass beef — the kind the supermarkets buy — brought 89 cents a pound and an American Meat Institute spokesman said the price was "one of the highest if not the highest ever."

In Washington, representatives of the truckers said they sent their list of demands — centering on fuel prices and freight rates — back to the White House and were awaiting word from the Nixon administration.

President Nixon froze diesel prices Tuesday, but the drivers said they still weren't satisfied.

Most of the truckers involved in the shutdown were independent driver-owners. Some company truckers stayed home out of sympathy and others complained they were being harassed off the roads.

There are an estimated 100,000 independent drivers. The Teamsters Union — whose national leadership has condemned the shutdown — says its membership includes 50,000 independents and 170,000 company drivers.

Police in Pennsylvania said roving bands of Teamsters clashed with independents in the western part of the state. They reported dozens of fistfights, but no serious injuries. The police said the Teamsters generally seemed to be trying to break up truck-stop blockades by independents.

The drivers are seeking a rollback in fuel prices and permission to pass on higher costs to the shipping companies.

Federal energy chief William E. Simon told a House committee that the driver-owners should be allowed "an immediate cost pass-through."

Asked about prospects for a settlement, he replied: "The best I can say is I'm hopeful we can reason with these people."

The violence which has marked the protest since its beginning last Thursday increased and appeared more serious. One trucker was shot to death Tuesday night in Delaware and several other drivers were shot and wounded overnight or early Wednesday. The Delaware shooting was the second death resulting from the shutdown.

Terrorists blackmail Japanese government

By JOSEPH PANOSSIAN
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — Terrorists seized the Japanese Embassy here Wednesday and demanded safe conduct to Kuwait for four comrades holding a ferryboat in Singapore. They threatened to kill their hostages if the demand was not met.

The Japanese government said it was sending a plane to pick up the four Singapore terrorists along with their three hostages and fly them to this Persian Gulf sheikdom.

But a Kuwait government spokesman said the Japanese plane would not be allowed to land here "to avoid further complications in the situation." The refusal intensified fears over the fate of the hostages.

The Singapore gunmen have been held up on a ferryboat for a week since their unsuccessful guerrilla raid to blow up a refinery in Singapore, a tiny nation on the tip of the Malaysian peninsula almost 4,000 miles from Kuwait.

The embassy raiders and the Singapore terrorists all say they are Marxist-oriented Palestinians or members of the extremist Japanese Red Army.

Japanese officials in Tokyo, in touch by telephone with their Kuwait embassy, said the terrorists in Kuwait promised not to kill their hostages once they get the promise of a plane for their comrades in Singapore.

Kuwaiti authorities said variously there were as few as three and as many as nine terrorists holding the embassy, including a woman.

The Japanese Foreign ministry said its ambassador to Kuwait, Ryekoo Ishikawa, 56, was being held, along with his three top aides and an embassy employe.

A message to the Foreign Ministry in Tokyo indicated there may be as many as 16 hostages in all, including three Japanese businessmen.

"We 16 are well," said the message, sent by wire. It was not known who sent the message.

An Associated Press newsman talked by telephone with a man at the embassy who said he was the leader of the raiders.

"We threatened to execute the ambassador and throw out his body" because the appearance of an ambulance and a fire engine at the embassy made the terrorists uneasy, the man told the newsman.

The vehicles were withdrawn. Kuwaiti troops and policemen, including sharpshooters, surrounded the six-story embassy.

Kissenger to visit Soviet Union

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will visit Moscow next month to prepare for a trip by President Nixon to the Soviet Union, the White House said in a communique today.

In another development, Kissinger and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyke agreed that the second round of Strategic Arms Limitation Talks would open on Feb. 19.

The communique said the two governments agreed on a desire to achieve progress in limiting strategic arms, to find a peaceful settlement in the middle East, to conclude the European Security Conference as soon as possible and to develop trade and economic relations between the two countries.

Gromyko has held two rounds of talks with Kissinger and saw President Nixon at the White House on Monday.

Kissinger's visit to Moscow, in the second half of March, marks an important step in the visit Nixon agreed to make when Soviet Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev was here last year. No date was given for the presidential trip, but plans are understood to point to late spring or early summer.

Gromyke, meanwhile, told the reporter that progress had been made for setting a date for President Nixon to visit the Soviet Union. It was learned last weekend that plans are under way for a Nixon visit to the Kremlin late spring or early summer.

The new round of SALT talks will concern an effort by the two superpowers to limit the development of offensive nuclear weapons. The objective is to strive for a settlement that could be signed by Nixon and Soviet party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev at a Moscow summit.

Before the Kissinger-Gromyke comments, the White House announced it would issue a communique later in the day covering talks between Nixon and Gromyke.

Nixon thinking in national interest

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon wrote a federal judge yesterday that disclosing conversations that are contained on five White House tape recordings requested by the Senate Watergate committee "would not be in the national interest."

In a letter to U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gosell the President reasserted his position that the Senate committee should not get the five recordings. All of them contain conversations he had with outsted White House counsel John W. Dean III.

"The Senate Select Commitee has made known its intention to make these materials public," the President said in a letter that he signed personally.

"Unlike the secret use of four out of five of these conversations before the grand jury the publication of all these tapes to the world at large would seriously infringe upon the principle of confidentiality, which is vital to the performance of my constitutional responsibilities as president."

Ten days ago Gosell had asked the President whether he still opposed the Senate committee's request for the five recordings and asked specific reasons why he should not enforce the committee's subpoena.

The judge said that the President's claim of executive privilege was too generalized and vague and that it was not up-to-date. Since the committee supoenaed the tapes another district judge ordered other tapes-including four of those requested by the committee-to be turned over to special prosecutor Leon Jaworski.

Jaworski also responded to Gosell Wednesday, saying that if the tapes are turned over to the committee there should be instructions that the contents not be publicized for fear that it could prejudice future trials.

Dean disbarred

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — A three-judge panel disbarred former presidential counsel John W. Dean III Wednesday for what it called unethical, unprofessional and unwarranted conduct in the Watergate affair.

The 35-year-old Dean, who has pleaded guilty to a federal felony charge, did not address the court in his own defense.

The disbarment action was brought by the Virginia State Bar, which charged that Dean had been guilty of unprofessional conduct by withholding evidence, inducing another to commit perjury, authorizing payment of hush money to the Watergate burglars and diverting money to his own use.

The three circuit court judges found Dean guilty of "unethical, unprofessional and unwarranted conduct as an attorney at law violating the code of professional ethics."

"We cannot seriously contend that only a reprimand is in order," Mains said. But he added, "The full information in the final chapter is not yet written in Watergate. Our feeling is that information is largely mitigating in nature as far as Mr. Dean is concerned. We ask that the court consider suspending Dean's license until further order of the court."

The judges reached the harshest decision after deliberating for 80 minutes.

House helps determine impeachment question

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, by a vote of 410 to 4, armed its Judiciary Committee yesterday with broad subpoena power to help determine whether President Nixon should be impeached.

Taking solmn note that only once before in the nation's history has such a resolution been acted on, the House adopted it as a necessary step to meet its constitutional duty in impeachment cases.

"Whatever we learn," said Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, "whatever we conclude, the manner in which we proceed is of historic importance — to the country, to the presidency, to the House, to our constitutional system and to future generations."

The overwhelming vote for the resolution opened a new stage in the impeachment investigation, which has been going on since last fall.

Rodino said the new power given to the committee will enable it to gain "full and complete access to any persons, information, or things in the custody or under control of any agency, officer or employe of the government of the United States, including the President."

Asked by Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R-N.H., whether he intends to subpoena Nixon, Rodino replied that he can only answer that when he knows whether it will be necessary for a full investigation.

"I hope it will not become necessary," said Wyman.

Rodino turned aside all questions about what he intended to seek in the way of evidence and when he would go after it, saying those were questions under consideration by the Judiciary Committee and its special impeachment staff.

The subpoena resolution also includes authority for the committee to compel answers to written questions and to take depositions from witnesses.

Although strongly in support of the need for the committee to have such powers in order to conduct an investigation that could clear as well as implicate Nixon, many Republicans objected to some features of the resolution.

Rep. Robert McClory, R-Ill., declaring that the impeachment inquiry will paralyze the government, said the resolution should include an April 30 deadline for reporting the Judiciary Committee's recommendation back to the House.

Rodino said he would do everything he could to meet that date but opposed fixing any rigid deadline. His pledge won the backing of House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona, and McClory's effort to write in the deadline was defeated 342-70.

In other Watergate-related developments yesterday:

—Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., asked President Nixon in a series of questions how his responsibility differs from that of John W. Dean III, who has pleaded guilty to obstructing justice. Weicker asked why Nixon did not turn over to a judge or prosecutor, as required by law, the evidence of Watergate crimes Dean says he gave him last March 21. The White House had no immediate comment.

Gov't may give N.E. more gas

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis W. Sargent has been promised by federal officials that the New England area will get more gasoline if it appears the region is getting less than the national average.

Federal Energy Chief William E. Simon told Sargent in Washington Wednesday that new data on the national gas supply would be available within the next few days.

If the data supports Sargent's contention that New England is getting seven per cent less gasoline than last year, while the national average is three per cent less than last year, more gasoline will be sent to the region, Simon pledged.

Sargent conferred for about 40 minutes with Simon in Washington on energy problems. Upon his return to Boston, Sargent said he is sure the figure of a 7 per cent decrease is accurate, "and I'm certain that Simon will meet his committments."

Sargent said he does not believe that New England has been deliberately singled out for gasoline shortages.

Simon praised Massachusetts' new system of staggering gasoline sales.

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., said Sargent would recommend that the region's governors institute a regional gasoline rationing plan. Brooke said Sargent would make the recommendation at a meeting Thursday of the New England Governors Conference.

The senator also urged that the Massachusetts program be made mandatory.

A spokesman for the governor said however that the voluntary program announced by Sargent Tuesday will be given a "couple of weeks" to prove itself before a decision on mandatory measures is made.

Under the voluntary plan, motorists with even numbered license plates are requested to fill their tanks on even days of the month, and those with odd numbered plates or vanity plates are requested to fill up on odd days of the month.

Two Democratic state representatives announced at a press conference Wednesday that they would file a bill penalizing service stations for filling a car which already has more than a quarter tank of gasoline.

Reps. James S. Conway of Malden and William F. Hogan of Everett said the bill would provide for a fine of $500 to $1,000.

Conway also told newsmen that four of the five gas station owners in his city that he spoke to Wednesday said that they planned to ignore Sargent's voluntary program.

But Thomas Glynn of the governor's energy office said the four associations of retail gasoline dealers in Massachusetts have said they will cooperate.

Glynn said Sargent's program-similar to allocation plans in Oregon and Hawaii-will be judged on the basis of feedback from gas retailers associations, local officials and the public.

"We can't make a definite date" by which time the success of the program will be judged," Glynn said. "The situation is too flexible and changes so quickly." Glynn said a decision on whether it will be necessary to make the program mandatory would probably come within a couple of weeks.

Under the voluntary program, drivers also are requested to stay away from the gas pumps unless they need at least $3 worth of gasoline.

Stations are requested to display a green flag if gasoline is available; a red flag if no gas is for sale, and a yellow flag if only emergency and commercial vehicles-which are exempt from the alternate day restrictions-are being serviced.

Glynn said the dealers have been requested to display the flags where they would be most visible, and he thought that most would place them near the entrances to their stations.

The energy crisis

Pollution study: oil better than coal

By WARREN EL LEARY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — When pollution variances for fuels are granted during the energy crisis, switching to high sulfur oil is strongly preferred to using coal in several New England areas, according to a study sponsored by the New England Regional Commission.

In the study released Wednesday, critical, intermediate and safe areas of air pollution were identified throughout the region and varying classes of variance conditions recommended.

Enviro Control, Inc., of Rockville, Md., the consulting firm which conducted the study, said the report emphasized control of sulfates, nitrogen dioxide and toxic particles as the major fuel-related pollutants affecting New England in the winter.

The study said switching from low-sulfur oil to coal in critical or intermediate areas with high population is undesirable because emissions from coal are more dangerous than those from high sulfur oil.

"In all cases, from a health standpoint, switching to a high sulfur oil is preferable to switching to a high sulfur coal," the study said. "This is due to the additional emissions of nitrogen dioxide and toxic metals associated with coal burning, as well as the possibility of enhanced sulfate formation."

High sulfur oil also was considered preferable to coal because users could more easily switch back to low-sulfur oil in an air quality emergency, whereas switching back to oil from coal could take weeks, or even months.

The study, based on air sample data taken at 125 points throughout the region, classified areas as critical if ambient sulfur dioxide standards were already being exceeded. Intermediate air quality areas were places where maximum sulfur standards were being approached and safe areas were those where present pollution levels were well below standards.

Critical areas were identified in the Hartford, New Britain, Waterbury-Anaconda, New Haven and Stamford areas of Connecticut; the Providence area in Rhode Island; and the Augusta and Portland areas in Maine.

Intermediate areas were identified as around Boston, Lawrence, Worcester, and Fall River in Massachusetts, Portsmouth, N.H., and the Bridgeport, Norwalk, and Middletown areas in Connecticut.

The study said that in critical areas, no increases in sulfur emissions from any source should be allowed, except in a dire supply shortage.

In that case, high-sulfur oil temporarily could be burned, but a minimum five-day supply of low-sulfur fuel should be held aside in case poor air ventilation caused a pollution emergency. The burning of coal should be avoided if at all possible, it said.

In intermediate areas, the report said, high sulfur oil could be used if the supply situation dictates, but an emergency low-sulfur supply should be on hand in case of pollution emergencies. Moderately high-sulfur level coal could be burned in a crisis if oil were not available, but the report said good quality particle emission control equipment should be required.

Maine's fuel varies

Maine's February gasoline deliveries will show the widest variation from those of February, 1972, according to a national listing compiled by the Federal Energy Office and published Wednesday by the Springfield Daily News.

The figures show that Maine is expected to receive 74 per cent of the gas deliveries that arrived two years ago.

The state receiving the supply closest in volume to its February, 1972, deliveries will be Minnesota, according to the FEO statistics. Minnesota was expected to receive 97.4 per cent of the 1972 deliveries.

The figures were compiled by the FEO this week from distributors' reports on their projected deliveries, the Daily News said.

Late arriving reports could mean slight changes in the figures when they are released by the FEO, probably later this week, the paper said.

Two states which have already launched rationing programs, Oregon and Hawaii, placed 43rd and 15th respectively. Smaller numbers reflect more deliveries.

Hawaii's high position was credited to the diversion of supplies by the FEO, the paper said.

Massachusetts, which will institute a voluntary rationing program next week, was 35th on the list.

Ranking behind Minnesota at the top of the list were Ohio, Wyoming, Iowa, New Mexico, Louisiana, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Oklahoma, Kansas and South Dakota.

Arkansas, Delaware, Alabama, Oregon, South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Maryland, The District of Columbia, Kentucky and Maine were expected to fare the worst under the projected figures.

Following is a state-by-state listing. The figures after the states' names represent the percentage of February, 1972, gas deliveries expected this month.

1. Minnesota, 97.4 per cent; 2. Ohio, 90.2; 3. Wyoming, 89.1; 4. Iowa, 88.3; 5. New Mexico, 87.8; 6. Louisiana, 87.7; 7. North Dakota, 87.6; 8. Wisconsin, 87.4; 9. Oklahoma, 86.8; 10. Kansas, 86.5;

Vermont wants gas from garbage

By CHARLES BUTLER JR.

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — The uncertainty about future energy supplies has Vermont officials burning the midnight oil to develop alternative power sources.

The latest idea to spark some enthusiasm in the legislature and with the state's farm community is a proposal to convert animal wastes and household garbage into methane gas.

A bill to provide funds for a study on the feasibility of generating methane gas from garbage, animal manure and sewage-legislation all but discarded when it was introduced a year ago in the state legislature-now has the enthusiastic support of several lawmakers and agricultural interests.

The events of the past year have "moved methane gas from the back burner to the front burner," says Rep. Sam LLoyd, D-Weston, a member of the House Natual Resources Committee which unanimously endorsed the methane gas bill.

Officials of the Vermont Department of Agriculture have been investigating the feasibility of using animal wastes to produce gas for several months with a grant from the New England Regional Commission NERC.

The legislation under consideration by the state's legislators would pump new money into a study to be conducted by the University of Vermont School of Agriculture to determine whether methane could be produced eonomically on a large scale basis in rural New England.

If the results are favorable, the bill's sponsor, Rep. Carroll Garfield, R-Brattleboro, says the state or a municipality or even a single farm could start a pilot project of converting wastes into power.

Garfield did some preliminary leg work on the proposal and learned that a single cubic foot of chicken manure can produce eight cubic feet of methane. A cubic foot of garbage, he said, can generate 3.5 cubic feet of methane.

The gas can be used in the same way as bottled gas for heating, fuel for motor vehicles and production of electricity, according to Garfield.

Deputy Public Service Board Commissioner Richard DeGrasse said he is excited about the legislation and the Agriculture Department's interest. If successful, he said the project could not only provide a new source of energy, but could save Vermont consumers money they pay for electricity.

As an example, he said, if the state's need for electricity from conventional sources was reduced by 1 per cent, $5 million in capital construction costs would be saved.

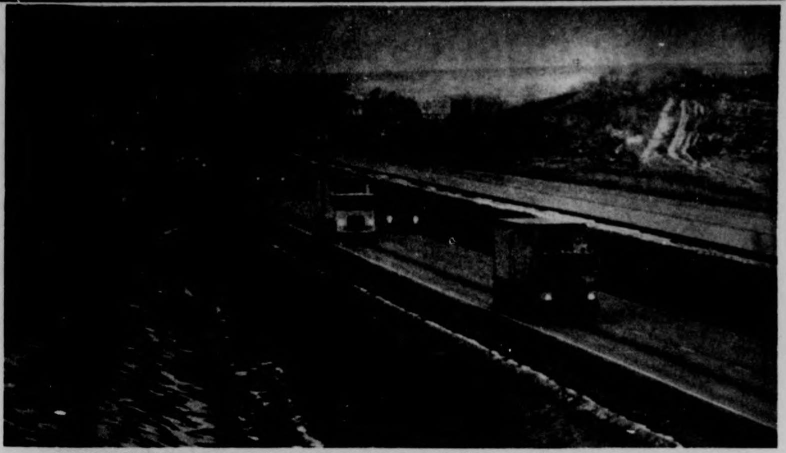
Garfield lobbies for his legislation by advising colleagues that other countries are far more advanced than the United States in developing methane generating facilities and that the innovation seems to be working. In France there are more than 3,000 facilities, compared with 86 in the United States, he said.

Despite the fact many methane gas plants are operating in foreign nations, Garfield said more information is needed before Vermont builds a generating plant for wastes. A major factor that must be considered when planning for methane gas production is the variable temperatures in the state.

State Agriculture Commissioner Lee O'Brien, a South Burlington farmer, is following the methane gas developments with interest and sees it as an alternative source of energy for 3,500 Vermont dairy farms.

"Given the energy crisis and the emphasis the federal government seems to be putting on new sources of energy," O'Brien said, "Vermont is hopeful there will be more federal money forthcoming so we can determine if it's practical to generate methane for use on the farm."

On the drawing board and in the laboratory, he said methane can be generated from animal wastes. The unkown factor that has to be determined is the economics and feasibility of generating mehtane in the cold climate.



(AP) NEOLA, Iowa, Feb. 5--Meat Convoy--A fleet of 33 trucks, seen here near Neola, Iowa, was enroute to New York Tuesday with an escort from the Iowa Highway Patrol. The trucks, belonging to three firms, left Council Bluffs, Iowa accompanied by a tanker truck with fuel and a wrecking. Officials for the three firms said they organized the convoy because they feared violence related to the independent truckers work stoppage.

States consider gas rationing

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Maryland became the fourth state to turn to gasoline rationing Wednesday in an attempt to ease gasoline shortages and long lines at service stations.

An Associated Press survey showed several other states are considering rationing and growing number of communities have instituted rationing plans on their own.

Hawaii and Oregon have begun rationing systems and a similar plan in Massachusetts takes effect Monday.

New Jersey was reported to be considering staggered sales of gasoline by the end of the week, but Gov. Brendan Byrne said Wednesday no decision would be made until after he met with energy officials in Washington Thursday.

Colorado Gov. John Vanderhoof said Wednesday he is prepared to recommend a voluntary gasoline rationing system for his state.

In California, the state Energy Planning Council on Wednesday ordered preparation of a plan for the possible implementation of the voluntary Oregon-style gasoline purchasing system.

A spokesman for Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel said a rationing plan would be put into effect as soon as an executive order can be drafted. The plan would follow the od-even license plate rationing system already in effect in Oregon and Hawaii.

Most of the state and local rationing plans now in effect follow the "Oregon Plan." Drivers of cars bearing odd-numbered plates are permitted to purchase gasoline on odd-numbered days; even-numbered plates on even-numbered days. Some of the plans deny gasoline to cars with more than half-full tanks and require motorists to purchase a minimum amount of gasoline, usually $3.

Federal Energy chief William E. Simon suggested Wednesday that states affected by severe shortages should start their own rationing systems. He said the federal government cannot implement gas rationing from Washington on a regional basis.

Simon said the shortages are of a "spotty nature," with six or seven states experiencing problems.

Nixon pushes health plan

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress yesterday to give early consideration to his new national health insurance plan, saying that it would protect every American family from bankruptcy in event of a major illness.

"For the average family, it is clear that without adequate insurance, even normal care can be a financial burden while a catastrophic illness can mean catastrophic debt," he said in a message.

Twenty-five million Americans do not have any insurance, he said, and many of those that do have gaps in their health protection.

The President said that the added $5.9-billion federal expense under his program could be handled without a tax increase.

He restated his opposition to other bills before Congress that would create a larger and more expensive federal role in health care.

Sponsoring the administration's 194-page bill were Reps. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., and Herman T. Schneebli, R-Pa., chairman and ranking minority member respectively of the House Ways and Means Committee, and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

It was explained that Mills allowed his name to be put on the bill as a procedural action to get it before his committee.

The administration bill, entitled the Comprehensive Health Insurance Plan-CHIP, would build upon the present system of private insurance companies and the federal Medicare program. It largely would eliminate the pesent Medicaid program for low-income and welfare recipients.

Nixon said it would limit out-of-pocket medical expenses to $1,500 for a family and $750 for an aged person. The average family would not reach its maximum liability until it incurred total bills of $4,900 to $5,100.

Employers would be required to offer basic insurance coverage to employes and pay 65 per cent of premiums the first three years and 75 per cent thereafter.

Employes, if they choose to participate, would pay the balance of the expenses for each family member up to a maximum of three, another $50 deductible for outpatient drugs and 25 per cent of insured expenses up to $1,500.

Nixon estimated that the employer insurance coverage would cost about $600 a year for the average family and about $240 for individuals.

States would be required to contract with insurance companies to offer medical coverage for low-income families and persons of high medical risk who often cannot buy protection now.

The federal and state governments would pay all or part of those premiums, on a sliding scale related to income. This would replace Medicaid, which would be eliminated except for certain long-term care in nursing homes and mental institutions and home health services.

Medicare for the elderly would be retained within the Social Security Administration, but the disabled would be covered under the new low-income, high-risk program.

Medicare beneficiaries would pay the first $100 on all health services except outpatient drugs, the first $50 for drugs and 20 per cent of subsequent expenses up to the annual $750 limit. Premiums would cost about $90 per beneficiary annually, slightly more than the present $6.70 a month charged now.

Nixon said his plan proposes continuation of federal cost controls, and some new state involvement to hold down expenses for doctors and hospitals.

In addition, the administration is drafting a proposal under which the government would pay the lowest possible price for prescription drugs, pegged to their generic content, rather than advertised name.

Commutations

BOSTON (AP) - The Executive Council approved commutations for two convicted murderers yesterday, making them eligible for parole within the next year.

The council commuted the 34-40 year sentence of Franklin R. Visser of Boston to 16-40 years, making him eligible for parole Oct. 18. Visser was convicted of second degree murder of 1964.

The council also commuted the life sentence of Walter A. Schillemat of Boston to 32 years to life, making him eligible for parole next January. Schillemat was convicted of second degree murder in 1962.

MBTA in debt

BOSTON (AP) - Taxpayers of the 79 communities that make up the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority are subsidizing the Boston Redevelopment Authority, the state auditor charged.

The MBTA is owed a total of $5.8 million, some of that from as long ago as 1967, by the BRA, Auditor Thaddeus Buczko said in an audit report of the calendar year 1962.

Interest on the debt at five per cent a year would be $291,000, Buczko said.

He did not state explicitly the accumulated interest but from his figures it would have been $320,000 at the end of 1972. The member communities pay the MBRA deficit according to various formulas. The 1972 deficit as $75.6 million, last year's was about $81 million. Legislation last year provides for the state to pick up half the deficit.

MBTA spokesman Brian Cudahy said the BRA debt was incurred in the relocation of the Orange Line elevated in Charlestown, over which trains will be running later this year.

"It's not an acrimonious dispute; they acknowledge they owe it. One of their federal aid programs fell on hard times," Cudahy said.

Buczko recommended that the BRA sign an interest-bearing note with the MBTA, or borrow the money elsewhere to pay it off.

"In effect, what exists here is this: An interest-free loan to the BRA by the MBTA, an organization which certainly cannot afford such extravangances," the audit report said.

Buczko also recommended that the state assume all losses on the subway, trolley and elevated service in the 14 communitiies of the old Metropolitan Transit Authority, the MBTA predecessor.

Acupuncture

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Most persons practicing acupuncture are imposters, according to a specialist in the Chinese therapy.

Dr. Arnold N. Benson, who opened the nation's first acupunture center two years ago, said there are about a dozen physicians in the country who know how to do it, while there are about 1,000 doing it.

Benson spoke at a West Springfield Lions Club dinner Tuesday.

"For the next five years don't go to any chiropractor, M.D. or osteopath who's doing acupuncture alone in his office," Benson said.

"By and large you've got an imposter who's wielding a needle but doesn't know what he's doing," he said.

Benson's first acupuncture center in New York City was closed when state medical authorities decided to limit the practice to medical schools.

His center now operates in Washington.

He predicted that acupuncture, now legal in the District of Columbia, Massachusetts and three other states, will be legal in most states within five years and will be a normal part of medical school curricula.

linear sound

"Linear sound" is sound with equal intensity throughout the musical range. A loudspeaker with linear sound reproduces bass notes as loudly as it does the treble or midrange. The sound of EPI 100 loudspeakers is so linear and natural, that the speaker almost disappears... leaving only the music. As a suitable power source for the EPI's, we've chosen the NIKKO 5010 Receiver 48 Watts RMS. This is a powerful unit(68 watts rms at only 0.5% distortion), with some outstanding features including two tape deck monitors for tape-to-tape dubbing and a front panel input for a 4-channel matrix adaptor. The dependable Glenburn 21.10 automatic turntable has a light weight, aluminum tonearm that tracks your records gently and with accuracy. Wage controls near end

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration told Congress Wednesday it hopes to end its 2½-year program of wage and price controls on April 30, except in the health and petroleum industries.

But Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz said controls could be continued over additional industries.

"We have a slight reserve whether we might not put in an added industry or two," he told the subcommittee on production and stabilization of the Senate Banking Committee.

He also said that although the administration intends to continue its process of gradual decontrol of the economy before April 30, "we may not be able to make it."

The present legislative authority for wage and price controls expires April 30, and the subcommittee is holding hearings on whether the authority should be extended past that date.

Schultz said that at the present time the administration favors continuing mandatory controls over only the health industry past April 30 and until there is action on the administration's national health insurance program.

Congress already has granted separate authority to continue controls over the petroleum industry until 1975.

After hearing the administration's proposed anti-inflation policy after April 30, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said it appeared "to have the force of a butterfly's hiccup."

But no one on the subcommittee spoke out in favor of continuing wage and price controls in their present form.

The nation's economy has operated under some form of direct wage and price controls since the Nixon administration's first price freeze in August 1971.

Director John T. Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council said the administration proposes to give the council new responsibilities to combat inflation.

He said the council could serve to coordinate activities of other government agencies in attempting to detect and solve problems of shortages and supply in the economy.

He also said it could monitor the commitments made by industries, which have been decontrolled, to restrain prices and increase supply, and could hold public hearings and require reports when it felt such action was necessary.

A third major area of responsibility, he said would be to improve methods of collective bargaining for wage negotiations.

Gov't cites Conn. gas shortage worst in U.S.

HARTFORD (AP) — A federal energy administrator said Wednesday that Connecticut's gasoline shortage was worse than the rest of the country in January, said U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn.

McKinney said the latest Federal Energy Office FEO statistics show that in January, Connecticut was 35 per cent short of the 1972 gasoline supplies. Most of the country was 18 per cent short, according to John Webber, deputy FEO assistant administrator in charge of allocation.

"They admitted that Connecticut had been worse off in January," McKinney said.

Connecticut motorists have contended with long lines and reduced gasoline sales since Christmas.

McKinney said Webber announced that Connecticut would get 9 per cent more gasoline in February than in January. FEO also agreed to study the loss of gasoline from the closing of 468 gasoline stations in Connecticut during 1973, McKinney said in a telephone interview.

Lawrence Rogers, FEO's New England chief, who also attended the meeting, agreed to visit the Bridgeport area to observe what one dealer called a "panic."

Samuel Dworkin, a Bridgeport gas dealer and vice president of the Connecticut Gasoline Retailers Association, said after the meeting that 55 stations have closed in the Bridgeport area in the last year. It meant the loss of 1.5 million gallons a month, which has not been given to other area stations, he said.

Dworkin said dealers in Fairfield County were being "harassed, abused, threatened and shot at. There is just panic in the area."

McKinney said that in December, Connecticut was shipped 130 million gallons of gasoline. It dropped to 85 million gallons in January 1974.

Meanwhile, more municipalities adopted a gasoline rationing system based on odd-even license plates.

Stamford Mayor Frederick Lonz Wednesday ordered stations in the city to begin rationing Friday morning under the "Oregon plan." He said he felt compelled to act because of disruptions and because the state had not instituted a statewide plan.

A spokesman for the state energy office said a decision whether to ration gasoline would be made "fairly soon." He said the Oregon plan would probably be the easiest to put into effect because it does not involve coupons.

Danbury and seven surrounding towns adopted a voluntary odd-even rationing system beginning Monday. The officials who met Wednesday afternoon represented Danbury, Brookfield, Newtown, New Fairfield, Redding, Danbury, Bethel, New Milford and Ridgefield.

Under the plan, cars whose last plate digit was even could buy gasoline on even days. Letter plates will be considered odd. Commercial and emergency vehicles will not be restricted. No gas will be sold to customers with more than half-full tanks. There will be a $5 maximum sale, and Saturday will be an open shopping day.

Bridgeport's mandatory rationing plan, ordered by the mayor, takes effect Thursday.

State energy chief Eckardt Beck said Wednesday that individual town rationing plans would cause "problems for the public.

Books: XYZ affair

By BOB ROSSMAN

Somebody came into my room the other day to say hello. After looking around at my pit (A.K.A. room), he noticed my bookcase, full of what it's supposed to be full of. The obvious question arose from his lips, "What the hell are you doing with all those books? You never read!" He's sorta right, you know. I somehow manage to get almost all my assigned reading (all right, some of my reading) done, but somehow I still have all these extra books. I know I haven't done all that reading since I've been here, but still all those books are there. I'd like to answer him, but how can I when I don't know the answer myself?

The answer probably lies in the fact that I am somewhat of a conscientious student at the beginning of the semester. I go to classes equipped with a pen and a piece of paper to write down early notes, but more importantly to write down the names of all the books I have to buy for the upcoming semester of classes. AHA! The solution seems to be presenting itself. I buy all these books and look over, at least, all the reading I have to do. The only thing is that Profssor X runs a list of five books,Professor Y has four books he wants us to read, Professor Z has six, and so on, until finally I have around twenty books for five courses. Most likely out of those twenty books, only a few will have to be read in their entirety. Of the rest, most will be, "Read chapters 22 of Grimsly, 94 of Fredricson, and 32 of Brooks." All that means is that out of twenty books, the total reading amounts to about maybe six or seven booksworths (good word, huh?).

One seeming solution to this problem is to share books with someone in the class. But this seldom works out well. Either you know no one in the course or all you have in the course is a bunch of continuous studiers who are always reading or looking over the book. Another possible solution is to sell your old books. The only thing is that I wish you better luck than I had. I always seemed to have books that always got outdated after my semester, or signs that never got seen by anybody. Forget it. Or you could get all your professors to assign just one or two books. That's reasonable, but just to us, not to them.

But friends, I have not left you with no solution to this problem. Actually, it's quite simple. What the university should do is hire someone from the Readers Digest, one of those guys who condenses those big books into a chapter's worth of reading. What he could do is do all the reading for a course and then hand out the two or three mimiographed pages we need for the course. No books. Great. But no way.

If that solution doesn't work perhaps nothing will. Don't give up hope. The only thing that will work for sure is if we all get together and click our heels three times and keep repeating over and over, "There's no place like UMass, there's no place like UMass." But in the meantime, if anybody wants to buy some books in good condition....

Matt Tackeff

Solzhenitsyn

His dissent is not a luxurious one

There are dissenters, and there are Dissenters. The circumstances of dissent and the reactions to it make it impossible to generalize about the moral stature of all dissenters. The only universal concerning dissent is the repugnancy of those who seek to supress it.

In the United States, dissent is, by and large, taken for granted and provided with an essentially unobstructed environment within which to germinate. That such-and-such a stand was taken by so-and-so doesn't usually send shock waves across the nation, because dissent, in itself, is not an earth shattering phonomenon. It is an everyday affair. Soap boxes are as routine as soap operas.

There are the types of dissenters who, being fortunate enough to have been born in a country where dissent is a constitutional right, can afford to make a living as a full time dissenter. If one is talented enough to cater to the needs of the world's most affluent "counter-culture," one can make several million dollars, as is the case with Bob Dylan. But not all dissenters are so blessed, especially those whose convictions are not protected by luxurious constitutions, and whose pronouncements run the risk of death. It is this type of Dissenter whose courage and moral stature dwarfs all of the "placards and slogans" type of protester who runs a risk no greater than being pelted with a tomato. As far as sheer courage is concerned, Alexander Solzhenitsyn is a dissenter of unparalleled stature.

Solzhenitsyn has spoken out in a land where dissent is not a primrosed path to lucrative lecture engagements with packed audiences, or appearances on the David Susskind Show. Dissent, in the land of Lenin, Stalin, and Brezhnev, can be a one-way ticket to a dungeon in Lyubyanka, or a freezing labor battalion at Vorkuta, or a padded cell in a "mental" hospital, or perhaps to a firing squad. In the eyes of the Soviet rulers, one who raises serious questions about tyranny is almost universally branded as a saboteur, a counter-revolutionary, or an anti-social(ist) pervert. Millions have paid the price of life or freedom for their boldness, and it is about the fate those millions that Solzhenitsyn undertook to document several years ago, in a book entitled Gulag Archipelago.

Gule Archipelago is Solzhenitsyr's first major nonfictional work. In it, he tells the true story of a nation of millions, greater in number than many of the world's major nations. This nation, the Gulag Archipelago, is comprised entirely of prisoners, ("zeks", as they say in Russian; who have been on the receiving end of Soviet repression. In the West, where we are accustomed to thinking of such repression as the more "excesses" of one Josef Stalin, Solzhenitsyn's expose will be discomforting. He shows beyond the shadow of a doubt that the flames of the Soviet Inferno did not begin with Stalin, and more importantly, did not end with Stalin.

Solzhenitsyn has already spent 11 years as an inhabitant of the Gulag nation, sentenced there for the "crime" of writing a candid letter to a friend. And judging from the current volume of hysterical denunciations emanating from Communist Party officials, he is likely to be returned to the land which he writes about.

Is his fate sealed? That depends on us, we who are fortunate enough to possess the right to speak out. The Soviet government, which holds the key to the jail cell which may soon contain Solzhenitsyn, is also a government which spends millions of dollars annually on propaganda, not just for their own citizens, but for the entire world. In order to achieve their current objective, the acquisition of diplomatic and trade relations from the United States (and subsequently, the much needed technical aid which they hope will bolster their stultified economic system), the Soviets are going all out to convince the American people that their regime is merely a "different form of social organization." Should the Soviet rulers move against Solzhenitsyn, we, who are lucky enough to enjoy freedom, must not hesitate to put an end to the evil pretense which is sold under the name of "Detente," namely, the type of vicious moral agnosticism which permits the Soviet rulers to visit our country as foreign "dignitaries," worthy of our precious food supplies, technological achievements, and most importantly, our respect. The latter should be withdrawn immediately, regardless of the fate of Solzhenitsyn. And should his fate go for the worse, we should also withdraw our respect for those within our own country who continue to aid the Soviets in their quest for "respectability". This includes Presidents and Secretaries of State.

Shake me when it's over

Our greatest President was attending a Washington party one night when an obnoxious and overbearing social climber grabbed his ear and said, "Mr. President, I just made a bet that I could get you to say more than three words," "You lose." he replied.

Our greatest Pesident's hobby was pitching hay.

Our greatest President was so concerned with the burdents of his office that he slept 11 hours a night and usually took a nap in the afternoon.

And our greatest President ended his political career with the words, "I do not choose to run for the office of President in 1928."

Calvin Coolidge didn't do a damn thing in his six years as President beside costing that lady a little money and avoiding horse manure while planting his feet for proper pitching.

And, despite the post-Herber Hoover emphasis on Presidents with programs, Coolidge stands as the greatest because of what he didn't do.

Just look where busy beaver Pesidents have gotten us.

Roosevelt began the emasculation of Congress with his New Deal, however unsuccessful, and continued it through his broad war powers. Congress has never recovered, as witnessed by Mike Mansfield's virtuoso performance (Leo Jaworski?) as Jed Clampett on last week's Opposition State of the Union Address.

Truman had a redeeming quality in that he talked plain English (no inoperative statements in that administration) and told the truth.

But he escalated the cold war, which in later years served as a vehicle for "love it or leave it" type please to support our President.

Eisenhower was a good man, but he began the practice of putting advisors between himself and other levels of government. And he also overclassified documents. His golf score was top-secret.

Kennedy and his New Frontier and Johnson and his Great Society were the straws that broke the camel's back.

The New Frontier's failure could be blamed on a lagging Congress, but the Great Society never came off because of the shortcomings of the President. He became too involved, too isolated in his own personal vendetta.

The present administration only proves, with its Marx Bros. scenario of deceit and incompetence, that no President, any President, can govern the nation. Unfortunately this President was not only a victim of circumstance, but a crook.

So, where have you gone Calvin Coolidge, a nation turns its lonely eyes, empty gas tanks, spaghetti-filled cabinets and bare freezers to you.

You see, one man can't solve the problems of a nation of 200 million people. Even if he is a good man. And the Marines have first call on any of them.

Yet the nation looks to one man. It calls him Mr. President, and he expects his closest advisors to do the same. It allows him to travel first class while it can barely travel at all. It reveres him as a God, dares not criticize, rarely, if ever rebuffs his re-election bid, and is damn sorry now that it ever got into this mess.

And now it's so bad not even Cal can clean it up. If only he'd stayed around a little longer.

What's that you say, Peter Rodino, Silent Cal has left and gone away.
Hey, hey, hey.

A new student voice?

By BILL DENSMORE

The Student Senate last night began the ground work for the organization of a student union to fight for the rights of UMass students in the Legislature and through the present University administrative structure.

Steps toward the unionization of more than 19,500 undergraduates on the Amherst campus were taken during a closed executive session of the senate, which normally meets in the open.

A Collegian reporter was allowed to attend, but a photographer was barred, during the nearly one hour session.

Labelled as a "move towards reorganization," the plan apparently sets up a student association to act as a collective bargaining agent in campus matters affecting students and as a liason with Legislators on matters affected UMass students and young adults in general.

While not publically stated as such, the plan would provide for a student union, although not necessarily in the traditional sense of the word.

In conversations with students familiar with the plan, the picture painted is of an action group with more direct power to influence decisions that affect students that the present government structure on campus.

The Student Senate is charged with the administration of more than $700,000 in funds collected by the University from students. The money is collected by the imposition of a "student activities fee" which appears on the semester bill of each undergraduate, usually amounting to about $15 per semester.

Although in practice the Senate exerts final control over where the money goes, technically the UMass trustees may veto any appropriate the Senate makes because they do the collecting of the money, and it is processed in Whitmore from the semester bills.

Because of the technical point, there is some question whether a union, per se, could be formed using Student Activities Fees, as is now planned by the senate leaders.

Richard M. Howland, Attorney for students on campus, said last legality of a union would depend on what its activities are to be.

If it were to act as a lobbying agent, it would be considered illegal under state law and the trustees would be forced to veto an appropriation for it. However, if it were to function as a "liason" with the Legislature in Boston it might be considered legal, he said.

"I do not see anything illegal about the term 'a union'".

Meanwhile, there are better ways to start a major new initiative for the good of students than in private.

Letters To The Editor

Learn to love

To The Editor:

I want to deal with a problem that effects all of us here at UMass, or anywhere we go, and particularly grieves me because I am concerned when I see anxiety or coldness in the faces of the students I pass by on campus. I am especially concerned because it is an uncomfortable situation for me to pass someone on campus and to look at them and want to say hi, but not know whether or not I will get a response, or whether I will make the person feel uncomfortable by speaking to him. It seems that, since we're all fellow students, we should be able to relate to each other more spontaneously, but I have found that not to be my experience or the general experience on campus. It seems most of us are very reserved once outside our dormitories.

Now this is not the main problem I want to deal with. This is a very broad problem of social intercourse which will naturally be resolved once it is dealt with on a smaller scale, once the individual is set free from his own hang ups, feats, self-consciousness, which seem to come to a head during this kind of social interaction.

To change that I feel must take place on the individual level, first in small group situations, then gradually on a larger scale, will come through a change of consciousness whereby the individual will be more compassionate than self-conscious, more self-giving than self-serving, more sensitive to another person's momentary weaknesses than to his own fears and hang ups. (Actually, concern for others takes us away from our own problems. Sometimes when I feel uneasy I look around for an opportunity to do something constructive for someone and my worries disappear.)

This kind of change will make for much more efficient social interaction. In other words, we will get more out of life from those with whom we interact and will be more constructive individuals ourselves because of the fruits of our giving. Here is an illustration. Society is like an automobile battery. A current will not flow between the individual electrodes unless there is a solution to carry the current. We can not successfully interact as individuals unless there is a spirit of love between us.

Another example of how compassion can create more efficient interaction can be shown through the incident that happened in Rhetoric class last monday. Student A came in the door, passed by student B's desk and knocked the glass of coke that student B had been drinking on the floor. Student A's reaction was, "Well that's the way it goes." Student B's reaction was, "Hey, do you want to buy me another?" The situation ended up with B getting one coke for the price of two, the floor by the door of the classroom being left sticky for all the afternoon classes that would use the room, and a generally useless relationship existing between A and B.

If compassion had entered into the incident, a small-scale disaster could have been turned into a great miracle of love. If A had compassion for B he would have replaced the coke he spilled, much pleasing B and reconciling the relationship. B would actually have made a profit financially, rather than a loss, in that the coke he had already drunk, though it was only a small portion, would also have been replaced. If both students had had compassion for the classes to use the room later, and the janitor, they could have taken advantage of one of the rare opportunities they will have to work together, cooperatively and constructively, and cleaned up the mess that they were involved in.

I cannot explain how love works in this short letter, but perhaps by these examples and one more, the consciousness of some may be awakened for a moment to the immense benefits that are derived on a small scale, and perhaps catch a glimpse of the great miracles that could be worked on a larger social scale through the consciousness of compassion, or love.

The last example I want to use is taken from the Bible. It's a story where Jesus, who left a great throne in heaven for the purpose of dying on the cross here in the world for us, washed the feet of his disciples. He was the richest man in all creation. Even in the world, he had enough followers that he could have set up his own government. Yet he chose to take off his robes and put on a little rag, or towel, which was the garment of the lowest slaves of that day, and he was not too proud to get down on his hands and knees to wash the disciples dirty, smelly feet. He said, "I do this to teach you how to love."

Tenure denies education

To The Editor:

A quote from Chancellor Bromery, UMass General Information 1973-1974. "At its most fundamental level, and perhaps the level most salient to prospective students, the university represents a rich combination of material resources and human expertise, of increasingly varied programs and diverse people, through which the individual is uniquely at liberty to test himself, to shape and extend his own capacity for knowing and for caring."

It has come to our attention that a teacher in the Communication Studies Department has not received tenure. It is our understanding that this is due to the new committment of this department to expand and improve its graduate program. Our reaction is based both on this consideration and our view of the needs at this university.

As students, we feel the need, as Chancellor Bromery feels, that we must extend our own capacity for "knowing and for caring." We also feel that this potential must not only be realized by the instructor but fostered by him or her. In Communications Studies 210, we felt that we grew as people, became closer to understanding ourselves, and, as a direct consequence, we all express that we feel this growth is not only relevant but essential to our education.

This feeling is so strong that we are compelled to ask a question. In light of the prevalent attitudes about education and in light of our experience expressed above, we wonder how broad a view the personnel committee in this department has taken in assessing the needs of the university community. We cannot help but feel that this situation is a common one and that men like Mr. Weaver are not recognized because of a basic oversight in education.

To state it just one more time we feel that this personal growth must be fostered at this university by responsive professors. For most of us, this was the only classroom experience in which we actively grew and began to respond to each other at a level that is almost non-existent here. We ask why the personnel committee has not responded to this need.

Education - structure-- learning

To The Editor:

I am in complete agreement with Mr. Clark's article concerning the decay of the entire academic scene. What I fail to see is a way to combat this situation, a prevention of further decline. With the expansion of universities available and an increase in living standards, more people are enrolling in universities. What Mr. Clark is saying is that only the serious, adventurous student should attend college. This point has its merit, I'm sure, but are people denied education because they are not overly zealous to learn and explore. The problem lies within the institutions themselves. The bureaucracy of the large universities has created this situation. In trying to deal with the present system, students and teachers alike lose sight of their goals, i.e. an education. Try taking the bureaucratic structure out of education and maybe put learning back as a primary and overriding goal.

Fac. senate meets today

To The Editor:

This afternoon at 3:30 the Faculty Senate will be discussing and voting on an amendment to the Personnel Policies which would make teacher evaluations the major factor when considering the quality of a professor's teaching. The way it looks right now, many faculty would probably like to see that motion defeated or amended in such a way as to render it harmless. If you think that student opinion should be included in the personnel procedures faculty employ when deciding who gets fired, hired, or promoted, show up at the Faculty Senate meeting this afternoon in Room 120 of the School of Business Administration.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Smithsonian Institution has drafted two owls to occupy the deserted five-story tower on its castle.

They're being kept inside — behind locked windows — until they, hopefully, get used to the idea of making it their home.

For more than a century, owls naturally lived in the castle tower. After all, there aren't too many castles in Washington to chose from.

But in the mid-50's, the resident owls were evicted. They left one morning and when they came back, the windows were locked.

Dr. Alexander Wetmore, an owl sympathizer who was secretary of the Smithsonian from 1934 to 1952, blamed it on folks he calls the business managers.

"The owls weren't tidv and the business people couldn't stand that, so one day they just sanitized everything," Wetmore said.

Owls were reintroduced symbolically in 1965 — in the form of drawings. Owls are the symbol of Pallas Athena, goddess of wisdom. About two years ago this policy of owl toleration was extended to include the real thing. The Smithsonian opened the windows.

But no owls showed up.

The drafted owls, a male named Alex, after 87-year-old Wetmore, and a female named Athena, came from the National Zoo. They will be fed a diet of mice and rats until early summer, when they will be expected to forage for such creatures themselves — and live in the castle tower happily ever after.

Skiers find $ hardships

By ERIC WAHA
Associated Press Writer

ST. MORITZ, Switzerland (AP) — International Olympic Committee President Lord Killanin said Wednesday he had an open mind about the financial hardships faced by athletes, including skiiers, and hinted he may approve payments for competitors.

"Personally, I do not reject the principle of broken-time payments to skiiers," said Killanin, who visited the site of the 1974 World Alpine Ski Championships. Snow and poor visibility forced cancellation of the women's downhill training, casting doubt that the race would be held Thursday as originally planned.

"But payments should not exceed what they would make normally if they held a job," said Killanin, who succeeded Avery Brundage, an apostle of pure amateurism, as head of the Olympic Committee following the 1972 Munich Olympics. Killanin said he wanted to face "the facts of life" in the Olympic movement and keep an open mind to the problems of athletes.

Killanin spoke with reporters at a reception in his honor at a St. Moritz hotel. He stopped over on his way to Lausanne, Switzerland, where a meeting of the IOC executive board was scheduled for the weekend.

Marc Hedley, chairman of the International Ski Federation, said at issue was what a job meant. He said West Germany's slalom ace, Christian Neureuther, as an example, was a student of medicine. He loses a lot of money by starting practicing years later than another aspiring doctor who was not a top skier.

But both Killanin and Hedler made clear that skiers who make hundreds of thousands of dollars a year would have no chance to become eligible for Olympic Games.

"We expelled Karl Schranz in Sappore because he was an outstanding example" of a skier who made too much money, Killanin said in a brief remark about the controversial expulsion of the ace skier from the 1972 Winter Olympics.

Hedler said a splitting up of the Alpine skiers into two groups was "in the air", but he stressed that "very many good skiers" would still remain in the eligible group for the Olympics.

Killanin said the amateur issue would come up in the IOC board meeting in Lausanne. A draft proposal would then be presented to the IOC Congress in Vienna in October for adoption.

Killanin said the new amateur clause should be "short and simple" with a number of by-laws. It would be up to the international federations to adapt it to the various sports.

Killanin said he was aware that a lot of money was involved in skiing and added he felt it was obvious that some skiers in the past signed their names to "blatant lies" when they asserted they were pure amateurs.

"We need to be realistic," he said.

Following several postponements, the women's downhill run was halted as visibility deteriorated due to heavy snow and fog, just as France's giant slalom world champion Fabienne Serrat had completed her descent.

Of the 23 women who made the run, Canada's Betsy Clifford was fastest in 1 minute, 52.36 seconds, well below times of previous downhill training runs. Austria's Annemarie Preell, the great favorite to win the world title, was only seventh in 1:57.46.

Vocation exploring

Vocational exploration is helpful if you're in any of the following situations: 1) dealing with your uncertainty about what vocation to pursue; 2) you're somewhat certain but would like more evidence in support of your decision, and 3) would just like to find out more about your interest and occupational alternatives in a leisurely manner.

If one of these is your predicament, you can do something about it in the next six weeks. The Vocational Project has been designed and is offered to assist students in exploring their vocational alternatives. At the end of the Project, you can expect to be more informed about occupations, your vocational interests, and possible alternatives for yourself. The helpfulness of the Project depends in part on the persistence and motivation with which you pursue it.

You can work on the Project in your free time. To participate, contact the Receptionists in Room 213 of Berkshire House, on weekdays from 9-5.

The Vocational Project is offered by the staff of the Student Development and Career Planning Center.

PERSIAN RUG AUCTION

BY KAOUD BROTHERS

What is an Oriental Rug? The term Oriental Rug refers to any hand-made rug that is made in the Orient, such as rugs made in China, India, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran, and Turkey. The term Persian Rug refers to any hand-made rug made in Persia, better known today as Iran. No matter where they come from Orientals have few characteristics in common, they are all hand-made. Almost all have soft pile of thousands of knots, usually wool, sometimes silk, as many as 800 to the square inch. All have rich designs and colors developed from centuries of tradition. The yarn is first dyed by hand with natural colors from minerals, insects, or plants. Weavers then tie the yarn into knots row by row on a foundation thread strung on the loom.

Weaving a large fine Oriental can take a family as many as 5 to 7 years to complete, and then it is usually traded for a few head of sheep or a piece of land. A fact which is enough to turn most of today's generation away from the loom. This plus the fact that the Iranian Government passed a very strict law forbidding any child between the ages of 5 and 14 years of age from weaving will eventually make this a lost art. It has been a proven fact that a fine Persian Rug will increase a minimum of 10 per cent a year in value.

Free promotional exhibitions and auctions of this nature are held by Kaoud Brothers with the cooperation of their overseas associates to promote the interest for Persian Rugs in this country and to help upgrade the life pattern of the traditional rug-weaving families of Iran in order to preserve this ancient art.

The care which Oriental Rugs require is the same as for any good wool rug. A weekly light vacuuming and a professional cleaning every 5 or 6 years is advisable. Oriental Rugs can be easily spot-cleaned with mild soap and water, a thin padding is required to keep the rug from slipping, otherwise enjoy your Orientals: WALK ON THEM, SIT ON THEM, AS THEY WILL GAIN BEAUTY AND VALUE BY AGE AND GOOD USE.

Government alleges Farah strike unlawful

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The National Labor Relations Board confirmed Wednesday it had filed a complaint against Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, alleging unlawful picketing activities aimed at retail outlets for pants made by Farah Manufacturing Co. of El Paso, Tex.

The complaint was signed by Milo Price, who said the complaint involves "coercion by means of picketing or threats, actually by means of mass picketing or threats of picketing or other conduct" at stores that might purchase Farah slacks.

The complaint from the NLRB, acting on charges initiated by Farah, "alleged nine instances in nine stores in New York, Los Angeles, Washington, D.C., Detroit and other places," Price said.

The nine stores identified in the complaint were Sage-Allen Co., Hartford, Conn.; Jack's Department Store in Lee, Mass.; Art Jones Co., New Britain, Conn.; Korvette of New York City; Hecht Co. of Washington, D.C.; Troutman's of Greensburg, Pa.; J. L. Hudson of Detroit; Wieboldt Stores, Inc., of Norridge, Ill.; and the May Co. of Los Angeles.

"We are saying that at some of these stores, they engaged in mass picketing, which in the circumstances did amount to violation of the Taft-Hartley Act," Price said.

He said the complaint alleges the activity amounted to "coercion of the stores by the union, to try to get them to cease selling Farah products."

An NLRB trial date on the complaint has not been set, Price said.

"This is an El Paso case, and if it goes to trial, it will be most likely heard in El Paso." Price said.

The union and Farah have been battling since 1970. Boycotts against the Farah pants, started by the union and a group of Roman Catholic bishops, has reduced sales and caused the company to shut down four plants in Texas and New Mexico.

Food industry fears panic

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Food industry spokesmen said yesterday, they feared panic buying would compound shortages of meat and produce in New England created by the national truck drivers' strike.

"The crunch will be felt next week. But if people don't panic, everything will turn out all right," said Al Zite, president of the Rhode Island Grocers' Association.

A spokesman for Stop & Shop, a large New England supermarket chain, said "If people don't go around hearding and going crazy, everything should be all right."

The strike has severely curtailed trucking of such Florida-grown vegetables as squash, eggplant and beans and most salad ingredients. Truckloads of meat have also been halted.

Independent grocers, restaurants and institutions will be most seriously hurt if the strike continues, food industry spokesmen say. Supermarket chains ship much of their food by railroads, which are not affected by the truckers' action.

The strike also began to take its toll on employment in New England food businesses. In Portsmouth, N.H., the Booth Fisheries processing plant said about 250 employes face an indefinite layoff because of the strike.

Foster's of Manchester, a major meat supplier in New Hampshire, said it would close its meat cutting department for one day on Thursday because of interrupted deliveries.

Meanwhile, some meat continued to find its way into the region. A&P airlifted 45 tons of processed meat from Chicago to Boston on Tuesday night.

"We felt we had to take immediate action to insure the availability of products in our stores this weekend," a spokesman said.

A convey of 23 trucks destined for New York and Boston passed through Chicago laden with meat Wednesday. They were under state police guard.

There have been few reports of apparent reprisals in New England against truckers who continued to roll after the strike began. However, a truck driver in Mount Vernon, Maine, said he found two bullet holes in the back of his rig Tuesday. But police said they had no evidence that the incident was related to the strike.

Wholesalers in New England who depend on trucks for deliveries said their supplies were getting low.

"Things are almost at a standstill," said John Bishop, market manager of the Connecticut Regional Market. "By the end of the week, we'll be very, very low. There is no backlog."

In Providence, R.I., the produce manager for Almac's Inc. said produce supplies are "getting critical on everything from the South, and each day the strike continues, it will get worse."

Canned food may also be in short supply. A spokesman for a St. Johnsbury, Vt., grocery wholesaler said two large packers had cancelled shipments of canned vegetables and fruit because of the strike.

"Retailers are trying to buy way over and above average," the wholesaler said. "They're stockpiling, and consumers are stockpiling."

Prices have also shown some sharp increases. On the Boston produce market, for instance, the wholesale price of broilers increased five cents yesterday to a high of 48 cents a pound.

Attorney for students:

Make 'good' your escape!

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

There is very little time to prepare for the chance to exhaust your remaining funds for seven fun-filled sun-soaked eternities (the concept of mere days being inadequate to the task) in glamorous remote corners of the earth. It is possible to spend up to seven times a semester's fees for the value of only one if you act with passionate dispatch and utter disregard for the wisdom of those who have already served the Sun God.

American students have flocked to the pre-Columbian archepelago's as a Spring equinoctual rite since shortly before Jefferson put pen to paper and set about defining the rights and happiness essential to the American species. Some of you will find that the accomodations and travel arrangements are substantially unchanged (and uncleaned) since that fondly remembered Summer of 1776. In fact two people reading this article will report that they went to the very end of the earth and looked over and never found their destination.

In past years guileless UMies have executed elaborate multipage contracts in quintuplicate providing for round trip air transport from Boston, FIVE DAYS, ONLY $199! The travel arranger forswore any liability for anything happening at all including, apparently, disclosure of a destination. As it happened, in this case, the plane finally left from Philadelphia (Zonko Air Service "Bring 'em back alive or bust"), went to a desert whose nationality was uncertain, when it arrived all the tents were already taken. The sun drenched UMies were finally shuffled by burro and mule to an oasis that had last seen dampness when the Alamo was still in doubt. After a week of sandy sojourn in salivating celibacy the hapless UMies gathered themselves together for Zonko's return expedition.

So far as anyone can determine from the fragmented reports that are still told around campfires from here to just short of Mandalay, only one member of the group ever returned. Someday her lips may once again echo mellifluous english phrases but since returning she has been unable to utter a single phrase without larding it with four letter expletives.

And verily though ye walk in the Valley of the Shadow of the Great Traveller who has never missed a connection be wary and look three times before boarding.

Of all the areas in which consumer protection has been involved, the travel industry is about the least regulated. The greatest incidence of abuse is in the so-called charter or group flight business. Reputable travel agents are in business the year around and are unlikely to use any "pressure" tactics. If you want to go somewhere they are happy to help you choose from a variety of packages. They count on your present as well as future business with them. Some charterers have been in business for an extended period of time and are glad to supply references. Some provide a bond against the return flight. The reputable charterers have actively sought federal and state regulation for the protection of travellers — and themselves.

I don't know of any certain method for determining the reliability of a charterer or travel agent, but I suggest that before you sign and maybe fly, ask the following questions:

1. Where are you going?
2. Where are you staying? Exactly, name, address and phone number.
3. When do you leave?
4. From where do you leave?
5. How do you get there?
6. When, how, whence do you return?
7. Where do you return to?
8. How much does it cost?
9. How much more can it cost and what circumstances require increased payments?
10. What guarantee does the travel agent make that the contract will be honored?
11. What references will the travel agent supply?
12. What will the travel agent do if there is the inevitable foul up?

Most of the answers are pretty basic and if unavailable the whole deal should be rejected at least until the information is supplied. No trip can be so important that these questions can't be answered and you can't take the time to shop around — or you either don't care where you go or whether you go at all. I am personally aware of several charterers who act as though supplying you with this information and more is their privilege and duty to you as their customer. I hope you have occasion to deal with them.

I also hope that when the Spring break arrives that you enjoyably go where you go and do what you do without hassles. Please take the proverbial look before the luxorious leap.

Day care available

Continuing Education for Women is sponsoring a community day care service on Saturday. The Center is offering services on a full day, half day, or drop in basis. It is open to all children in Western Mass. from the ages of 2.9 to 5 years old. The sessions will begin Feb. 9th, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the University Day School at Bowditch Lodge on campus.

Up to this point there has been no day care service available on the weekend. The increasing popularity of Saturday classes, and the fact that many jobs entail working on Saturdays made the lack of weekend day care a serious handicap for many parents. The new Saturday day care facility should help to alleviate this problem.

The new day care facility will be run by Marcelle Feltman and Carol Gingold, two area residents with experience in early childhood education. Those interested in further information and registration may call 659-3053 or 665-4223.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Adjustment in domestic area is indicated — and necessary. Libra could be in picture. Be diplomatic without being weak. Avoid excess speed in traffic. What seems an emergency could merely be temporary panic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Hold off on trips, if possible. Directions tend to be confused and so do times. Check appointment schedule. Relative, neighbor may be remiss in transmitting message. Mail could be misplaced. Draw deep emotional breath. Count "ten" before making statement.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get action where career, goals, aspirations are concerned. You appeal to more persons and sweet sound of applause may be heard. Profitable agreement is in offing on both personal and professional levels. Say "yes" to chance for wider distribution.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Highlight creative efforts. Break through to new dimensions. Leo, Aquarius could figure prominently. What seems a cloud of indifference is merely a waiting period. You are actually coming through loud and clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your ability to teach and balance and come to terms with various factions — these are emphasized. You are called upon to make decision in sensitive area. Key is to rise above petty considerations. Stick to principles and you emerge victorious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): There is lively opposition; mate or partner is aggressive. Kev now is to realize that surprise element is in your favor. You get aid behind the scenes. Money picture, apparently bleak, boomerangs in your favor. Know it and be versatile — use materials at hand.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be impatient because colleague is apparently slow, indifferent. If truth be known, there is reason to stop and take stock. Review aspirations. You may be going in direction which is one-way street. Do some double-checking, especially where long-range goal is concerned.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money and emotions tend to mix — indulging yourself could be expensive proposition. Degree of self-discipline would be beneficial. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to be in picture. Welcome change of scenery.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may be going to extremes to compensate for apparent rejection, setback. Come to senses and reconcile differences within family circle. Evaluate. Decide what is important — then do something about it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): See difference between flattery and deception. Take off blinders. Look straight in the eye and demand frank appraisals. Pisces, Virgo could be in picture. Tempers could have short fuse. Know it and tread lightly. Get basic chores out of way.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you tend to be introspective. Few persons know the real you. You attract individuals of a spiritual bent. May could be one of your most significant months of 1974. You are usually one step in front of contemporaries. People do not feel in moderate way about you — it is all or nothing, hot or cold. You are fascinated with law and theater. You recently managed to free yourself of home or family restriction.

LA, Moscow fight for games

By DAN BERGER
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The two main competitors to host the 1976 Olympic Games are back in the ring again, and this time it appears one or the other will walk away with the 1980 Games.

Los Angeles and Moscow are the only cities to have made bids for the 1980 Summer Games to the International Olympic Committee, City Councilman John Ferraro confirmed Wednesday.

"I feel Los Angeles could put it on without doing many things," Ferraro said. "We have a lot of facilities that already exist and not much would have to be built."

In 1970 Los Angeles, Moscow and Montreal put in bids. Montreal was considered a longshot but wound up with the 1976 Summer Games as a compromise after much international political intrigue.

In effect, Montreal may have gotten the Games because it was a "neutral" country in the same fight with the West and the East.

This time almost everyone is giving Moscow the favorite's role to be awarded the 1980 Games. One major drawback faces Los Angeles hopefuls:

The 1976 Games will be staged on the North American continent and the IOC is unlikely to stage two Olympiads in a row on the same continent. For that reason, many in Los Angeles are thinking they'd better keep a low profile this time around, then make an all-out effort to obtain the 1984 games.

Moscow has 70 stadiums, six sports palaces, 26 swimming pools and more than 1,000 modern indoor athletic facilities including the Grand Sports Hall, seating 103,000.

And Moscow successfully staged the World University Games last year to make a big impression on IOC members.

Ferraro said that only Teheran, Iran, has expressed a similar interest in staging the 1980 Games. The final selection will be made Oct. 16 when the IOC meets at Vienna.

Still, Ferraro is reasonably optimistic that Los Angeles has a chance at winning the games because, he said, "We think the IOC will request some things the Russians won't be able to give. The IOC will undoubtedly demand free access. The IOC won't want any visas given out."

Miss Hamill tops skaters

By KAROL STONGER
AP Sports Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Dorothy Hamill of Riverside, Conn., heir apparent to the title as queen of American figure skaters, won the compulsory segment of the U.S. National Championships at the Providence Civic Center Wednesday.

The 17-year-old Miss Hamill is seeking the crown worn for five years by Janet Lynn before Miss Lynn abdicated to become a professional.

Miss Hamill, runnerup to Miss Lynn last year, received eight ordinals and 95.18 points for the three required figures which count 40 per cent toward the senior women's title. Miss Hamill's ordinals included six first and one second place from the judges. Points are based on each judge's assessment of perfection. The highest possible is 6.0 per judge, per figure. If all seven judges gave her the highest marks, the total would be 126.0 points.

"I'm shocked," said Miss Hamill after winning the compulsory in the nationals for the first time. "I knew I was leading after the second figure, but I felt I lost my chance to win after I did poorly in the third."

Julie McKinstry of Colorado Springs, Colo., who finished third to Miss Lynn and Miss Hamill last year, was second in the compulsories with 17 ordinals and 92.70 points.

Sauer Signs

BOSTON (AP) — George Sauer Jr., an outstanding wide receiver who quit the New York Jets calling pro football "dehumanizing" in 1960, is coming out of retirement to play for old friend Babe Parilli.

Parilli, named head coach of the New England Bulls in the new World Football League, still was smiling Wednesday, 24 hours after announcing that Sauer had signed a multi-year contract with the club.

"George is very eager to play again and I'm very happy to have him," Parilli said during a brief break in hectic front office duties.

Sauer, only 29 despite six years with the Jets, and Parilli, then a backup quarterback to Joe Namath, were with New York in 1968 when the team won the National Football League's Super Bowl title.

"I ran into George in San Francisco several weeks ago and told him that I might get the head coaching job here," Parilli said. "We're old friends and he said that if I get the job he'd like to play for me.

"I called him recently and he said okay, he'd play. He's truly a great one, great hands. I feel one spot on our club is set. He looks in great shape. He has been coaching at a college in Ohio, Oberlin, and has worked out regularly."

Sauer could not be reached for comment. A New England club spokesman said Sauer and his wife had left on a camping trip.

King Spassky

NEW YORK (AP)-Thirty-two victories, one defeat and eight draws is a season's record in almost any sport, but for chess grandmaster Boris Spassky it was, literally, all in a night's work.

Spassky took on 41 opponents at once in a 4½-hour exhibition here Tuesday night.

The only defeat for the Russian former world's champion came at the hands of Charles Madigan, a 21-year-old with a national rating of expert, which is below the master and grandmaster level.

The youngest of the challengers, Robe Le Donne, 6, of Woodcliffe Lake, N.J., said he'd beat Spassky if the Russian made the first mistake.

Spassky didn't. Robert caved in after 25 moves and said of his opponent: "He's a very nice man."

Skinner no. 1

DURHAM, N.H. (AP)-Senior Al Skinner was named today the Yankee Conference's basketball player of the week for leading Massachusetts to victories over Northeastern, New Hampshire and Niagara.

Connecticut freshman Tony Hansen was named the conference's rookie of the week for the third time. He scored 33 points as the Huskies defeated Holy Cross and Maine last week.

Woman hoopsters handed first loss

By LINDA MACKLER
MDC Women's Basketball Writer

The UMass Women's basketball team suffered their first defeat Tuesday night as Keene State edged them 36-33. UMass' Ann Foley scored the first two points of the game and UMass maintained the lead until the final three minutes. Then with the score at 31-30 UMass, Keene State's Cindy Pascuarelli put in the go-ahead basket. The score remained at 32-31, despite efforts by Marilyn Ritz and Jenny Edminster to steal the ball. UMass failed at both attempts to win the jump, and with fifteen seconds remaining, and score 34-33, in favor of Keene State Cindy Pascuarelli sunk the deciding basket.

The players and the coach were very upset with their performance. Chris Molonea felt they had been defeated by a lesser team. Coach Farr stated, "They outplayed us. We were standing still. We were much too slow and we couldn't make the fast break."

The UMass offense was again responsible for the defeat. They were incapable of breaking the man-to-man press. Joanne Smith said, "We were standing out too far, waiting for the ball. When they did switch to a zone defense, we couldn't find the open man." UMass was completely outscored at the foul line, whereas Keene State made 12 out of 17 free throws, UMass sunk only 5 out of 15.

The defense was excellent. In the first quarter Keene State made only two baskets from the floor, and in the third, they made only one. Jenny Edminster was high rebounder with 12. Center Pat Glispin scored seven points, before she was taken out with four minutes left in the final period. She reinjured a knee that had been sprained in high school and it is uncertain when she will be back in action.

Both the varsity and the junior varsity teams will play at Central Connecticut this Friday night at 6:00 p.m.

NHL-WHA peace is at hand

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lawyers for the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association met behind closed doors Wednesday to discuss a proposed peace agreement between the two leagues.

The clerk for U.S. Dist. Court Judge Leon A. Higginbotham said the judge met with the lawyers for an hour Wednesday morning, and scheduled an afternoon session.

Clarence Campbell, president of the established NHL, said Monday his league's 16 teams had agreed to proposed terms for a settlement with the WHA.

The WHA has antitrust litigation amounting to more than $50 million pending against the NHL.

Lawyers for both sides said recently that an agreement had been reached in which the two-year-old WHA would drop its legal action against the NHL for several concessions, and the NHL would pay $1.9 million in legal fees incurred by the WHA.

During meetings in Chicago and Philadelphia last week, however, the NHL Board of Governors failed to reach the unanimous agreement necessary for an attempt to seek an out-of-court settlement.

The antitrust trial has been set for March 28 before Judge Higginbothan. The clerk described the meeting Wednesday as a pretrial conference, but he said the agreement was the main item discussed.

Marvin Barnes to stand trial

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — An agreement has been reached to delay a new Superior Court trial for Providence College basketball star Marvin Barnes until after tournament games.

Barnes faces trial on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon against former teammate Larry Ketvirtis on Oct. 19, 1972.

Judge William M. Mackenzie agreed Monday not to call the case before April 10. John F. Cicilline, Barnes attorney, said that under the current court schedule, Barnes might be called for trial while his ninth-ranked team was involved in tournament play.

The case went to trial last year, but a mistrial was declared after it was learned some jury members had seen newspaper clippings that had not been admitted in evidence.

Gymnasts shoot for "successful" season

By WALT POWERS
MDC Gymnastics Writer

Time is running out on the UMass gymnastics team. Over the past two weeks they've seen a 4-0 record deteriorate to 4-2, and though they have five more dual meets, a loss to Southern Connecticut tonight would eliminate any hopes of a successful season. "A successful season," says coach Tom Dunn, "would include an upset victory over Temple, Penn State, or Southern Connecticut." In the past two weeks, UMass has lost to both.

On paper, Southern Connecticut would seem to have the meet wrapped up. Coached by Abie Grossfeld, the 1972 U.S. Olympic coach, they lost last year's season opener to Temple by one point, and haven't been beaten since. Victories include decisions over Penn State last year and Temple this year. They are the defending NCAA small college champions. Like Penn State they've lost an Olympian in the person of John Crosby. But the loss of Crosby, a winner of thirteen NCAA titles, hasn't seemed to hurt them.

Southern this year is led by junior Jay Whelan, twice an NCAA finalist in the all-around. If the name doesn't ring any bells, it should, because he's the twin brother of UMass all around Gene Whelan. Though of similar ability, Gene has never beaten Jay in the all-around competition. The battle between the two brothers from Bedford, New Hampshire will provide the major competition of the meet. In other all-around action, Steve Scuderi will match up against Rich Onysko, and Bill Brouillet will oppose SouthConn's surprising freshman, Pete Kormann. Kormann, is from Braintree, and last year won the Massachusetts High school all-around championship.

Sequentially, Southern figures to throttle UMass on the floor. Their lineup is braced with a number of NCAA finalists, and Dunn concedes that "There's no way we're going to win this event." If the Owls have a weakness it be in the pommel horse, but then the same could have been said about Penn State. To bolster the Minutemen in this event, Veteran Paul Hassig has been reinserted into the lineup. Still rings and vaulting should be UMass strongpoints and the Minutemen should stay close on the parallels. The trio of Onysko, Whelan, and Kormann, though, may make Southern the strongest high bar team UMass has yet faced.

There are two factors that could exert a telling, though probably not decisive effect on the final score. One is The All Important Home Gym Advantage, which translated, means the judges will probably give UMass a lot of breaks. One of the judges, Jack Jablonski, coached the Whelans in high school. The other factor is Southern Connecticut's scoring, which has vacillated as much as ten points between meets. The only trouble here is that this scoring has been high, the higher scores coming against the better teams.

Anyway you look at it this meet will be a good one. If you're looking for a UMass upset you may be dissappointed. If it's national or international level competition you want, don't miss it, because its the last time a nationally ranked gymnastics team will perform in Amherst this season. The meet starts at 7:30 in the Boyden auxiliary gym.

Leaman ponders his next move as...

BC edges UMass in overtime

By EARL BARROLL
MDC STAFF
Basketball Writer

NEWTON, Mass. — It will go down in the records as a win for one, and a loss for another. And although it was the kind of basketball game that didn't deserve a loser, Boston College will be able to live for a month with a win in basketball over UMass 78-74, in overtime.

Why the short wait, rather than the yearly interlude for this possible rematch, centers on the fact that New England basketball has three good basketball teams, not one, and the two who performed here at Roberts Center could be on their way to the NIT in mid-March.

"This game shows just how good New England basketball is," said losing coach Jack Leaman. "I would agree Providence is not the only good team in the area," said the winning coach Bob Zefulatto.

And between the two they did enough coaching in this gymnasium to earn their next paychecks and next and next, ad infinitum.

The regulation game ended 72-72 with Rick Pitino dribbling frantically twenty feet from the basket in an attempt to free himself for the last shot.

Jackie Leaman: "We finally got beat by a good team."

BC also had its chance for a 40-minute win some seven seconds earlier, but Jere Nolan missed a short pop with Peter Trow fronting him with the least possible margin of inaccuracy.

In the five minute extra session, the Eagles scored first on a Mark Raterink layup and then held the Minutemen to nothing until the next minute when time was called. Al Skinner (23 points, 15 rebounds) hit a bank shot from the foul line. 74-74 with just over a minute and a half to play. He later fouled out with fifteen seconds showing on the clock and the Eagles ahead on two Bob Carrington (26 points) free-throws. 76-74.

Al was the second of two Minutemen to foul out as John Murphy took a seat with 4:58 to play. Murph had picked up his fourth some two minutes into the second half, and his play from then on, and that of his replacements, John Olson and Steve Mayfield were not enough to sustain the early lead the Minutemen bolted into at the start of the second half.

"If you're not deep," said Leaman, "you can't get away with it for an entire season. We finally got beat by a good team. We just can't replace a John Murphy and an Al Skinner and be as effective as we want to be." In the end with Skinner on the bench after he had connected with Mayfield for a layup that would have tied it, freshman Paul Burlanger of BC missed the first of a one-on-one Raterink snuck inside for the offensive rebound, got the foul and the two shots.

The Minutemen lead at the half, 35-34 and still hadn't played that well. They were outshot from the field, 63-41 per cent, and they went to the foul line eight times fewer than the Eagles. But after being behind by as much as five (18-13) and six (23-17), they knotted the count at 33 on a Bill Endicott take-you-to-the-bridge-special on his former prep teammate Mel Weldon.

A Peter Trow layup at the buzzer gave UMass the lead following a Nolan free throw.

In the second half UMass opened gaps that at one juncture reached ten, 55-45. Boston College went to a zone and pecked away at the Minutemen, even as Skinner, Endicott, and Rik Pitino (so points) did everything within their means to keep a lead that dwindled and dwindled until the stage was set at 71-70 UMass, 1:55 left with freshman Mayfield at the line.

"Our press took them out of the game," analyzed Zuffaleto. "In fact, UMass did not score a basket without starting five vs. starting five for some eleven minutes.

"It just shows you the value of a John Murphy," said UMass coach Leaman, "I'm just wondering if they're really better than us if both of us have our starting teams on the floor."

Now, 71-70. Mayfield sinks one of two, 72-70. On the miss, Skinner skied for the rebound. "He was definitely the top rebound on the courts, one of the best we faced on the court this year," said Zuffaleto.

However the Eagles stole off their press, and with fifty seconds on the clock, Nolan, who singlehandidly defeated UMass two years back at Roberts Center, calmly tossed in two free throws, 72-72.

And so the Minutemen are now 14 and 3 with two losses to "the other two best teams in New England." The Eagles, 13 and 5 with one heck of a stretch coming up, (St. Joseph's, St. Francis, Penn State, St. John's) can now talk of NIT.

A March rematch. Perhaps.

But in the meantime Zuffaleto can happily live with one win over UMass. "You have to be happy anytime you defeated a Jack Leaman team," he said. "They make it awful tough for you on the court."

Rheault is brilliant but...

UMass loses 4-2 to UVM

By BILL BALLOU
MDC Staff Hockey Writer

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Only three words can properly describe last night's UMass loss to Vermont — a damn shame.

A damn shame because the Minutemen played one of their finest games of the season in screaming Gutterson Field House and fell to their fifth Division Two loss while Vermont has lost only once.

It was a game full of surprises at least from the UMass standpoint. One, defenseman Robbie Quinlan was moved to right wing in an attempt by coach Jack Canniff to add some muscle up front. Two, Canniff used his players in very short shifts, especially his forward lines and that kept them fresh so they were skating with Vermont at the end of the game. Three, the UMass forwards played a tough-checking game, something that they haven't been able to do all season with any consistency.

Another big story was the great goaltending of Chickie Rheault. Rheault, who hadn't been sharp in the last couple of games, made 46 saves, including 38 in the final two periods to keep the Minutemen in the game. Of the four goals that Vermont scored, Rheault could not be faulted on any of them.

The Catamounts opened the scoring at 9:05 of the first period when Michel Lebeau broke in two-on-one with Tom Colby and fired a 15-footer past Rheault's glove side. Shortly thereafter, at the 11:22 mark, Bill Koch took a pass from Roger Mallette in the slot about twenty feet in front of Rheault and beat him right along the ice. The Minutemen finally came back with eighteen seconds left in the first stanza on a fluke goal. Billy Harris broke into the Vermont zone alone, but lost control of the puck. Vermont goalie John Kiely came out to stick it away from him but Harris regained control in the corner to the left of the net, cut out in front, had the puck checked off his stick but Kevin Conners picked it up about three feet out and flipped it into the open cage.

But Vermont came back early in the second period on a powerplay marker by Chris Miller. Miller was left all alone in the faceoff circle to Rheault's right, took a pass from Jack Clifford and fired a 25-foot wristshot past Rheault's stick side. The Minutemen killed two more penalties successfully in the second period as Vermont failed to mount another sustained attack like the one which resulted in Miller's goal. In fact, the Minutemen almost popped in a couple of their own with Jim Lyons just missing on two occasions. Then at 15:10, freshman Mike Merchant, the leading UMass scorer, put them back to within one on a quick passout play from Carl Burns with a 15-footer right along the ice from the slot directly in front of Kiely.

The Minutemen came storming out in the third period but couldn't beat Kiely who played much better after a shaky first two periods. The score remained 3-2 all the way through the third period until the 16:35 mark, when Koch finished off a breakaway, coming in all alone from the UMass blueline, and fired a hot wristshot past Rheault's glove to wrap up the scoring.

Rheault made 46 saves while Kiely, who wasn't tested too severely in the first two periods made 22 saves. The loss puts UMass' record in Division Two at seven wins and five losses (seven wins and eight losses overall).

UMass' next game is Tuesday night at Connecticut.

Ice Chips...there wasn't a penalty called against Vermont all night and that made quite a difference...Quinlan had a tough time adjusting at first but didn't look too bad at right wing...UMass played perhaps its most physical game of the year...

The meaning of sport

Sports fans are a funny bunch of people. They come from every strata of society and are separated by thousands of dollars in annual salary. Some come from the friendly confines of upper class seclusion like Westchester, Hyannis, and Cedarhurst, others come from Flushing, Dorchester and Roxbury, but no matter how many differences they might have, they have one thing in common: a love of sports.

When they go to Shea Stadium, Fenway Park, or Boston Garden they forget their lineage. The roar of the crowd is a universal language. Just as the laugh and the cry know no bounds of race or class, neither do the cheer nor the boo. Sitting in a sports arena, with people who you may have little or nothing in common with, is a great way of teaching people class consciousness or a sense of tolerance with those less fortunate. Sadly, those feelings never seem to last long enough to make a difference.

When I came to UMass last September as a fugitive from the northern wastes, I tried to get into the "swing of things." I dropped by the Blue Wall, ascended the elevator to the relatively palatial Top of the Campus and recognized my transformation from an austere McGillian into a typical UMie. But no transformation is complete for a collegiate immigrant to UMass-Amherst, until he or she becomes a sports fan. Whether you go to Alumni Stadium, the Cage, Orr Rink, or the Boyden Pool, the feeling is still the same. As D'Artagnan said in the Three Musketeers, "one for all, and all for one;" you share something with every other fan in the stands, a desire to see a team win. And for lack of anything better, it should be the start of sharing more with others.

Most of you know what the Cage is and represents. It is like a queerly shaped amplifier that defies the laws of science. Even if everyone leaves the building after a UMass victory with a sore throat, it's worth it. It's the only building I know where the noise level and the attendance figures don't jive.

As a sports fan, there are certain things I like to see: the goal, the touchdown, the swoosh of the basketball through the hoop, the graceful vault of the gymnast, etc. However, more important than those things are the crowd reactions. I love the unrestrained ecstacy of a euphoric crowd delirious with happiness. In this way sports is an escape from the outside world of crime, gas shortages, and warfare. Each fan in the Cage, in Boston Garden, or in the Montreal Forum is on his or her own little trip. If a person goes stark-raving mad in a sports arena, if a Givenchy-attired woman screams gutter obscenities at a hockey game, who could care less?

As a professor of mine said today in class, even the classic works of Shakespeare were written for one reason: to entertain. The same is true of sports. It may be overpriced, it may not always be exciting, it may sometimes if not always be serious, but above all the aim of sports is to entertain the public. The athlete says "I wouldn't play if I didn't have fun."

The next time you truck down to the Cage, remember, in the midst of the din, that if the Minutemen lose there'll be another day. Sports should be an escape for everyone, an escape that knows neither social nor racial bigotry.

Campion resigns as vice-chancellor

and
SHARON HUGHES

Vice-chancellor for Adminstrative Services Thomas B. Campion has resigned effective today to take another job with the University, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has announced.

In a news release, Bromery said Campion has asked to be freed of his responsibilities as Vice Chancellor to undertake a new role in instruction on campus.

Bromery, in an interview last week, said a reorganization of Campion's office was being considered because "the scope of responsibilities for that office had become too large"

Officials were also reported to be considering dividing up Campion's duties among three other administrators.

Campion was one of three vice-chancellors who served under Chancellor Bromery. The other two are Provost and vice-Chancellor for academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern and Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage.

The move had been rumored since late December when Campion took a five week self-imposed leave of absence from his duties.

And minutes of a December 19th meeting executive committee of the Board of Trustees report that Chancellor Bromery was at that time "undertaking a review, with Vice Chancellor Campion, possibilities for redefinition of his present position or reassignment to other responsibilities."

In his statement, obtained by the Collegian yesterday, Bromery said Campion "has performed with great dedication in his complex role as Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services."

Thomas B. Campion

Bromery said his "celleagues will miss his good counsel as Vice Chancellor" but appreciate his wish to leave the daily pressures of the administration.

As professor, Campion will deliver special lectures on business policy, environment and production in the School of Business Administration according to the release.

Prior to his position at UMass, Campion was Business Manager for the New York Times for over 20 years, graduate of the Harvard Graduate Schools of Engineering and Business Administration, Campion has also been employed as a manager of the Procter & Gamble Co.

Dean Wendell Smith of the School of Business said he is pleased that a man with Campion's background in corporate and university administration will instruct this semester, the release said.

Bromery said a replacement for Campion will not be sought within the next few weeks. Since Campion has been on vacation, three other administrators have assumed some of his duties.

----Ken Dean, acting director of food services, is running the Campus Center, residence halls and the dining commons.

----John L. (Jack) De Nyse, head of the personel office was assumed control for the financial duties.

----H. Jack Littlefield, University director of planning is supervising the Physical Plant.

Some members of Student Government say these three persons should continue to assume the duties on a permanent basis. One member however says he is not concerned with who runs the departments, but the delineation of duties as they stand presently should continue.

Truckers' strike nears end

By JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators for the federal government and striking independent truckers reached tentative agreement Thursday to end the eight-day-old highway shutdown. The government immediately began putting its part of the bargain into effect.

White House Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said the Nixon administration believes the action will resolve the truck strike, but an Associated Press survey of truckers across the country showed sentiment was strong against the settlement.

Warren also said an interdepartmental task force had developed "firm contingency plans" to keep the highways open if truckers decide to continue their protests.

Asked if this meant federal troops might be called to duty, Warren declined comment. He confirmed, however, that the Department of Defense was represented on the task force.

The first governmental actions came from the Federal Energy Office and the Department of Transportation.

The energy office announced over-the-highway truckers will be given 100 per cent of their current fuel needs, rather than 110 per cent of their 1972 fuel usage.

It said this change will make available to truck stops an additional 76,00 barrels of diesel fuel per day. Trucks using gasoline were promised similar treatment.

In addition, energy chief William Simon said he was setting up a complain service with a toll-free telephone number to begin operation Monday morning.

He invited truckers to phone complaints of alleged price-gouging or supply problems to this number: 800-424-8660. Simon said the FEO and the Internal Revenue Service would immediately check on such complaints.

The Department of Transportation announced it will review the question of increasing permissible weights and sizes of trucks on interstate highways. It also said it would check into the difference in state laws on truck sizes and weights.

The department said such differences between states "cause numerous inefficiencies including wasteful uses of fuel."

The Interstate Commerce Commission announced it would let truckers file for fuel-related rate hikes without having to supply supporting data. The ICC said it would consider fuel cost changes as compiled by the Cost of Living Council sufficient to justify the rate changes.

The ICC announced no action, however, on the freight rate surcharge which the negotiators and the White House said had been agreed to. That surcharge was to have been granted immediately, according to Warren. It would cover increased costs other than fuel.

The actions announced Thursday were in addition to earlier government decisions designed to halt protests by truck drivers.

President Nixon Tuesday ordered the pump price of diesel fuel frozen until Congress could act on legislation that would allow the truckers to pass on to the companies that employ them the difference in fuel costs they are now paying as compared to the fuel cost in May.

The Senate passed that legislation earlier this week and the House gave it a favorable vote Thursday afternoon. It would set Feb. 15 as the effective date for the pass-through of fuel costs to start

Bonnie Raitt show cancelled

The Bonnie Raiit concert, scheduled for Saturday night, is "definitely off." That's the word from the Concert Committee which was told by Raiit's manager last night that she has a throat problem.

Raiit has also cancelled concerts scheduled at Harvard and Dartmouth. All 2400 tickets, which sold for $2.50, were sold out Wed. afternoon.

Refunds, upon presentation of both portions of the ticket, will be made from 12 to 4 p.m. today at the Arcon Tours desk at the base of the first level concourse escalator in the Campus Center.

Refunds will also be made from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at the same location. Additional refund dates will be announced by the committee and will appear in Monday's Collegian.

Arcon Tours will move to the Campus Center information desk from 1:30 to 3:30 this afternoon.

Fac-sen questions student evaluations

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday rejected student course evaluations as a primary source of information in determining teaching performance and salary increases.

"It's been the contention of the student government that students are the most qualified to judge teaching competence," stated Nick Apostola, President of SBA.

But the faculty Senate refused to agree and instead killed an Apostola amendment classing teacher evaluations by students as "a primary determinant of teaching qulity."

Senator Nick Apostola offered the amendment during a discussion of procedures for awarding salary increases at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate of teaching quality."

In other business, financial aid eligibility and improved computing capacity were both topics which were referred back to committees for further study.

The Apostola amendment read, "The primary determinant of teaching quality shall be the compiled results of student evaluations conduced in accordance with present teacher-course evaluation policy."

Immediately following, Senator Dean Alfange suggested that the first word of the amendment be changed from 'the' to 'a' so that other methods of evaluation could also be used.

"One legitimate concern is that you may come out as a 2.4 teacher," remarked Alfange, in reference to the numerical data constructed from student evaluations.

Alfange further stated, "Evaluations should be done and taken seriously, but they should not be the primary determinant in regard to salary increases."

The Alfange amendment carried, but the Apostola amendment was defeated, 31-21.

Questions were then raised by other senators concerning the reliability of University evaluations forms and questionnaires.

A faculty handbook is currently in preparation which, some seniors felt, might not coincide with the salary guidelines which were being discussed on the floor.

Finally a motion by Senator Frank R. Hugus called for referral of the matter back to the Grievance Committee. This motion passed, 34-28.

Last week's Fac-Sen meeting recessed just as the Apostola amendment was introduced. The next regularly scheduled meeting will be next Thursday.

Panic buying aggrevates local crisis..

By DEAN MERCHANT

Panic buying of gasoline remains one of the largest reasons for long lines at gasoline stations.

According to the owner of Rens Mobile Station, people should rely on driving needs. He feels panic buying is a cause of the shortage; he believes everyone is now driving with a full tank.

One of the owners of Amherst Gulf said he once had a request for 27 cents, on another occasion a man's tank only required 11 cents, which he then charged.

The owner of L and M Exxon on Rt. 9 said even with Exxon's three dollar limit, only 50 per cent of the drivers can put that much gas in their tanks. He has had a 15 cents purchase. He believes people now drive with 30 per cent more gas in their tanks than before the shortage.

The owners also say their gas deliveries have been greatly cut. A Rens Mobile spokesman said they now receive only 80 per cent of the fuel received in 1972. He then provided almost a million gallons for motorists which he believes was one of the highest amounts in the area. Rens currently provides two to three thousand gallons a day, and runs out of gas 2 or 3 days a week.

The Gulf Station open only from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m., tries to sell between 900-1400 gallons of gas a day. The owner said he sells roughly 7,600 gals. a week.

He felt he could pump 50 or 60 thousand gals. a month but he can only provide 30 thousand gals. a month.

The L and M Exxon has been cut from 32,000 gals. to 25,000 gals. In 1973 he was selling 10 per cent more than in 1972. He concluded that in actuality he was selling 40 to 50 per cent of what he could if he had the gas.

Steven Ress, owner of the Amherst Shell, said since the students have come back, he now sells 3,200 gals. a day compared to 2,200 before vacation. He said his gasoline customers are 60 per cent students.

When the subject of the government is mentioned, the gas dealer's first reactions are smiles and chuckles."

Steve Ress recently read an article about Sargent's modified Oregon rationing system. "If the article is true about the odd an even numbers form of rationing, people won't immediately know about the law and will xpect us to stay open causing a lot more confusion," he said.

The L and M Exxon said people don't realize Oregon has much less population. He said 40 per cent of the countries' population is in the Northeast and the large concentration in such a small area is one reason we feel the shortage to such a great extent. One of the owners of Amherst Gulf feels control measures do not seem to help.

Some owners feel a $2 or $3 limit should not be imposed. They say it is better to let people fill up their tanks rather than receiving a rationed amount and heading for another station for the rest. All the owners feel people should wait until their tanks are at least half empty before filling up.

The owners have discussed staggering hours during the day. They all wish people would be more patient, saying getting angry at them is pointless since they have no control of the situation.

Tenure trouble at UMass unlikely, professor says

By FRITZ GEURTSEN

This past November, 104 faculty and administrative staff members at Southern Illinois University were summarily fired, according to a Jan. 28 Time Magazine article.

The reason for the mass firing was reported to be a "recommended" budget cut, due to a decrease in student enrollments.

Of the 104, 64 were faculty, 28 of whom were on tenure. Although this appeared to be in violation of contracts, University officials explained that the contracts contained clauses allowing faculty to be fired in case of "financial exigency". A budget out could be construed as such a case, they argued.

Several members of the faculty here at UMass have expressed concern that the same situation might develop here.

However, according to Joseph Frank, the head of the English Department, there is no need for concern.

"Of course the possibility is there, but it's very small and not at all probable," he said. But he admitted at the same time that UMass is also due to undergo a budget cut and that contracts here also contain the "financial exigency" clause.

The difference, he said, is that "We have a more enlightened state legislature than most."

"Thus far I have found the Administration to be generally fair and willing to consider each case on its own merit. The Administration has been scrupulous in observing the guidelines set up by the American Association of University Professors," he said.

Indications are that the University will expand slightly on campus and significantly in off-campus programs and therefore the faculty will grow slightly, rather than take any drastic cuts," he continued.

When asked about the possibility that professors might be retained, but at reduced salaries, in the event of a sizable budget cut, Frank responded "I think it would be suicidal for the University to either cut salaries or fire faculty and thereby increase class sizes. Nobody would gain and we'd all lose — faculty and students."

Whatever the possiblities are that the Illinois situation could be reproduced on this campus, it appears that tenure is no longer the sure position that it was considered in the past, expecially by those holding it.

Area govts. receiving increase

By STEVE TETREAULT
MDC STAFF

The Student Senate Budget Committee and the Residence Area Student Governments reached an agreement on area budget allocations last night which could end up costing students an increase of $8.25 under a new bill heading.

Presently, area student governments receive $6.75 from each student's Activity Fee. Last night they requested $15, effective next semester.

The $8.25 hike was agreed to debate. However, in order that area students would know more about their area government and the fact that they're supporting it, Student Senate House Speaker David Booker proposed that a new heading be installed on each student's bill.

So, if the plan goes into effect next semester, $6.75 will be given to area governments from the Activity Fee, and a new column, entitled Area Government Fee would require another $8.25, totalling the desired $15.

All Area representatives agreed that the formation and improvement of various area centers, plus the government support of growing area organizations and services made it necessary to ask for an increase.

This procedure was agreeable to all area representatives except Cindy McGrath, from Orchard Hill, who protested that another fee heading might create animosity. She stated that students would say "what are they hitting us with now?"

However, the Area representative discussed the proposal privately, and Ms. McGrath emerged agreeing to the plan.

The budget recommendation will come up for final passage at next Wednesday's Student Senate meeting. The Senate has the power to cut the budget if it sees fit.

Correction

A front page story in yesterday's Collegian incorrectly reported that the Student Senate had allocated $250.00 to a filmmaker to prepare a film for broadcast on a Boston TV state. The allocation was defeated.

In a story on page three the price of the newly opened UMass-Boston campus at Dorchester's Columbia Point was incorrectly reported. It cost about $132 million.

...And the food front grows dim

By MARTIN J. WATERS

Threats of food shortages in the Amherst area are growing. The truckers' strike is apparently still unsolved, and local supermarkets report very limited supplies on hand.

The tentative agreement worked out early yesterday is not meeting with driver approval, and only days remain before severe shortages of fresh food products could become evident in this area, according to the grocers. The University Food Services, however, reports dining commons supplies are adequate for several weeks.

Until now, the truck strike has affected only the wholesale level of food distribution for the large supermarket chains. This is because the chains move food to retail stores in their own trucks. Delivery at the warehouses has been limited sharply, but not choked off completely yet.

The manager of the Finast Store at the Mountain Farms Mall, Val Vivenzio, told The Collegian; "if it (the strike) continues, it's bound to affect us, one way or another." He said that keeping the shelves stocked will become a problem early next week. Vivenzio said he has not seen any indications of "panic buying" at his store, although such incidents have been reported elsewhere.

Stocks of meat, fruit and vegetables were adequate at Finast, as were fresh fruit and produce at Louis Foods in downtown Amherst. The meat counter at Louis, however, was nearly bare late Wednesday afternoon. Co-owner Joe Vincent said, "I'm in pretty good shape right now, but by Monday or Tuesday we'll be in trouble." The services of independent truckers are far more vital for an independent food store such as Louis, he explained.

The large storage capacity available at the University gives the Food Services Department more time before effects of the strike start to show up in the campus dining commons. Purchasing Manager Richard Bongiovanni said that he is "surprised" there have not been any major difficulties for him yet, although problems are beginning to loom larger.

He said there is a consignment of oranges that cannot be moved from Florida to Amherst because of the strike. As a result, orange juice will be unavailable in about two weeks. Most of the fresh produce served at the dining commons is trucked in from Boston, where dealers say their supplies are starting to run out.

Food Services' orders for fresh meat to be served during March are being placed now and, Bongiovanni said, he is "apprehensive" about what will happen. Suppliers in Springfield and Waterbury, Conn. have told him they have limited stocks now, and are not receiving any shipments from Midwestern slaughterhouses. Bongiovanni estimates that meat now in storage can supply the dining commons until about the end of February.

He referred to a tactic used by A & P this week to ship meat to New England, by flying over 40,000 pounds from Chicago to Boston. He said, "People talk about how big UMass is, how large a food operation we have, but we can't compete with these large chains."

There appears to be no alternative to truck deliveries for the University. It is clear that if the drivers refuse to return to the highways the food supply situation will become critical for UMass by the end of the month, and for the area's retail groceries next week.

When the strike does end, food prices will almost certainly rise, and the lost shipments will create at least a temporary shortage, even if the drivers start hauling again this weekend. While the food supply is being hit first by the work stoppage, because of the perishability of the items, reports indicate gasoline and heating fuel will be next, compounding the already critical shortage of oil products at the retail level.

A bird's eye view

Construction almost finished on second grad tower

by SHERMAN BOYSON

Construction on the Graduate Research Center's second tower, started in June 1972, is almost finished. The work is expected to be completed in July.

Its 15 floors high now and has just one more to go. And my editor thought it would be gosh-all-fun to send a reporter up to the top to see what it's like working out in the open, 250 feet above the ground.

Sure, lots of fun.

The first thing I saw when I walked through the opening in the chain link fence was a big sign proclaiming FRANCHI CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, INC. Underneath that, it brags, "this contract has operater 44 days without a lost time from injury". I just hoped that I wouldn't be the one to break their winning streak.

The closest I had ever been to the Grad Tower was looking at it from the Campus Center. It doesn't look so bad from there. But when you stand right underneath it, look straight up, and realize that you are going to be up there; two words come to mind: Holy Shit!

There are no railings, walls, or other assorted things that would stop me from plummeting to my death. There is this poster on a bulletin board, though. It has two illustrations. One is of a hard hat worker diligently building the tower while he is protected by this sturdy looking guard rail. The second illustration shows the same man without the guard rails. Of course, he is falling off the side of the building. The caption reads, "It isn't the fall that hurts - it's the sudden stop at the bottom."

Real comfort.

Inside the main trailer, the superintendent, Lawrence LeFebvre looked at me like I was insane, but agreed to let me go to the top. He suggested I could get up there while holding onto the hook at the end to the line of the crane, but I declined and asked to use the elevator.

I was given a hard hat by the assistant superintendent Dave Majda, who was to be my guide. As we walked to the elevator, he explained how there are usually five men working on the top. It had been snowing earlier so there would be no workers there now. "It's too slippery up there for them" he explained.

"But not too slippery for me" I thought.

"It looks a lot taller than 15 stories." "The space between the floors is pretty large" Majda replied. "Actually, this tower is tailer than the dorm towers in Southwest."

The elevator is an orange wire cage connected to the outside of the building. You can see outside through the mesh walls as you are going up.

When we got inside the elevator I noticed a sign screaming at me "THIS ELEVATOR HAS NOT BEEN FINALLY APPROVED BY THE ENFORCING AUTHORITY."

"That's just because of a stupid law" Majda said. He explained the elevator shart is constantly being added to as the building gets higher, so it cannot be finally approved until the building is finished. And by then the elevator isn't needed anymore. But as I saw the ground getting farther and farther away from me, that logic did not seem to provide much comfort.

We got out on the 12th floor and walked to the staircase to climb the rest of the way. There are no stairs yet, but a system of makeshift ladders to connect the floors. They are pretty shaky, but they got us to the top.

The initial view was fantastic. Looking straight out,

The initial view was fantastic. Looking straight out, you can see Sunderland and Mount Sugarloaf. Looking straight down, you can see your life flashing before you.

The top of the building was covered with snow. Construction materials littered the floor. Pipes for electricity and plumbing stuck out of the cement. Around the edge were wooden rails of a sort. They didn't look as sturdy as the ones the hard hat in the poster had protecting him. Push on them and they give a little. Madja assured me they would hold.

To stand at the edge and look down is a sensation one cannot imagine. When you look down from the library or a Southwest tower, you have walls and windows and solid objects to holdon to. At the top of the construction, there was just a shaky railing and a lot of air.

Fatal accidents are rare in jobs like this. "Once in a while," Madja said, "you hear of someone taking a dive off the side of some construction project, but not too often." Safety is a big factor with the company. The workers are constantly subject to checks from state, federal and industrial inspectors.

When we were done, we climbed down the shaky ladders and took the elevator to the ground. As I left I looked back to the sign saying they had gone 44 days without an accident. I smiled; now it can go to 45.

VP urges tape release

Ford: Nixon may release tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is actively considering the public release of Watergate-related tapes and documents, Vice President Gerald R. Ford said Thursday.

Ford said that in a meeting with Nixon about 10 days ago, he "urged that these documents be made available as quickly as possible. He (Nixon) said that was being actively considered," the vice president told a news conference.

"It's a matter of timing on the part of attorneys when the decision will be made," Ford added.

At another point, Ford said: "I believe at the appropriate time his lawyers will make certain recommendations to him to release the documents."

However, he said he has no specific information on whether the tapes that might be released include recordings of conversations between Nixon and his fired White House counsel, John W. Dean III. He did not indicate what form such a release might take - such as verbatim transcripts or summaries. Some of these recordings were made available earlier to the Watergate special prosecutor.

Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said at the White House the release of tape transcripts or summaries is under consideration. However, he gave no indication that Nixon would act soon to make them public.

Nixon had said Wednesday, in a letter to a federal judge, that disclosure "to the world at large" of the contents of taped conversations with Dean "would not be in the national interest...." Nixon, responding to a request by the Senate Watergate Committee for the tapes, said their publication would violate the principle of confidentiality.

In a 30-minute session with reporters, Ford said he thinks the White House could properly refuse to supply the House Judiciary Committee with information relating to the panel's investigation of whether there are grounds to impeach Nixon.

Such a refusal would be proper, Ford said, "if the committee goes out on a wide fishing expedition without refining its requests."

"The Constitution clearly defines what are grounds for impeachment," he said. "They are very limited areas: treason, bribery and other high crimes and misdemeanors." The panel cannot go beyond those criteria, Ford said.

The vice president interpreted the 410-4 House vote Wednesday granting the Judiciary Committee broad subpoena power as "recognition that the House of Representatives wants the Committee on the Judiciary to proceed rapidly with proper authority."

Longest space mission ends today

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)-The men of Skylab 3 splash down in the Pacific Ocean this morning to end man's longest space mission, a 34-million-mile, 84-day voyage of scientific research and discovery.

Astronauts Gerald P. Carr, William R. Pogue and Edward G. Gibson return to earth at 11:17 a.m. EDT with the splashdown set for 176 miles southwest of San Diego, Calif. Officials said the men were "ready to come home."

"It's a nice place to visit, but we wouldn't want to live here," said Carr of their 12 weeks in space.

They spent most of Thursday completing the packing of their Apollo command ship, which will bring them back to earth, and shutting down the systems aboard the Skylab space station.

The astronauts changed their sleep schedule to prepare for the return to earth and planned to awaken at 11 p.m. EDT from their final sleep in space. They will undock from the space station at 6:34 a.m. EDT and perform a series of maneuvers which will bring their Apollo craft back into the grasp of earth's gravity.

Skylab, America's first space station and the orbital home for three crews in the last nine months, will be abandoned in orbit. Mission Control will test its systems for about 24 hours, gathering engineering data. Then, on Saturday, experts will send a signal to switch off electrical power and thrn the 118-foot-long Skylab into a space ghost ship.

eight years and then obey the tug of earth's gravity and streak into the atmosphere to be burned up by friction.

The prime Skylab 3 recovery ship, the helicopter carrier USS New Orleans, is on station in the Pacific awaiting the astronauts. Officials predicted good weather for the splashdown with scattered clouds, five to seven foot waves and about 17 mile per hour winds.

Doctors said they expect the astronauts to be in excellent condition, but perhaps somewhat shaky from the effects of man's longest exposure to the weightlessness of space.

Friday's splashdown ends flight in the $2.5 billion Skylab program.

The next U.S. manned space flight scheduled is the Apollo-Soyuz test project, a joint American-Russian mission set for July 1975.

Hearst kidnaping claimed by "revolutionary" army

By BERNARD HURWITZ
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) - The revolutionary and mysterious Symbionese Liberation Army claimed Thursday it had kidnaped newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst, and enclosed her father's gasoline credit card in a letter as proof.

Radio station KPFA, which received the letter, quoted it as saying Miss Hearst was being held in protective custody and that ransom demands would be made in subsequent communications.

It said the organization -which has claimed responsibility for murdering the Oakland, Calif., school superintendent last year - would "execute" the 19-year-old coed and anyone who tries to rescue her before its demands are fulfilled.

Miss Hearst, daughter of Randolph A. Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, was dragged screaming from her apartment Monday night by two men who fired at witnesses as they left.

Hearst said Thursday he was sure the credit card as authentic, and Mrs. Hearst as quoted as confirming her daughter carried some credit cards made out in her father's name.

Hearst, who was described in the liberation army's letter as an "enemy of the people." said in a statement:

"I hope whatever demands they make are the kind it is possible to fulfill. If they are political demands, it will be hard to do anything."

He said he interprets the letter, dated Monday and mailed in Berkeley, to mean that some demands will be made in "the next few hours or a day."

Charles Bates, special agent in charge of the FBI's San Francisco office, said: "We assume the letter probably is authentic if it had a credit card without it. We don't have anything else, but if the credit card is authentic, then they apparently have her."

KPFA said the letter described itself as an "arrest warrant issued by the Court of the People."

The FBI said the letter was given to Hearst.

The Symbionese Liberation Army is a self-described multi-racial revolutionary organization which first surfaced when it claimed responsibility for the Nov. 6 murder of Oakland School Supt. Marcus Foster.

The SLA said all its communications must be published in all newspapers and other news media or Miss Hearst's safety would be threatened.

Britons to decide Heath Fate February 28

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Edward Heath announced yesterday a national election for Feb. 28. He was hoping for overwhelming public support to crush mounting industrial unrest, spearheaded by a threatened coal miners' strike.

Heath coupled his announcement with an appeal to leaders of the country's 280,000 coal miners to postpone their strike, scheduled for Sunday, until after the three-week election campaign. The union's policy-making body was to discuss Heath's appeal Friday.

In a nationwide television address Thursday night, the prime minister made it clear that the miners' demands for pay above ceilings his government has set to combat inflation would be the prime issue in the elections. The ballot, he said, would give voters a chance to tell the miners: "Times are hard. We're all in the same boat and if you sink us now we will all drown."

The miners' president, Joe Gormley, said he personally favored postponing the strike, but some militants predicted their men would walk out of the pits even if the stoppage was deferred.

Heath said: "We cannot afford the luxury of tearing ourselves apart any more... It is time for you to say to the extremists and the militants and the plain and simple misguided: "We have had enough."

Heath's decision to hold elections drew prompt fire from within his own party. Enoch Powell, an influential legislator who has often collided with Heath in the past, called the elections "an act of gross irresponsibility" and said he would not be a candidate.

"The election will be essentially fraudulent," Powell said in a letter to Conservatives in his electoral district. He said the Heath government knows it will have to abandon what he termed an untenable position in the miners' dispute after the election.

As Heath was making his announcement, locomotive engineers staged a one-day walkout in the eastern district of Britain, one of a series of 24-hour stoppages called by the engineers, who for the past seven weeks have been on a work-by-the-book campaign to back pay demands.

In the House of Commons, Heath traded insults with Harold Ilson, charging his Labor party challenger with deserting his own policies. Wilson countered by saying Heath, who led the Conservatives in toppling the Labor government in 1970, must personally bear the blame for the threatened miners' strike.

The schedule calls for disolution of Parliament Friday with the new Parliament to open March 12. Heath's announcement said Queen Elizabeth II would return early from Australia on March 1 to appoint as prime minister the leader of the political party that controls a majority in the 630-seat House of Commons.

Heath's Conservatives now hold 320 seats in the chamber, a majority of 14. Heath acted with 15 months still to go in his five-year term, but under the British political system the prime minister selects the election date.

Britons seem split on the miners' case. They have been working a three-day week since Jan. 1 because of fuel shortages. Coal supplies 70 per cent of Britain's electricity. Closing the coalfields could mean four million of the nation's 25 million workers would lose their jobs the first month.

Observers said the Labor party would be helped by a postponement of the strike, removing the "Who runs Britain." theme from the Conservatives' campaign. Miners could say they were acting in the public interest.

SO THAT'S WHAT THEY LOOK LIKE — John Sawhill, deputy administrator of the Federal Energy Office, holds up some gas rationing coupons. Massachusetts goes on voluntary rationing Monday. They may not be stand-by coupons much longer.

Terrorist plane ok'd for Kuwait landing

By JOSEPH PANOSSIAN
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT(AP)-Kuwait reversed itself Thursday night and said it will allow a plane carrying four terrorists from Singapore to land in this desert sheikdom "in response to repeated appeals from Japan."

It said the plane will then pick up nine guerrilla gunmen holding 12 hostages in the Japanese Embassy here because they promised to free hostages once the plane landed and leave the country.

Their destination was not given.

In Singapore, officials said the four terrorists left the country on a Japan Air Lines plane after freeing three hostages they held for eight days on a ferryboat. They seized the hostages after an abortive attempt to blow up the Shell Oil refinery in Singapore. Two of them said they belonged to Japan's Red Army, and two claimed membership in the Popular Front for the Liberationof Palestine.

The nine gunmen in the Japanese Embassy here also have identified themselves as members of the Red Army, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and a group called the Sons of Palestine.

The gunmen, who seized the embassy Wednesday along with 16 hostages, had demanded that the Tokyo government send a plane to Singapore, pick up the four other terrorists and bring them to Kuwait.

King, pay raise calm Jordanian mutiny

By PAUL TREUTHARDT
Associated Press Writer

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) - King Hussein visited rebellious army units to announce a pay raise and Premier Zaid Rifai said Thursday that "the problem has been solved."

Amman radio broke a five-day blackout on news of the troubles and reported that Hussein visited several Bedouin units. The radio quoted Rifai as saying the dispute had been over pay, and that it ended when the king announced a pay raise.

"I would like people to understand that this is all that happened," Rifai was quoted saying, "and I would like to stress that the army's loyalty to his majesty is beyond doubt, contrary to what someof our enemies would like to believe."

Sources in Amman supported the reports that the pay hikes had apparently solved the problem.

Jordanian television showed the king and his top commanders visiting with troops. The telecast said Hussein told the troops that he decided two months ago to boost their wages, and that the cabinet passed the hike last week.

Reports filtering into Beirut had said some 2,000 troops mutinied at the garrison town of Zerqa, 15 miles north of Amman, last Sunday over low pay and allegations of corruption in high government and military circles. There was no way to check the authenticity of the reports.

They said Hussein had cut short a visit to London and cancelled one to the United States to return and deal with the rebellion.

The Beirut reports also said the mutineers demanded the resignation of Rifai, Hussein's cousin; army Chief of Staff Sheriff Zaidnbin Shaker and other top government and court officials.

Observers in Beirut said the king acted promptly on the pay demands, but sternly told the dissidents that he alone would decide who commands the army, who was a member of his court and who would serve in government office.

Citizens in Amman have complained that the price of meat, for instance, has doubled in the past two months from $2 to about $4 for 2.2 pounds. Flour, sugar and tea, which are subject to price controls, have been scarce on the markets, apparently because of hoarding.

Late last year, civil servants were granted a pay raise. The cabinet voted at the same time against a pay increase for the army. Instead, a $3.10 cost of living increase for enlisted men and a $15.50 to $31 cost of living increase for officers was announced. This was far below the 10 per cent granted to civil servants. In addition the story was widely circulated that Hussein had granted a large sum of money for senior officers housing.

Wednesday night, only 24 hours after Hussein returned to Amman, the government announced a pay increase for the army and internal security forces retroactive to Feb. 1. The announcement did not give the amount of the increase.

Truck strike may continue

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Independent truckers and their spokesmen said almost unanimously Thursday they intended to continue their eight-day strike rather than accept a proposed settlement announced in Washington.

"It's a sellout," said Roger Galloway, an official of Overdrive magazine, one of the most influential organizations which pushed for the shutdown that has brought guerrilla warfare tactics in some areas and left more than 100,000 workers laid off.

The Washington settlement denounced by some strikers provides for guaranteed diesel fuel supplies for truck stops which have been running short and a surcharge on freight rates to allow independent drivers to immediately recover increased fuel costs.

Details of the settlement were to be outlined later, and a few of the truckers and their spokesmen took a wait-and-see attitude.

But most who could be reached in an Associated Press spot check Thursday said it was too little, too late. They said by allowing a surcharge in freight rates rather than rolling back diesel fuel prices, the burden of increased costs was being put on the consumer.

It has not been possible to determine exactly how many of the estimated 10,000 independents who own their own tractors and contract their services had participated in the shutdown, but the number is high. And some Teamsters, who are paid by the hour and not affected by higher diesel fuel prices, have also stayed off the roads rather than risk the increasingly dangerous turnpikes.

East getting the shaft on gas

By JEFFREY D. ALDERMAN
Associated Press Writer

Americans in the East keep asking the same question these days: "How come we have less gasoline than anybody else?"

An Associated Press region-by-region survey of the country shows that their complaints are not imagined. The East, expecially the Northeast, is taking bigger lumps.

The eastern part of the South is also hard hit, expecially in heavily urban states like Florida.

The Midwest's problems are heaviest in urban areas, particularly around Chicago. The heavily rural states report no major problems.

The Southwest, which has scattered gasoline shortages, has no major problems. The West, like the Midwest, finds most of its big troubles in urban areas such as Los Angeles. Some of the sparsely populated states report scattered pockets of small surpluses. The reason: The tourists have been staying away.

The Federal Energy office says the East's more severe troubles stem from the fact they rely heavily on Arab oil, now shut off by an embargo. Panic buying and other reasons are cited, but the experts feel these are merely corollaries to the Arab oil problems.

Until Jan. 15, the government had no way to smooth out distribution of fuel. Those states — most of them in the East — who were supplied from company refineries using heavy quantities of Arab oil, get less gasoline.

Senate split on price bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Senate split by the issue of oil prices debated emergency energy legislation yesterday with little chance of acting soon.

"There aren't 10 senators that know what's in this bill," Sen. Paul J. Fannin, R-Ariz., said as he began a mini-filibuster which seemed sure to delay a vote on the bill until after the 10-day Lincoln Day recess which begins today.

"The rhetoric the senator is giving us is the rhetoric of delay," Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, (D-Maine) responded, accusing Fannin of promoting "the forces that are out to kill" the bill reported out by a Senate-House conference Wednesday. The debate centered on a prevision in the bill which would roll back the price of unregulated domestic crude oil to the $5.25 per barrel level of oil still controlled by Phase 4 regulations.

Senate Interior chairman Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., has estimated the rollback, which would affect roughly one-quarter of the oil drilled in the United States, could cut the pump price of gasoline by four cents a gallon.

Federal energy chief William E. Simon has called the rollback "unworkable," arguing that it would destroy incentives for the oil companies to increase their production. Yesterday's the third time the Senate has attempted to pass a bill that would give President Nixon the authority to order gasoline rationing and other mandatory fuel-saving measures.

Attempts to pass the bill before Christmas failed in the face of objections to a provision designed to recaptured any excess profits earned by the petroleum industry.

The conferees voted for the oil rollback in place of the excess profits provision, an action which did little to solve administration objections to the bill.

The conferees also failed to ease administration objections to a provision that would extend $500 million in unemployment benefits to persons laid off by the energy crisis.

MBTA starts cheap passes

BOSTON (AP) - Greater Boston's public transit system announced yesterday it is establishing pre-paid passes good for unlimited travel at a discount of 10 to 15 per cent on daily commuting costs.

The discount passes will be restricted to commuters whose employers agree to participate in the program.

One of the city's largest employers, the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., has agreed its employes can sign up for passes starting March 1. State government employes can begin April 1.

John Hancock has 6,500 employes in its home office, of which 2,000 regularly use the MBTA. A company spokesman said the firm would be pleased if 1,000 signed up.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent told the news conference "the plan makes sense for society as a whole. The automobile squanders our energy and pollutes our air. It is a luxury which has become too expensive to bear."

NE governors eye rationing

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Drivers in Bridgeport, Conn., got the first New England tryout of gasoline rationing yesterday while Massachusetts officials worked out details of a statewide plan that begins Monday.

In Boston, the region's chief executives met for the New England Governors Conference, and talk at their closed-door session centered on region-wide rationing.

Before the meeting, Gov. Thomas Salmon of Vermont said he thought the six states should adopt a single uniform rationing plan. "New England should adopt a system tailored to our interests," he said.

But earlier in the day, Gov. Thomas Meskill told a news conference that he opposed state-level rationing, because it doesn't increase supply.

"We must keep in mind that the biggest problem is the shortage of supply," Meskill said.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire has already spoken against plans similar to the one that goes into effect in Massachusetts Monday. That system asks drivers with even number license plates to buy gas on even dates and odd plates on odd dates.

The governors are expected to discuss rationing at a public meeting today of the New England Regional Commission.

In Bridgeport, lines at the service stations were cut in half on the first day of a mandatory rationing system. Only cars with odd-numbered license plates were allowed to pull up to the pumps. On Friday, cars with even numbers may buy gas.

"It's the best I've ever seen. I usually wait an hour," said one Bridgeport driver filling up yesterday morning.

A police hotline set up to tell motorists what stations were open was less than successful on its first day, however. Only three dealers had phoned in by mid-morning to inform police that they were open, while 200 motorists had called looking for information.

One industry spokesman said many ealers feared they might touch off a panic if they publicized the fact they had gas.

At the State House in Boston, John Verani, secretary of consumer affairs, met with service station representatives and an auto club to work out details of Massachusetts voluntary rationing plan.

Salesman are exempted from the rationing, and one of the topics of concern was who would fit into this category.

Before the governor's meeting in Boston, Salmon of Vermont met in Washington with federal energy chief William Simon.

Afterward, Salmon said he felt more gasoline would be supplied to stations in his state to replace those lost when independent dealers folded.

Salmon said he thought Simon now understood the equity problem. "The equity problem is the situation of Vermonters who are leading the nation in energy conservation, the New Englanders who through conservation measures as a group are saving 15 per cent in supplies compared with an average of only 2 per cent national savings," Salmon said.

Meskill said Simon told him that more gasoline was on the way to Connecticut.

The governor said that in a telephone call, Simon agreed to send his federal allocation director to Connecticut on Monday to arrange the redistribution of gasoline from other states.

A Meskill spokesman said Simon agreed to send John Webber, the federal fuel allocation director, to Connecticut today to arrange the redistribution of gasoline from other states.

Webber was to meet at 3 p.m. in Bridgeport with local retailers and officials on their gasoline problems, the spokesman said. Webber is scheduled to meet in Hartford with representatives of the major oil companies, according to the spokesman.

"Washington is satisfied that Connecticut is bearing a disproportionate share of the burden for the gas situation," Meskill said. "This will not be a fact-finding trip. He'll be here to get action."

Supplies for:

Utilities

BOSTON (AP) — Gasoline supplies at service stations throughout Massachusetts showed some improvement during the past week, according to the Massachusetts division of the American Automobile Association.

The AAA said yesterday that most stations have received their first February delivery, but some have nearly exhausted their supplies, and are awaiting new deliveries, so long gasoline lines continue.

Auto

BOSTON (AP) — Inventories of residual oil used by New England electric utilities increased 5.8 per cent to 5 million barrels during the past week, an industry organization said yesterday.

A report issued by the New England Power Pool said a stable supply of coal, a projected increase in the availability of nuclear power and increased shipments of residual oil will fulfill the region's electric energy requirements over the next month.

Simon to Meskill 'gas on the way'

HARTFORD (AP)-William E. Simon, chief of the Federal Energy Office, FEO, told Gov. Thomas J. Meskill yesterday that more gas was on its way to the state.

Meskill said that in a morning telephone call, Simon agreed to send John Webber, the federal allocation director to Connecticut on Monday to arrange the redistribution of gasoline from other states.

"Washington is satisfied that Connecticut is bearing a disproportionate share of the burden for the gas situation," Meskill told a news conference. "This will not be a fact finding trip. He'll be here to get action."

At his news conference, Meskill rejected instituting the Oregon even odd license plate rationing system statewide. "The Oregon plan doesn't increase the supply," Meskill said. "We must keep in mind that the biggest problem is the shortage of supply."

But later in the day, Meskill received a telegram from Simon urging him and all other governors to adopt the Oregon plan. Meskill called a joint session of the legislature next Wednesday to address the question.

The city of Bridgeport began yesterday the first mandatory gasoline rationing system in Connecticut, with good results.

An aide to Mayor Nicholas Panuzio said "Basically we're very pleased." The problem remained that many stations didn't have any gas to sell, he said.

On this first day, Feb. 7, cars with license plates ending with odd numbers were allowed to use the pumps. Friday will be reserved for even numbers. The system shortened lines at pumps as much as 50 per cent, according to some dealers.

"My lines were less than half what they normally were," said gas retailer Angelo Guzzi, "I haven't had a single argument all morning."

Somebody had to take an initial action to alleviate the situation," Panuzio's aide said.

Webber told Connecticut congressmen Wednesday that Connecticut got 65 percent of its January, 1972 supply last month and that the rest of the country got 82 per cent of its 1972 supply.

Did you know that you could keep your car healthy and still have enough money left to eat all weekend? The trick is not to bring it to your friendly mechanic, who is probably too busy pumping gas anyway, but to do it your self at the Student Auto Workshop. The Student Auto Workshop is located on level one of the Campus Center Garage. It is now open and the hours are 3-11 p.m. Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday; 9-5 on Saturday; and 10-4 on Sunday. Tuesday and Wednesday they specialize in domestic cars, Thursday is V.W. day, and Saturday and Sunday is for both foreign and domestic cars.

The staff, which includes Paul Brehaut, president; Bruce Strock, parts manager; Marc Waxman, treasurer; and also Jeff Dwyer, Marc Brehaut, Bill Guild, Jeanie Emond, Warren Bean, Mac MacKenezy, and Paul Emond; is on hand to give advice and help.

This semester the tool collection has increased to include a compressor, tire changer, impact tools, and an oscilliscope. The O-scope can diagnose most engine problems which rob power and increase fuel consumption. Rates to use the workshop are $2.00 for the first hour and $1.00 for each additional hour.

Conn. truckers reject pact

HARTFORD (AP) — Independent truckers in Connecticut Thursday rejected a federal offer and called a meeting to decide whether to expand their protest to picketing trucking companies and truck stops.

The meeting was called for 8 p.m. at the Union 76 station in Branford.

Meanwhile, state wholesalers continue to report shortages of meat and produce.

Under a tentative agreement between federal officials and striking truckers, the government would guarantee 100 per cent of their fuel needs and allow truckers to collect a freight surcharge.

John Pinchet, a spokesman for the independents, said the tentative agreement was rejected by Overdrive, an industry magazine.

"There's not a pound of beef or poultry in the house," said a spokesman for the Standard Beef Co. of New Haven, a major supplier of meat in the state.

He said poultry was expected in his warehouse by Friday although the earliest he could get beef would be the middle of next week if the truck strike lasted that long.

John Bishop, the manager of the Hartford Regional Market, said there was little movement of produce into his warehouses Thursday. A few trailers filled with meat, potatoes and cabbage had come in.

The Finast supermarket chain had shipped some of its produce by rails, a company spokesman said, and that it was "business as usual."

He said that if the truck strike continues any length of time, there will be shortages.

Cotton sick

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Sen. Norris Cotton returned to Mary Hitchcock Hospital Thursday with a sinus infection — his third hospital stay in six months.

The 73-year-old New Hampshire Republican's aides said Cotton apparently left the hospital too early last month and had a relapse of a respiratory ailment caused by a sinus infection.

He was reported in satisfactory condition. Last week Cotton said he would reconsider dropping plans to retire at the end of his term this year and would make known this week his decision on whether to seek a re-election.

Harrington proposes gun bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., introduced legislation Thursday to ban the private possession of handguns except for law enforcement personnel and antique gun collectors.

Handgun owners would be able to turn in their firearms to a law enforcement agency and receive the fair market value of the pistol within six months after the bill takes effect, Harrington said.

It's a bowfin

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Massachusetts' first recorded catch of a bowfin fish was confirmed Thursday by the state Department of Natural Resources.

The 2-foot long, 5-pound catch was recorded Saturday by Chester A. Zaorski Jr. of Pittsfield while he was ice fishing on Lake Oneta here.

DNR district fisheries manager Lee M. Daly confirmed the catch Thursday and said it was the first recorded catch of a bowfin in the Bay State. He said the bowfin is the only living relic of a large family of fish dating back to prehistoric times. He described it as "one of the most primitive and voracious freshwater fish."

Wyman: Nixon should testify

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Luis Wyman, a long-time supporter of President Nixon, said Thursday the President should appear voluntarily before the House Judiciary Committee.

In a speech before the House, the New Hampshire Republican said he would vote to give the committee subpoena powers in its impeachment investigation but said he hoped it would not be necessary to subpoena Nixon.

"The best possible way of getting this unhappy business of impeaching or not impeaching over with once and for all is for the President to appear voluntarily," he said.

The House, he said should not "play guessing games with tapes or memoranda or anything else as to what the President himself knew or did or instructed when the President is available to respond..."

State hospital phase-out proposed

BOSTON(AP) — A comprehensive plan to phase out Massachusetts state mental hospitals over the next five years was presented to Gov. Francis W. Sargent Thursday.

The report was prepared by the United Community Planning Corporation in conjunction with the Department of Mental Health. It calls for re-deploying much of the $80 million spent annually for these state hospitals to community based mental health programs, publically and privately operated.

The governor said he has asked the state agency to consider three features of the proposed "de-institutionalization." He said a study should determine what technical help the state should provide if hospitals are phased down or phased out, what the economic impact would be and how present personnel can be re-employed.

The report showed the impatient population in state hospitals dropped from 23,000 in the mid-1950's to 7,200 as of last June. The Grafton State Hospital has been closed and the study indicated 188 of its 358 patients at the closing date were transferred to nursing homes.

Demone's said the goal of the department should be a phase out in five years of existing state mental hospitals. But department Commissioner William Goldman, in supporting the plan, said facilities would be phased down, rather than closed.

Pay raises ok

The Collegian resumes the practice of running editorials in this space. Unsigned editorials represent the views of a majority of The Collegian editors, acting in the best interests of UMass students.

Sometimes the press of nightly deadlines and lightening-fast writing causes us to overlook what otherwise might have seemed a significant event.

For example, the Student Senate approved a major self-reorganization to better serve students. That was the story that made news Thursday.

But during the same meeting, the student representatives also raised the hourly pay scale for some twenty secretaries who work for the Student Government Association. They increased pay to four types of jobs involving typing, dictation, and keypunching by increments of 25 cents starting at $2.00 an hour.

The effect of the move is to provide equal payment to women in classified positions in seven affected organizations--among them the Collegian, the Senate and WMUA.

Even though the pay increases will mean another 7 cents charged to each undergraduate in the semester activities fee, the amount seems a small price to pay striking a blow at the systematic salary descrimination against women that this University and most institutions in our society still practice.

At the same time the move, though only symbolic, should serve notice to the Whitmore administration that the time has come to reevaluate salaries of the many secretaries on campus, some of whom carry as much responsibility and work as their bosses, and should surely deserve the title "administrative assistant."

Even though the University is faced with a no-growth budget for 1975, there surely must be funds somewhere to give the women employees of UMass the status and financial rewards they deserve.

Gas crisis planned

Indians, ecologists, communist plot

Long lines waiting to buy gas at 50 cents a gallon, talks of rationing, the urgency to conserve energy, etc. have all been upon us since October or so. Last December, I wrote a column headlined "Crisis Not Due To Limited Supply" which said that the energy crisis was a planned affair by the oil magnates and that rationing would be one of the worst things to happen to this country. While the oil magnates are at fault, blame is also to be put elsewhere for the problem at hand.

Probably the biggest factor in developing the crisis was the government. Charging high taxes to drill oil wells (even with the 27½ per cent depletion allowance) and taxing gas very highly sure doesn't do anything to motivate people to drill. And making laws which severely limit drilling won't help either.

Probably the biggest thing that has hindered oil development is the ecology movement. It started with "Earth Day" in 1970 (held on Lenin's 100th birthday). It was backed by such groups as the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. The biggest result of this, so far, has been Senator Henry Jackson's National Environmental Policy Act. (NEP). This is the same Jackson who says we need more of a gas supply. What the NEP has done is put a big dent in oil production. The oil companies, because of this act, were not free to explore the Alaska Pipeline in useless tundra. Communist organizations, such as the American Indian Movement are free to take the oil companies to court even though they don't even own the land that would be drilled on.

We have over a 500 year supply of crude oil left within our boundaries. We need to explore for it and get it out of the ground. In 500 years, oil may very well become obsolete if someone has the capital and the incentive to develop a bettter substitute.

Another thing, despite the scare stories, there have only been three major oil spills and none of them have had any lasting effects. Mother Nature did a good job in cleaning up the mess. The oil companies have been working on methods of stopping oil spills which will solve this problem.

While certain methods of conserving energy are just common sense, rationing would be like putting out a fire with kerosene. We certainly don't need that. What we do need is a clamping down of government restrictions on oil companies. They should be encouraged to explore for more oil. The National Environmental Policy Act should be repealed. It has done more harm than good.

One more thing, why would the Fords and Rockefellers sponsor these environmentalists? It seems as though they and the federal government want to create this shortage to get more power for themselves and soak us for more money. Repealing the laws that favor shortages would solve this . WE CANNOT LET OUR CONGRESS GIVE FAVORABLE LEGISLATION TO THESE OIL BARONS! WE CANNOT GIVE THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MORE POWER! AND WE MUST EXPOSE THE FRAUD THAT THE OIL COMPANIES ARE TRYING TO PUT OVER US. As a good friend of mine would say, "Wake up and listen, then act!"

Bulletin-Bulletin-Bulletin

Informed sources in Washington said today that Charles Camelopard, UMass Daily Collegian Correspondent is not dead as reported in Mid-December.

Pomery J. Twaddlemind, director of sewers in the capitol city, claimed that during a routine inspection of White House sewers Camelopard was discovered floating on a raft drinking a Blatz beer and reading a copy of the Reader's Digest Guide to Anatomy.

When asked what he was doing in the sewers Camelopard remarked that his death notice is now inoperative and that he had gone to the White House sewers to investigate some of the material that had been flowing through official channels since the first Watergate discoveries.

His first column in nearly two months appears below.

Charles Camelopard

I have a plan...

President Nixon was heard conversing with a group of advisers while in the men's room of the executive office suite at the White House today. Among his comments was the statement that Americans have been too damn happy lately. The Presidents voice rose to crescendo at this thought:

"I'M SICK OF BEING THE MOST MISERABLE MAN IN THE COUNTRY. EVERYBODY IS LAUGHING. LAST WEEK WHEN I GAVE THE STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS, THE DEMOCRATS IN THE GALLERY WERE LAUGHING. THIS WEEK WHEN I AGREED TO FREEZE DIESEL FUEL PRICES THE TRUCKERS WERE LAUGHING. ZIEGLER ALWAYS HAS A DUMB SMILE ON HIS FACE. HE'S HAPPY. I AM MISERABLE! I HAVE BEEN SINCE THIS WHOLE WATERGATE MESS STARTED. WHY EVEN THAT DAMN FORD HAS A VULTURE'S SMILE ON HIS FACE. I AM THE PRESIDENT. IF I HAVE TO BE MISERABLE ALL THE TIME THEN THE REST OF THE PEOPLE WILL BE MISERABLE TOO. I GAVE THEM AGNEW TO MAKE THEM MISERABLE!! I GAVE THEM A GAS SHORTAGE TO MAKE THEM MISERABLE!! I GAVE THEM MASSIVE UNEMPLOYMENT TO MAKE THEM MISERABLE!! I SOLD THE BREAD OFF THEIR TABLES TO MAKE THEM MISERABLE!! I GAVE THEM MORE SCANDAL IN ONE YEAR OF A PRESIDENCY THAN EVER SEEN BEFORE TO MAKE THEM MISERABLE. NOW LOOK WHAT'S HAPPENING. I JUST HEARD THE OTHER DAY THAT LIQUOR SALES ARE UP OVER LAST YEAR. EVERYBODY'S HOME DRINKING, LAUGHING AND HAVING A GOOD TIME WHILE I'M MISERABLE. WE ARE GOING TO PUT AN END TO THIS RIGHT NOW. ZIEGLER, GET THAT STUPID SMILE OFF YOUR FACE AND MEET ME IN MY OFFICE. I HAVE A PLAN...

In a tape recording purloined from the executive office it was learned that Mr. Nixon's plan was to put the country on laughter rationing early next week. The following restrictions will be placed on American's happiness.

1. People who have names that begin with an odd letter of the alphabet will be allowed to laugh on odd calendar dates only. People who have names beginning with even letters can laugh on even days only.

2. People who are having a laugh day must hang a green pendant from their window. Non-laughing days will be marked with red pendants. People who have heard a good joke on a non-laughing day and expect to burst into laughter after midnite must hang out an emergency yellow flag.

3. Laughter sustained for more than five minutes is hereby suspended.

4. Beginning March 1, we will implement daylight laugh saving time. All laughter after 4:00 p.m. will be forbidden. (This is to eliminate laughter at the Three Stoogers, a major cause of overlaughing.) Giggles during the evening newscasts will be allowed on laugh days.

5. There will be organized a super agency known as the Federal Laughter Agency to monitor the amount of happiness in the country. It will be headed by H. R. Haldeman, Charles Colson, Spiro Agnew, John Mitchell, Maurice Stans and John Erhlichman. They are perfect for the job. None of them are laughing now.

6. There will be no singing, finger snapping, whistling or dancing except between the hours of 2:30 and 4:30 on Mondays whose calander date is a multiple of three.

7. The attendance at UMass Student Senate Meetings, the largest source of laughter on the East Coast, is strictly forbidden. Non-compliance is punishable by hanging. It is hoped that this strong measure will not only cut down on general laughter, but will eliminate the occasional person who laughs himself to death at one of these affairs.

Good n' plenty

By RAYMOND K. TIE

Somewhere, in the infinite ambiguity of time, their exists a land called Plenty. A huge and beautiful country, its history is an interesting one to examine.

A terrible tyrant, King Rudolph was wringing the very life and sustinence from the people of Plenty. The people, a kind and generous group, fond of helping others and proud of helping themselves, finally could stand it no longer. Their primary motivation, freedom, was slowly being exorcised.

Well, without going into detail, the people of Plenty volted and put mighty King Rudolph from their land and restored good in Plenty.

The people rejoiced and set about the task of building a new government whereby the power to insure their basic needs and desires was put in writing to foresake any other rotten rex intent upon thievery and exploitation.

For many years, this new government reigned. Every four years new people were elected to office by the citizens, and things went well.

To a great extent, this was due to the overriding courage of a few people. While they were not all of like opinion as to what was best for Plenty, they all realized that conflict between the people was unavoidable and should be accepted as necessary for producing good for the greatest number; for keeping everyone content and prosperous, with work, food, and shelter available to all.

This obviously was no easy task as the people of Plenty were many and from diverse lands and backgrounds. However, they were all united in one thought — the Scourge of King Rudolph must never return.

The land of Plenty encountered many tests in the first century and established itself amoung the countries of the world as the freest and most desirable. Families from the world over journeyed under the most adverse conditions to Plenty, and all were accepted.

The Country grew and grew, and the beauty and resources of this immense land began to unfold. And the people of Plenty were happy for there was enough for everyone.

Plenty repeatedly survived these tests that confront all countries in their formative years. To a great extent, this success was due to the fact that the people were convinced of the virtue of their way and strived to keep their government open and visible in order to insure the longevity of their freedom.

Then, at the beginning of the second century of Plenty's existence, another revolution took place. Although not openly violent, it took its toll in lives none-the-less. The people found themselves becoming slaves to a new institution called industry. A few far-sighted souls saw what was happening and amidst all the seeming blessings of this revolution, they pledged themselves to, and called for caution. The freedom of Plenty was again being attacked, they said, only this time it was from within.

Well, very few people agreed with this band of alarmists, saying that such prosperity was unheard of. Of course they were right, but they didn't see the point, said the "radicals". Human freedom was being sacrificed to the god of machinery and production, they said. Plenty was selling its dignity for money.

Fortunately for the Plentians, this small band of clairvoyant citizens did not give up their fight for freedom. They persisted in trying to halt or at least control this tornado of growth for they knew that failure would result in the destruction of the heart of Plenty's democracy; the war against tyranny.

Happily, more and more people fell in line and the tide of industrialization leveled off somewhat in the face of the beginnings of official control. However, it was also very apparent to these people that this battle was not a momentary one, but one that must be ever watchful and ready to act.

Anyway, Plenty got involved in a war and lost many sons. This was the first war in which the newly acquired productive power was used and it proved very effective.

After the war, the people were lulled into passivity by an ever greater prosperity and by the sadness incurred by the death and destruction of war. They, for the first time in their history, turned their eyes from the government and its activities in the society. This might not have been so serious had not the internal enemies gained so much power during the war. Brazenly without fear, these enemies took control of all resources, land, minerals, jobs, and even achieved the respect of the leaders of the land, who convieniently turned their backs on the process. One of them even went so far as to say "the business of Plenty is business," which sounded good to all except the farmers and poor of the land who were on the verge of collapse due to the control over production and prices the enemies of land had acquired.

Then a remarkable thing happened. The people of Plenty stopped buying all the products that sustained the enemy. This of course, was not planned on, and since all the business of the land was in the hands of the enemy, the nation's economy collapsed.

Now, this sounds very bad, but in effect, it was only bad for a short while because it put the power of the land back into the government where it could again work for good in Plenty.

Slowly, the government regained control. And once again, the country met disaster. Another war, bigger and more devastating than the last. However, the good was very small and very immediate while the bad was immense and nearly irreversible. It took Plenty out of depression, but gave the land back to the enemies for a long time.

The far sighted people again rose and were not heard, and Plenty again lost to the enemy. However, the enemies, being intelligent men, saw that they needed to control the government. So they quietly set about doing it in various ways, most only superficially legal, and some downright luciferous. For nearly two decades they gathered power to give credence to their nefarious ways. They convinced many elected officials that their philosophy was parallel to that of Plenty and even called it freedom, although it was in fact slavery to an inhuman condition. The people, lulled by a decade of death, lived blind and insensitive to the true motives of the enemy.

However the power of any land lies in the people. They alone can make a nation, and at long last the people began to perceive the results of the last century and the incredible prospensity of the enemies to promulgate evil.

Horror swept the nation. Young and old alike were awed and sickened by what they awoke to; the free land of Plenty steeped in governmental corruption, in monopoly by the enemies, in social inequity, and above all, they saw how their unique system had been sabotaged and given over to disconcern with the citizenry and how it had become dedicated to the institution of slavery throughout the world (in conjunction with the enemies.)

Well, the people, being descended from the strength and virtue of the original Plentians, rose again in revolution to destroy the evil that had infiltrated their land.

Today, the people of Plenty are fighting resolutly to stop the ruination of their land, the sale of Plenty to materialism, the dessimation of freedom.

To The Editor:

I'm writing this letter in response to an advertisement I read in your todays' (2-6-74) paper. Something or another about a poetry reading, somewhere in a lounge in a field house.

To make a long story short, I was pointed in the general direction of the reading, assuring the people who showed me the way that some brother or sister would show me the right direction...

I wasn't the only one lost at the great Big Ol' White house. The people who was driving around, asked me where they were going, and if I could point them in the right direction. Of course, being lost myself, I had hoped they could assist me...NO HELP!

The trail lead up the hill to where children must have slid down on sleds.

I came down the hill cussing, madder than a .... I wanted to know where I was, and if anybody could direct me in the right direction.

Someone did...

I would like to thank the White Lady who answered the door of the Big House. Thank you Ms. White Lady. I would like to thank the Black Man who stood tall, and wore nice clothing out into the night air to show me the right way, who pointed to the trail that people was walking on and the red light on top of the tall building; and the lost people who found out they were at the right place all alone.

Finger lickin' good?

To The Editor:

I should like to bring to the attention of the student body that the local Colonel Sanders franchise is charging higher prices for their chicken than a similar establishment in New Bedford, Mass.

While in New Bedford last month, I recorded chicken prices at the Colonel Sanders there for comparison and found them to be up to 18 per cent less than the prices at the Amherst establishment.

The pieces of chicken in New Bedford were also larger in comparison to the pigeon portions served here. I had expected standard prices at all such chain roadhouses but that is apparently not the case.

Be forewarned that the local Colonel Sanders Fried Chicken is overpricing its food. As for me, the local Colonel Sanders can lick my southern fried middle finger!

Super prison

By ERNIE KING

As the New England governors meet today, at the Parker House in Boston, penal reform could be set back to the year one B.C. One of the topics on the agenda that they will be discussing, is the creation of a regional super prison, for the New England Area. This institution will deal with the "special offender," and will offer, "special treatment," to the inmate to aide in his rehabilitation. Special offenders are defined by correction officials as those inmates that pose security problems for institutions or act aggresively to corrections officers. Special treatment is another term for technological facism and runs the gamut from psychopharmacology to bioelectrical mind-behaviour control.

The super prison is the result of a study conducted by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration and Dr. William Curran, Professor of Legal Medicine at Harvard. The study has already branded 365 inmates in the New England area as special offenders, 115 of these inmates are from Massachusetts. Inmates were placed on this list without being interviewed by Curran or his staff. Curran chose to rely on information obtained from guards and the prison disciplinary records.

Massachusetts will not be participating directly in this program because we can handle our own special offenders according to Corrections Commissioner Frank Hall and because the legislature and the Dept. of Mental Health have placed a great deal of pressure on both Hall and Gov. Sargent. While not participating, we still have the procedures necessary to transfer a man to Kittery, if we have to. Another reason for our not participating is the reconstruction of the Departmental Segregation Unit (DSU) located at M.C.I. Bridgewater. Sargent closed it down two years ago and now is spending 11 million dollars to rebuild it. This facility will consist of a 20 cell seclusion ward, in the rear of the medical building. It will have fourteen regular cells along with six cells of the "Chinese water torture type." These six cells are of particular interest because they are similar in design to ones that Sargent had closed as unfit for human habitation. The new DSU and the segregation block at Walpole (10 Block) will serve as our own private super prison, with Kittery on hand for emergencies.

Over the years, penologists have been gradually drifting away from isolation as a form of rehabilitation. It has proven itself not to work. Isolation tends to be conducive to the retention and development of criminal behaviour and is at best only a temporary solution. A look at the recividism rates of 55 to 60 per cent points out how ineffectual the isolation system is.

Massachusetts made great strides in penal reform while John Boone was Commissioner of Corrections. Furlough programs were instituted, self-government by inmates (an idea that dates back to 1793 in the Walnut Street Jail of Philadelphia) and community based corrections (half-way houses) were all part of John Boone's programs.

With talk now on Kittery and DSU Bridgewater, it seems that all the progress made is being washed away in the muddy waters of Clock Work Orange mind control projects. The basic rights of human life and existance are being denied by state officials under the guise of prison reform. Temporary solutions to long term problems such as isolation or the nightmare tactics of mind control are replacing the concepts of human dignity.

Liberals who scream at the treatment of Solzhenitsyn or the "tiger cages" of Vietnam, should take a good look at what is happening right here in Massachusetts. LEAA has given UMass Amherst a $120,000 grant to develop an academy to train corrections personnel. The personnel trained here will man our future concentration camps. It is a very short trip from Kittery to the Orwellian reality of 1984.....

Question: What's a problem inmate?

Governors stall on regional prison

BOSTON (AP) - A decision on the controversial proposed New England regional prison for "problem" inmates was deferred Thursday by the New England Governors' Conference.

The six governors heard arguments about the issue and Conference chairman, Vermont Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, later told newsmen that he thinks the group will decide the proposal needs further study.

The governors were scheduled to make a group statement Friday.

A spokesman for Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent said a delay in the final decision would allow emotions to cool.

The proposal, contained in a study headed by Harvard University Prof. William Curran, recommends a regional prison for Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Sargent: No

Sargent has already announced his opposition to the principle of housing any large group of allegedly troublesome inmates in one institution.

The New England governors listened to Curran and then four spokesmen for opponents, as about 100 members and supporters of the New England Prisoners' Association applauded a long list of criticisms of the regional prison.

Curran said his report, backed by $188,472 in federal funds, has been "misrepresented" and subjected to "gross misunderstandings." He defended his categorization of "special offenders" and insisted that the prison study showed a need for a regional prison in the three northern states, where he said, "current facilities are obsolete."

Civil Rights

Atty. Richard Shapiro, executive director of the Prisoner Rights Project of the New England Prisoners' Association, charged that Curran's investigation violated inmates' civil liberties and constitutional rights by scrutinizing confidential medical records and then "branding" prisoners with the label of "special offender."

Dr. William Ryan, Boston College professor of psychology, said Curran's research methods were unscientific.

Definitions?

"The term 'special offender, cannot be defined," he said. "It's a category that just doesn't exist. His Curran's method of collection and interpretation of data violates every known principle of research."

Other criticisms came from Russell Carmichael, executive director of the prisoners' association, and Massachusetts state Rep. William Owens, an ex-prison inmate who said he probably would have been labeled a special offender.

Opponents said inmates in the study, who were not interviewed, were designated as troublesome if they were politically active. Spokesmen also said inmates in the study, who were not interviewed, were designated as troublesome if they were politicaaly active. Spokesman also said that the proposed use of behavior control drugs on special offenders would make them "tranquilized robots."

Curran's study originated in July, 1970, when the New England Governors' Conference voted to seek federal funds to study a possible regional approach for "deviant offenders."

Heller suggests controls cease

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)- The former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors said Thursday that removal of wage and price controls could be a positive economic step. But Walter W. Heller said he would approve of the step only if it included "some backup of rollback power."

Heller was asked at a news conference here if he approved of the plan announced this week by the administration to remove wage and price controls from all segments of the economy except petroleum and health.

"If the removal of price controls means the total, abrupt dropping of all wage-price restraints, I'd say no," he said.

"If it means taking off the straight jacket, the smothering blanket of mandatory controls for the whole economy but retaining a certain amount of restraining through a sensible system-a watchdog system where you've got some back up rollback power-then I'd say it's a good move," he continued.

Heller predicted unemployment will rise by up to one million additional persons during the first half of 1974.

Rheingold may sell breweries

NEW YORK (AP) - The president of the Rheingold breweries said Thursday his company will have to sell the company's breweries in New Jersey and Massachusetts separately if no solution is found quickly on the problems of the Brooklyn brewery.

The Teamsters Union has gone to court in an effort to save the jobs of 12,000 union members at the Brooklyn plant, scheduled to close down Friday. The plant also employs 300 other workers.

Two local groups, one headed by publisher-financier Jerry Finkelstein and the other by Irving Levine, are considering buying the plant but talks are bogged down over concessions they seek from the unions.

Meanwhile, Rheingold's president, Richard Ahern, said if a buyer is not found for the combined facilities in a few days, the company would have to act on offers to purchase breweries at Orange, N.J., and New Bedford, Mass.

Boston seeks time to appeal balance plan

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston School Committee has asked for a 60-day extension of a U.S. Supreme Court deadline to appeal the state racial balance plan for the city's schools.

The committee acted Wednesday after Mayor Kevin H. White said the city administration would pay the legal costs.

The state plan calls for the busing of children in September to achieve racial balance in the city's public schools.

The deadline for appealing was midnight Wednesday.

Food supplies could tighten this weekend

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Food industry officials expect food supplies to be tight this weekend and predict that serious problems could arise if the independent truckers' strike continues next week.

Federal negotiators and representatives of the striking truckers announced Thursday reaching tentative agreement to end the strike, but the outcome seemed uncertain. Truckers took a wait-and-see attitude.

In Connecticut, John Pinchot, a spokesman for independent truckers at Martins Truck stop in Waterbury, said Connecticut drivers have rejected the government's settlement offer to their demands.

Carl Anderson, an official of a meat supplier in Manchester, N.H., said, "I'd be lying to say we're perfect, but we're all right."

If the strike ends, "we'd be tight for about a week, but I don't think it would take too long. These trucks move across the country in a hurry, you know," he said.

Norman Turcotte of Associated Grocers of New Hampshire, said: "If the strike is ended today there wouldn't be any more than isolated shortages. But if it isn't settled, I expect we will have serious problems by the middle of next week with perishables."

Spokesmen for the A&P supermarket chain and the Star Market Co. in the Boston area said business has been busy but reported only isolated cases of "panic buying."

The spokesman said supplies would be tight this weekend but generally the two supermarket chains were in good shape.

Joe Kauffman at Pincrest Produce Inc., Springfield, Mass., said that there would be some limited produce shortages on retail shelves, but inability to get goods would be reflected more in high prices.

High prices will last 10 days to two weeks once the trucks get rolling, he said.

Ted Sitarz of Chicopee Provision, Chicopee, Mass., said suppliers solved many of their problems by switching over to rail service and turning to East Coast suppliers of beef and pork.

INDEPENDENT TRUCKERS parked their rigs outside of Concord at a local sports arena at the suggestion of Warren Rudman, attorney general. Truckers had earlier surrounded the State House with their rigs asking to talk with Gov. Meldrim Thomson concerning their problems.

Raid!

CHELSEA, Mass. (AP) - Six persons were arraigned Thursday in Chelsea District Court in connection with the seizure of about $1,000 worth of heroin and cocaine during a raid at a Revere apartment.

Among those arraigned on various drug charges was Joseph P. McKenna, 22, of Revere, a jockey at Suffolk Downs.

McKenna was charged with illegal possession of cocaine, illegal possession of marijuana, illegal possession of heroin with intent to distribute and illegal possession of a needle and syringe.

The six were arrested Wednesday night.

A probable cause hearing for the six was scheduled for March 1.

Federal plan "ridiculous"

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A Central Vermont Railroad spokesman has termed "ridiculous" a federal plan that would require the abandonment of stretches of the line's track in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Under a U.S. Department of Transportation plan to reorganize the Northeast rail system, the line would be required to abandon tracks between East Northfield and Millers Falls and between Amherst and New London, Conn.

"It's ridiculous. We're the only financially sound system in the area," said Central Vermont general manager Conrad Fournier.

"We have no intention of curtailing our service, not to mention abandoning the heart of the system," he said in a telephone interview from Montreal with the Greenfield Recorder.

Fournier suggested that Boston & Maine tracks between Northfield and Springfield be abandoned instead. That section would be retained under the DOT plan.

The Council of the Health Care Systems Program will be giving awards for at least 3 Research Assistantships for the next year. The purpose is to increase the quality and quantity of research on health care delivery at the University of Massachusetts. To meet this objective the awards may be given either to advanced students who are performing their own research or to provide graduate students as research assistants to faculty members engaged in research in this field.

These awards are made competively by the Council to graduate students on the basis of proposals submitted.

The deadline for proposals is March 1 and the first decisions will be made by March 15th so that the departments of the students receiving the awards may reallocate any funds already committed to these students.

These awards are made competively by the Council to graduate students on the basis of proposals submitted. (The deadline for proposals is March 1 and the first decisions will be made by about March 15th) so that the departments of the students receiving the awards may reallocate any funds already committed to these students.

The awards are for between $3,000.00 and $3,500.00 for the academic year, and it is expected that the recipients will not hold other appointments that requires them to perform any services (such as teaching assistant etc.). Application information is available from Ms. Cindy Burke, 127 Marston Hall (5-2853).

Cash bonuses replace stamps

WASHINGTON (AP) - Five states have decided to give cash bonuses instead of food assistance to recipients of the federal supplemental security income program SSI, the Agriculture Department said Thursday.

Under an amendment to the SSI program that went into effect Jan. 1 - replacing former aid programs for the aged, blind and disabled - states could continue food stamp or food distribution programs for SSI participants or give them equivalent cash grants instead.

California, Massachusetts, New York, Wisconsin and Nevada all opted for cash bonuses, making SSI recipients in those states ineligible for USDA family food-assistance programs, the spokesman said. No estimate of the number of persons involved was available, he said.

The other 45 states and the District of Columbia will continue the food-assistance programs at least until June 30 when those provisions of the SSI legislation expire.

Unless Congress makes another change, eligibility for the programs would be determined after June 30 on an individual income basis rather than by state option.

Canada raises newsprint prices

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Crown Zellerbach Corp. has petitioned the Cost of Living Council for permission to raise its newsprint prices about $12 a ton, a spokesman said Thursday.

In letters to its customers, the company said the increased cost of Canadian newsprint has forced the company to request the domestic price hike. Effective March 1, the price of Canadian newsprint will be raised to $213 a ton, spokesman Paul Leiber said.

The domestic price of newsprint would be raised from $185.62 to $197.99 per ton effective the first of next month if the council approves the increase as well as a change in the method of calculating the increased cost of the product from Canada.

Winter Carni
"Soul and Funk"

The Afro-Am Society and the program council of the Winter Carnival will sponsor two programs by the Webster Lewis Soul and Funk Revue and the Elma Lewis National Center Mime Company Friday at 8 and 10 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Webster Lewis Soul and Funk Revue has its roots in Boston and is very popular among jazz lovers and people who "dig mellow music dipped in funkiness." The Webster Lewis Revue recently recorded an album with Tony Williams titled "Bum's Rush" and it appears to be on way to becoming a big success.

The Elma Lewish National Center Mime Company is also a Boston group, consisting of 15 Black pantomime artists. It is one of the few such Black mime groups in the world.

Tickets will be on sale between 10 and 4 p.m. until Friday at the Campus Center Concourse, and Friday evening at 7 p.m. at the Student Union box office.

The challenge of getting good bass response from modestly priced systems has been met. You have to listen to EPI Microtower loudspeakers to believe their good deep bass, although a simple explanation of the "organ pipe principle" by a Tech Hifi salesperson will lift any veil of mystery that may surround them. The 30 watt rms NIKKO 4010 integrated amplifier drives these outrageously efficient speakers loud enough to fill even larger sized rooms with their fine sound. Extremely advanced circuitry in the NIKKO Receiver delivers very clean and wideband sound for increased enjoyment of all types of musical material. A high quality automatic turn table such as the Glenburn 2110 is necessary to protect the delicate grooves of your records. It comes fully equipped with a Shure magnetic cartridge, a base and a dustcover.

"Linear sound" is sound with equal intensity throughout the musical range. A loudspeaker with linear sound reproduces bass notes as loudly as it does the treble or midrange. The sound of EPI 100 loudspeakers is so linear and natural, that the speaker almost disappears... leaving only the music. As a suitable power source for the EPI's, we've chosen the NIKKO 5010 Receiver 48 Watts RMS. This is a powerful unit (68 watts rms at only 0.5% distortion), with some outstanding features including two tape deck monitors for tape-to-tape dubbing and a front panel input for a 4-channel matrix adaptor. The dependable Glenburn 2110 automatic turntable has a light weight, aluminum tonearm that tracks your records gently and with accuracy. Included, are a Shure magnetic cartridge, a base and a dustcover. Discover the pleasures of linear sound and save $100 off list price at the same time.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Some of the "nice people" I have encountered through astrology: O.J. Simpson, Cancer; Floyd Patterson, Capricorn; Bette Davis, Aries; Buddy Rogers, Leo; Jane Russell, Gemini; Jayne Meadows, Libra; Anais Nin, Pisces. The list is long and, for me, verifies that the most productive, exciting and erudite persons of our time are also friendly and open-minded where astrology is concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work toward long-range goal. Build on structure that can withstand stress, strain. No one will promise bed of roses. But now you can get agreement on paper which provides green light to ultimate progress. Do so!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): One close to you forgets differences and shares in meaningful way. Be gracious. Views are vindicated but this should not be excuse for display of arrogance. Soft-sell approach brings best results. Act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What you thought was over and finished could be like proverbial phoenix — rises from its ashes. Get second wind and push through with agreement. You have legal rights and others should know it. Property value could be in question.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work and relatives may be an issue. Key now is to accept responsibility for your own actions. Accept credit, take blame — don't attribute success or failure to family members. Make views clear since there is a tendency now for people to misquote you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Now you can discuss costs versus savings — question of quality and quantity dominates. Aries individual who seems domineering is actually vying for attention. Get rid of burden which was inherited from another.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You find that opposition is of paper tiger variety. Go full steam ahead. Only doubt, fear can stop you. Be independent, creative and daring. Many are waiting to jump on bandwagon — directed by you. Exude confidence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are on brink of discovery. Know it and prepare groundwork. Where these was obscurity, there now can be benefit of greater light. Check with individual who works behind the scenes. Closed-door meeting could be featured.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some promises now may be of sincere origin but still lack substance. Know it and have alternatives at hand. By being versatile, you win. If you insist on adhering to preconceived notions, you invite loss. The choice is your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): See clearly, not through rose-colored glasses. There is difference between being idealistic — and gullible. See situations, persons as they really are, not as you wish they might be. Be specific, thorough, direct — and insist on factual information.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect now coincides with long-range planning, travel opportunity and ability to learn and apply knowledge. Friend does some work for you behind the scenes. You get action from areas previously dormant.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Financial situation eases. Logjam is removed. You have greater freedom of action, more room to execute ideas, plans. Diplomatic intercession by family member could be significant factor. Taurus, Libra persons may be involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): One who should know better acts in deceptive manner. Maintain poise. You will be ultimate winner — if patient. Avoid actions based on impulse. Give logic a chance. Then you bring goal closer to reality. Another Piscean is in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a creative organizer. You know when it is time to get down to business. You never ask others to do what you would not do. You are tough but fair. You draw to you many born under Cancer and Capricorn. April could be one of your most significant months of 1974.

Soutter named chancellor of UMass-Worcester

In view of the pending retirement, effective June 30, 1976, of Dr. Lamar L. Soutter, Dean of the UMass Medical School, the Board of Trustees has taken several steps to effect a smooth transition.

First, recognizing the increasing complexity of Medical School problems, reflecting planning for opening of the Teaching Hospital and for continuing evolution of the Worcester Campus, the Board of Trustees approved a change of title for Dean Soutter to Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Worcester and Dean of the Medical School.

Second, Trustees voted to establish the post of Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Worcester, effective July 1, 1976.

Finally, the Trustees directed President Robert Wood to begin the process of establishing a Search Committee to identify candidates for future appointment to the post of Chancellor. Trustees directed the President to consult with Dean Soutter, the Executive Committee of the Medical School faculty, and others, to prepare recommendations for the composition of the Search Committee and the charge to be given to it.

The recommendations will be made to the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees at its next meeting in March.

Dr. Soutter, who is also Professor of Surgery at the Medical School, has been its Dean since the Medical School was established in 1962. Dean Soutter led the process of planning the Medical School and recruitment of its faculty.

The first class of students entered the Medical School in 1970, and will graduate in May, 1974. The Medical School moved from temporary facilities into its new Basic and Clinical Sciences Building last fall, and a Teaching Hospital, now under construction, is expected to be ready for occupancy in mid-1975.

Trustees took the action at their regular Board meeting, held at the Campus Center in Amherst.

Prof. Georges May of Yale University will talk about "L'Indecence dans la litterature du 18e siecle: conformisme ou subversion" Wednesday, Feb. 13, at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

The French-language lecture will be at 8 p.m. in rooms 174-176 of the Campus Center, and is sponsored by the UMass department of French and Italian.

CORRECTION -- Miss Marie Cappadonna, Assistant Director of Food Services, says she believes a student should not pay for something not used. Yesterday's Page 3 article on the D.C. erroneously attributed her as saying students should pay.

This Spring the Central Area Counseling Center is offering a number of workshops, courses and seminars in addition to their one-to-one counseling service. These new programs are a direct reponse by the staff to the Needs Survey that was administered to area residents this fall.

The survey indicated that a great many students are confused as to what direction they are heading in here at the University. There seems to be a general feeling of powerlessness concerning the University and its administrative hassles. Students have indicated that they would value coping techniques and adjustment workshops to deal with the feelings they are experiencing. In response to these needs and feelings, the Center is offering workshops in the following areas:

Psychodrama, listening skills, drug information, career development, resume writing, job interviewing techniques, women vocational planning, gay awareness, sex roles and stereotypes, organizational development, team building, problem sslving, decision making, etc.

Those interested in participating in one of these programs or who think they would be helpful for their dorm are asked to contact the Center at 5-0894. Or if anyone has any other suggestions or needs the Center has not mentioned or touched on, they're asked to call. After hours call Parny at 6-4544.

UMASS CAPTAIN STEVE Benson, (on bottom), is seen in practice preparing for the Yankee Conference title this weekend in Maine. He was 158 pound Champ last year. On top is Cliff Blom who as runner-up at 150 last season and has moved up to 158 in quest of the Yan Con title.

URI looks tops in Yan Con wrestling

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Wrestling Writer

The University of Maine hosts the Next-To-Last Annual Yankee Conference Tournament tomorrow, February 9. Wrestling begins at 11:00 in the double elimination tournament that has also been called the UMass - BU - URI Triangular.

Last year the University of Rhode Island Rams took advantage of UMass' weakness at 177 pounds and the forfeit at 190 pounds, and edged the Minutemen for the title. The Rams return a possible seven placers from last years' team. The way the wrestling fortunes have been fairing at Kingston, this year, URI looks to possibly sweep the tourney.

If any team has a chance of stopping the Rams it has to be UMass. Despite the dual meet slaughter at the beginning of the season, the Minutemen have to be rated the best contenders in many weight classes. At 118 the Minutemen highlight freshman sensation Peter Sachon who looks to give Rich Adham, ofURI the best fight for the Championship. Also not to be counted out at that weight is Jeff Lambert of Boston University.

In the 126 pound class the fourth meeting of UMass Larry Reynolds and URI's Scotty Pucino is looked forward to. Pucino has blanked Reynolds in three previous meetings but this time it could be different. In the 134 pound class UMass has Doug LeMIre, who has seen limited varsity action, but looks like he has the stuff to win the whole thing. Contesting him will be BU's Sev. Popolizio.

Russell Chateauneuf, 1972 New England Champ, will be in his first wrestling tourney since winning that title. He will most likely meet his old foe Joe Savino of URI, last year's Champ at 134. In an earlier meeting this season Chateauneuf defaulted to Savino. Another person who can't be counted out is BU's Tom Kryzak who was last year's Yankee Conference and NEUWA Champ at 142. He has wrestled up as high as 158 this season but will definitely be down for the YanCon.

At 150, URI's Dave Hovey and UMass' Steve Jabaut look to be in the finals against each other. They stand head and shoulders above anyone else in the conference. At 158 UMass could come home with the bacon if Cliff Blom decides to use his quickness and can stay away from Gamon on URI and his headlocks.

The 167 pound class could be the most highly contested of the tourney. Rhody's Jim Urqhart is the defending champ but he will have to settle with Minuteman Captain Steve Benson before repeating. In the URI-UMass dual, Urqhart won as Benson gave the match away. The other tough competitor is BU's Captain Paul Donovan who has had an excellent season thus far, but has lost to Springfield College's Doug LeRoy, who was beaten by both Benson and Urqhart.

If rumors are true about URI's two time New England Champ Stu Horowitz, then UMass may be in the ring at 177, too. It is reported that Horowitz has sore ribs that are keeping him out of the line-up and that he has developed a conflict with the coach. Robin Osborne will go for the Minutemen here. At 190 URI's Tad Sargent, and BU's Mark Jones will be the favorites with UMass' Bob Spaulding a possible darkhorse.

UMass has the defending Champ at Heavyweight, but he won't be making the trip. George Ireland, defending Yankee Conference and New England Champ, made a stab at trying to drop to 190 but couldn't make it. He is trying to gain some strength back for eliminations in the upcoming New Englands. He will be ably replaced by frosh Dennis Fenton. The UMass footballer has enjoyed great success this season and looks to give Ray Miro of URI a better bout this time (Miro caught him in a sufflay and pinned him in the dual match). BU's Brian Donnelly might be competition, too, but has been bothered by knee problems much of the season.

Women swimmers bomb Wellesley 82-40

By JAN GARAVANO

NOPE pool was the site of an explosion last night, as the women from UMass decimated Wellesley by their largest score to date. The hour of sweat, fatigue and pain were forgotten as a superior team effort resulted in a first place sweep of nine out of fourteen events.

The power of this team is undeniable as no less than six pool records have been broken within the past two weeks. The importance of this phenomenon lies in the times and their relation to the Eastern and National Championships. All six are well under those figures necessary to compete in the Easterns, four of those six are under the qualifying times set for this year's Nationals.

The significance of those achievements are almost secondary, however, when placed against the character and quality of each member, whose unity was felt from the first click of the watch, to the traditional coach's dunking. Standouts as first place finishers were Melon Dash, Jean Franchebois, and Cindy Whiting. Second place honors went to Roxanne Balducci, Karen Johnson, Kathe Germann, Laurie Selik, and Diane Perry. Third place was captured by Lee Hart, Carol Griffiths, and Roxanne LaCoste.

Recognition is mandatory for the returning divers, Carol Canterbury and Karen Fedora, whose first and third places respectively earned the eight points which put the meet out of reach.

With such talent it seems regrettable that there were few spectators on hand. Must this team be recognized as the Eastern Champs before the realization of their potential be rewarded?

Bruins sink Blues

BOSTON (AP)-Wayne Cashman, Carol Vadnais and Johnny Bucyk struck for goals within a 2:34 span in the second period and the Boston Bruins went on to a 5-3 National Hockey League victory over the St. Louis Blues Thursday night.

Phil Esposito scored his 46th goal on a deflected shot early in the first period, but Garry Unger of the Blues tied the count at 17:25 by circling the net and poking the puck into the corner.

Pierre Plante put the Blues in front with his 18th goal at 7:14 of the second period. Cashman then converted a rebound to tie the score 46 seconds later and Vadnais put Boston in front to stay with a 30-footer at 10:00.

Veteran Johnny Bucyk made it 4-2 at 10:34 with his 17th goal and Greg Polis of the Blues and Don Marcotte of the Bruins exchanged tallies in the finale.

Bobby Orr, the Bruins' super star defenseman injured in a game Jan. 27, watched the action from the stands. He has skated all week, but the Bruins elected to delay his return rather than take a chance.

Boston out-shot the Blues 34-26. Goalie Ross Brooks, a 37-year-old travelled veteran still considered an NHL rookie, posted his 10th consecutive victory since losing 3-2 in St. Louis in his first start of the season.

...And trade pair to Canucks

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League acquired high-scoring right wing Bobby Schmautz from the Vancouver Canucks Thursday night in exchange for young forward Chris Oddliefson and Fred O'Donnell.

Schmautz, 28, has scored 26 goals in 48 games for the Canucks this season. In the 1972-73 season, he had 38 goals and 33 assists.

Oddleifson, 23, is a rookie center and right wing with 10 goals and 11 assists in 49 games. O'Donnell, 24, is a fiery right wing used sparingly by the Bruins. Last season he had four goals and 14 assists. This season he has five goals and five assists in 43 games.

Lady gymnasts take Keene St. tri-meet

By CANDY GROSS
MDC Women's Gymnastics Writer

The UMass' women gymnasts totally outclassed their competitors in the tri-meet at Keen State Wednesday night, as evidenced by the score of UMass 80.5, University of Vermont 57.85 and Keene State 53.25.

Coach Virginia Evans believes that the low meet scores resulted from the lower level of competition and the problem of a cold gym, courtesy of the energy crisis.

In vaulting, first place was once again won by Linda Nelligan with a 7.8, who threw a handspring half twist for the first time. Ann Vexler, vaulting for the first time this year took second with 7.25. By competing in vaulting, Ann will become one of the all-around gymnasts for the team. UVM's Sue Supovitz captured third with 7.0 and Marion Kulick placed fourth with 6.85. Carol Rogers completed the UMass line-up.

UMass only entered three gymnasts in uneven bars yet took the event anyway. Difficulty with the non-regulation equipment presented quite a challenge to the women's adaptability. Linda Nelligan took first with 6.75. Despite some judging discrepancy concerning superior difficulty, an otherwise steady routine placed Gail McCarthy second with 5.75. Bobby Abrams of UVM took third with 4.35. Marion Kulick, UMass' third competitor, had a bad night on bars with several falls, so the event score was a low 15.15. Yet this must be compared to Keen's 8.05 and UVM's 10.8 to gain some perspective of the meet.

On beam, Ms. Evans believes there was a definite improvement even if the scores didn't indicate it. Ann Vexler, doing one of her better routines, won with a score of 8.35, highest of the evening. Marion Kulick scored 7.1 for second, showing improvement over last week with no falls from the beam. UVM's Sue Supovitz again placed third with 6.65, displaying some variety in her dance combinations. UM's Gail McCarthy contributed the third score of 6.4. Another first for the meet was the return of senior Margie Combs to the beam, who had been recovering from injuries. Though having some falls this first meet, Coach Evans believes she'll be back to peak form shortly.

The first two floor exercise places went again to UMass with Jodi Hitt's 7.55 and Alicia Good's 7.4. Sue Supovitz placed third with 6.7 followed closely by a 6.65 from Marion Kulick. All three UMass competitors had some problems with tumbling but took the event with a score of 21.6 to Keene's 13.0 and UVM's 16.6.

All Around went to Marion Kulick with 23.25, beating the three all-arounders from Keene. Second place was won by Jan Souza, scoring 18.30.

The team has been plagued by injuries, the latest being all-around gymnast Gail Hannan's dislocated elbow. Ms. Evans felt that "this meet was used to test the real depth of our team." Hopefully, by this Saturday's meet against West Chester, these people contributing their depth will raise their scores anywhere from .5 to 1 point. "We will be going full strength, six deep, against this team (which is one of the top 6 in the East) to test our line-up for the upcoming meet against Springfield, Feb. 14," said Coach Evans.

UMass skaters meet Ivy

By BILL BALLOU
MDC Hockey Writer

The last time a UMass hockey team visited Yale's Ingalls Rink, it had a streak broken. If the same thing happens tomorrow afternoon, it would be just fine with Jack Canniff.

The Redmen of 1971-92 went down to New Haven unbeaten and winners of eight games in a row. A 5-4 Yale win broke that streak, but UMass went on to win the Division II title.

This season the Minutemen head down Route 91 winless in their last ten games against Division I competition, including three this year, and hoping for an end to that unpleasant string.

Yale's a good team, UMass a tough job ahead. They skate very well (ever see a Div. 1 team that doesn't) and can score goals. After a semi-long period of mediocrity, their program over the last few season has become very competitive in the Division.

Hope for the UMies lies in a repeat of Wednesday night's performance against Vermont. It was undoubtedly the skaters' best overall game of the year. And, accordingly to one of Canniff's players, still not a peak.

"Even though we played our best game of the year," he said after the Vermont game, "I think we can play better. I really don't think that we've peaked yet."

Perhaps not, but last season the Minutemen played similarly well in Vermont early in the season, lost, and never quite played that well again.

And it would seem that playing any better would be tough.

For the forwards, it was certainly their strongest two-way game of the season. As Kevin Conners said, "We all gave a little bit extra in our own zone and it made a big difference." After an early attack of jitters, the lines worked well together and skated with the Catamounts step-for-step.

The defense blocked more shots than ever before (Tim Howes especially) and carried the puck well. Chick Rheault was as good as he's ever been (his glove looks better every game) and after the first disaster the UMies killed penalties well.

And, although coaching is almost never noticed, Jack Canniff did a fine job manipulating his talent. He moved Robbie Quinlan up to right wing, kept his players on for very short shifts, keeping them fresh through the game, and managed to get the Vermont attack slowed down at strategic moments (thanks to Rheault's "equipment problems").

Still, no matter how well they played, the Minutemen can't escape two things; 1) they lost and 2) it doesn't mean anything unless they keep it up.

So, it's another tough Div. I game and a chance to break a long streak in New Haven tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m.

INCIDENTALLY: As usual the hockey cheerleaders were voices alone in the Vermont wilderness.

Friday's food for thought

Aren't there a lot of things in the sports world that you would give anything to see, at least once? Things that no matter how stupendous or even how outrageous they seem, you would love to see them come true?

Wouldn't you love to see a 10,000 seat arena for Jack Leaman to lead his charges in?

Or how about any kind of arena for Jack Canniff?

Speaking of Leamann...wouldn't you love to be able to give him back the last three minutes of the Providence game?

Ditto Boston College.

Or the last forty minutes of the Syracuse game?

Wouldn't you love to see Dr. J. play his senior year alongside Al Skinner and John Murphy?

Wouldn't you love to have seen Jim Town pass a few courses in high school?

Wouldn't you love to see Boston University forfeit all its victories because they used inelligible Canadians on their basketball team?

Wouldn't we all love it if Al Skinner were 6'7''?

Or even 6'6''?

Wouldn't you love to see Chickie Rheault play a whole season without injuring his shoulder?

Or his knee?

Wouldn't you love to see John Binkoski sign a $100,000 a year pro contract?

Wouldn't John Binkoski love to see John Binkoski sign a $100,000 a year pro contract?

Wouldn't you love to see Timmy make it with Baltimore and Peil with Denver...or Detroit...or Montreal?

Wouldn't it have been better if Peil hadn't played in that North-South Shrine game?

Is 4.20 really a lot of points to lose a gymnastics meet by?

Wouldn't you love to see EVERYONE standing during the National Anthem at the Cage?

UMass trackmen face UNH and Dartmouth in tri-meet

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Indoor Track Writer

The pressure is on! Today's tri-meet at Hanover, New Hampshire presents a do or die situation for many members of the UMass Indoor Track team. The performances against Dartmouth and New Hampshire will help select the two-mile and mile relay teams for the Yankee Conference meet, coming up next week. More importantly, for those who don't qualify for the post season meets, the indoor track season ends today.

UMass is hoping for a double win to even its record at 4-4. The all-out efforts of individuals trying to prolong their season by three weeks should show up in the score of the meet. The meet shapes up as a dual meet rather than a tri-meet. UNH should not score too many points, with only Steve Rich and George Reed posing any problems to other competitors. Reed is a 9:15 two-miler, while Rich has cleared 14'6" in the pole vault. The battle should be between UMass and Dartmouth, with New Hampshire trying to retain at least some respectability. In the only other tri-meet of the season, UMass was embarrassed, while UConn and Manhattan fought it out.

There will be one major shake-up in the UMass lineup. Randy Thomas, normally a two-miler, and Chris Farmer will be running the mile, with a chance of breaking the school record. Ronald Wayne holds mark of 4.09.4, but Dartmouth's quick track and the presence of a tough competitor should bring the times close to Wayne's standard, set in 1970. Ed Spinney of Dartmouth could provide the competition to push Thomas or Farmer to a new mark. Spinney has run the second fastest mile in New England this season, 4:09.7.

With Thomas running the mile, Bill Gillin will switch to the two-mile. Teammates John McGrail, Tom Maguire and Tom Wilson hope to lower their times.

Three runners in the 1,000-yard run hope to better 2:14.8. Devin Croft, the fifth best 1,000 yarder in New England, Pete Byron and J.J. Maloney, a native of the thriving baseball city of West Haven, Conn. (home of the West Haven Yankees), are capable of bettering Croft's time of 2:14.8.

Marshall Pendleton makes his return to the sprinting corps and will give his teammates a big boost against Dartmouth's top rate sprinters. The Big Green boast Rick Berryman, the heptagonal 60-yard dash champion, Prentice Wilson and Dick Reisman.

Improved vaulter Dan Grigus, who has "looked good in practice," almost inevitably will take sole possession of the UMass pole vault record sooner or later.

The 440-yard dash will be an added event in the meet. It will be a scoring event, with Tom Beland and Ken Banda running for UMass. In the hurdles, Curt Stegerwald and Jim Hennessy will be up against Bob Erickson and Curt Simmons of the Ivies. For some, it will be all over after the meet, but for those who survive the pressure...only added pressure as they compete against the best in New England and the East.

Hoopmen battle resurgent UConn

By STEVE DECOSTA

Fighting off the effects of a loss is a tough assignment for any team. It is especially difficult if the game was a "must win" contest. And the fact that another such encounter is imminent does not serve to make the task any easier.

Yet that is the predicament faced by the Minutemen tomorrow as they re-enter the Yankee Conference wars in Storrs against their traditional rival, UConn.

UMass lost more than a basketball game Wednesday night at Boston College. They also lost, in all likelihood, their second place ranking in New England and their status, what little they had, in the national polls.

And now it's out of the pit and into another for the Minutemen. Although the Huskies are not breathing down the neck of the conference leader as they have been in past years, they still have an outside shot at the crown and a tourney invitation.

UConn is presently 5-3 in the YanCon, but that record belittles their potential. Two of the losses were early in the year to UNH and UMass. There was no disgrace in either setback as New Hampshire is much improved and no one tops the Minutemen in the Cage. The Huskies also lost to Rhode Island earlier this week in a heartbreaker that lasted three overtimes.

Prior to the URI loss, the Huskies had reeled off nine straight wins, including a one-point victory over the Minutemen-conquering Orange at Syracuse.

UMass coach Jack Leaman said he believes that the key to the Huskies improved showing of late is the fact that "they have been playing together a little bit better."

Another factor, according to Leaman, is "the insertion of John Thomas into the starting line-up. Thomas is big and strong and gives them better defense and stronger rebounding."

For the Minutemen, the major problem will be in overcoming the effects of their loss to BC. "It wasn't a real sharp performance," said Leaman of the BC debacle, "but now we have to get ready to play again. There's nothing else we can do."

A major factor in the BC loss and of possible consequence against the Huskies is the play of the UMass bench. Against the Eagles, the Minutemen subs could only manage to contribute one point while turning the ball over on seven occasions.

According to Leaman, "The absence of (Greg) Duarte hurt us a great deal." Actually Duarte was at the game and played briefly but a death in his family had kept him away from practice for several days earlier in the week. "He probably won't be back until after the Connecticut game," said Leaman.

In regard to possible line-up or strategy changes, Leaman said, "I don't think that's necessary. We haven't been playing badly and there's no reason for any changes."

Thinking further about it, Leaman remarked, "I guess there is something I could change. I could tell (John) Murphy not to get five fouls and (Al) Skinner not to get four."

Incidently, the starting time of the game has been switched to 2:00 in the afternoon from its original time of 8 p.m. The JV game will be played at 4:00.

Gymnasts fall in squeaker

By WALT POWERS
MDC Gymnastics Writer

The crowd at Boyden moved with every routine. The lead changed hands, but no one seem to have the strength to hold it. It was a night for scorekeepers with math degrees, where heroes and goats were created at the whim of a decimal point. It may well have been the most memorable gymnastics meet ever held in Amherst, and when Gene Whelan whirled off the high bar to bring the meet to an end, the SRO crowd at the Boyden Auxiliary gym rose in a standing ovation.

For the record, Southern Connecticut won its fourteenth meet in a row by a score (59.5-59.35) that in any other sport would have spelled TIE. For it's part, UMass led after four events, finished with their highest point total of the season, and but for a few cases of "we should have done this" here, and "the judges screwed us" there, the Minutemen would have perpetrated the biggest upset of the Eastern League season.

Unlike other home meets this year, this one pretty much followed the script. Southern was favored to win the floor exercises, and they did, but the score of 27.45-26.40 was closer than expected. Then the pommel horse, which was the achilles heel of the Penn State meet, thrust UMass into a lead that turned out to be their biggest in the meet.

This event turned on the performances of the Whelan twins, and Jay, who was off all night, turned in his lowest score (8.65) of the night. Gene countered with a smooth 9.3 that emptied the Umass bench, drew a long ovation from the crowd, and propelled him to his first all-around victory ever over his twin brother Jay.

This lead was ephemeral. Bad breaks on good routines hurt UMass on the still rings. Tom Dunn called it "the turning point of the meet." The breaks then turned against Southern, and with Jay Thomsen, Jack Fabricante, and Gene Whelan all hitting above 9.00, UMass vaulted into its second lead of the meet. Then came the real turning point.

Southern Connecticut was solid but not spectacular on the parallel bars, UMass in the words of assistant Bob Koenig, "was below potential". Behind at this point by .4, the rest was for the record book. In the only real surprise of the meet, UMass rode on the backs of a Steve Scuderi 9.15 and a standing-O. 9.35 by Gene Whelan to an upset on the high bar. It wasn't enough, and when the final score was announced, a contingent of about fifty raucous Southern fans breathed a sigh of relief and then erupted. Their streak remained intact.

Abie Grossfeld, the 1972 U.S. Olympic coach in his eleventh year at Southern Connecticut, was clearly relieved at the finish. "I'm not surprised that the meet was this close," he said. "The loss of Olympian John Crosby has hurt us.

PETE LUSK, a powerful freshman, ponders his next routine during a brief period of repose at the Penn State meet. A weak dismount hurt a strong rountine against Southern Connecticut.

BRINGING BACK A LONG-FORGOTTEN TRUTH

Bob Dylan A Retrospective

Edited by Craig McGregor
Morrow $2.95 (paperback)
408 p.

by Mike Kostek

No popular artist we've ever had has ever come in for as much stupid criticism, old lady anal-retentive carping and general misunderstanding as Bob Dylan has. This book stands as a testament to much of the collected nonsense written about Dylan.

This is a fine run-through of the years of Dylan, and the reaction to him, his music and his politics. It's also can be viewed as a shameful document of human greed and stupidity. Half the articles in here are taking Dylan to task for being something else then what they want him to be, never discussing his new work or giving him credit for daring to change in the mindless world that had once exalted him as some sort of second coming. Dylan's realization that his former fans (and friends) could be as narrow-minded as his detractors comes slowly, but when it hits him, it hits him squarely, and his withdrawing reaction has become, ironically, part of his mystique. The climax of Dylan's disgust with his former folk 'friends' comes in the form of the infamous Playboy audience by asking Dylan questions like these:

Hentoff: Would you classify sex among your needs, wherever you go?

Dylan: Sex is a temporary thing; sex isn't love. You can get sex anywhere. If you're looking for someone to love you, now that's different. I guess you have to stay in college for that.

Planet Waves
Bob Dylan
(Asylum 7E-1003)

and Andy MacKenzie

I am not, you'll be relieved to read, a Dylanologist. I have no weighty conclusions to deliver as to whom Dylan must be these days. I'm not even sure it matters any more. And although I don't know where, it's apparent he's been somewhere, and it gives me great pleasure (and a touch of relief, for some reason) to report that Dylan is back.

Somehow I can't help but see the period from Self Portrait through the recent Columbia non-album as kind of an intermission; some light entertainment while Dylan sat out the remainder of his Columbia contract. I say this, of course, from the perspective gained from hearing Planet Waves. Before that, I didn't know what to think as I was progressively more disappointed with each new album. New Morning raised my spirits slightly, but it seemed the exception which proved the rule. To be honest, I'd have to say that I had given up on him.

But then strange omens began to appear on the horizon. I had a feeling something was up when I heard that Dylan was planning a tour for the first time in God knows how long. For some reason that didn't seem to fit the pattern; I had thought he would stay in hiding and continue to release bad albums until he faded into comparative obscurity. Then he left Columbia for the Asylum label. Something was happening. Finally, months later came the moment when WBCN in Boston announced that they'd gotten the new album, and played side one.

Poor Richard's has been the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. We pledge to uphold this tradition, but can't promise everybody's peculiar work will fit. Yours must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces to the line. The deadline for each Thursday's edition is noon the previous Tuesday; but you can write to us anytime.

Male and non-pregnant females sometimes den up against the cold for briefer periods, too, but mostly they stay right out there in the snow trying to catch seals.

Goodbye Poor Richard's

Yes that's right, you heard right. This is the last issue of Poor Richards.

It began with David Williams, a four-page weekend section and lots'n lots of dope-running in Volkswagens. It ended with a red Christmas pastiche cover prominently featuring Editors Coffey and Kosofsky, as one of only three campuses in the country with the lucidity to float such a weekly fine Art-Real World magazine, Umass has been blessed and-or cursed with a weekly magazinefor 2½ years now, and it's been known as Poor Richard's all this time. From the furious writing of Frank Baglione, Frank Williams' erudite audio series up to Barbara Voorhee's liting exposees of Amherst Towing, you've been sitting through a 20th Century spinoff Ben Franklin name. Well, the new editor doesn't like that so much, and figures things need a change. He's got ideas, but these ideas send his staff and some of The Daily Collegians into a lather of anguish. They don't think you can handle a new handle. (The vandals took the pump now). They think you'll be confushed. They like Poor Richard's.

Well I don't. "I got a name", but I'm giving them a week to talk me out of it. And you. You can try me too. You've got 5 days. (Till next Wed. nite.) to give me what you want. A CONTEST. YAY! BEST NAME, be it mine or yours, gets on the cover and lips of every issue and person we know.

Drag your idea up and leave it in the Poor Richard's New Name Box in the Collegian Business office. I dare you. Five days.

FANTASY FANS

KING PRITCHET AND THE HOLYMAN

by Denny Matteau

Many, many eons ago, on the continent of Atlantis, was the kingdom of Mineola. Mineola was a small kingdom, but its land was fertile. It had mountains and plains and rivers and lakes and the people were happy.

But King Pritchet was not happy. In spite of all the good fortune of Mineola, he envied the size and power of the other kingdoms of Atlantis. He indulged in many kinds of contests with the royalty of those kingdoms, and he was very clever. He often won tournaments through his jousting champions, who were all strong men and true. They were of the best knighting schools and of that finely developed spirit necessary to human impalation.

The people of Mineola, however, really didn't pay much attention to him or his knights. He was king and kings are nice to have, but they all knew the real business of life was on the land and sea and in the workshops and at play. So they ignored King Pritchet's antics.

During the winter of the Year of Tyrannosaurus Rex (a portentous year for Atlantis+) King Pritchet became so involved in his royalty games, however, that he lost touch with the lives of most of the common Mineolans. And, like anyone who loses touch with the lives of other people, he began to act a little . . . strange.

His vision began to play tricks on him. He started seeing squares — everywhere squares. At first he didn't know what to think of it, and he confided in his trusted friend and adviser, Holyman, that he was worried. Holyman did not like to see King Pritchet worried, so he reassured the King by saying that the world was indeed made of squares.

"In fact," said Holyman in a flash of inspiration, "Your Excellency has shown great insight, and revealed Your Excellency's impressively poetic turn of mind by seeing, so clearly, the resemblance of the real world to the game of chess!"

His Excellency walked to the bookcase of the Cubicle Office and thoughtfully touched a dusty volume of Shakedart.

"Hmm," said King Pritchet, "actually, the squares are more rectangular, more akin to the Pigskin field than to the chess board."

He turned abruptly, to see Holyman shuffle uneasily with the thought that his compliment had been rejected.

Satisfied, King Pritchet smiled and expansively placed his arm on Holyman's shoulder, and said, "Let us play chess tonight, Holyman!"

And so he and Holyman walked together to the game rooms, being careful not to step on any cracks between the squares.

+Atlantis years were named on the Chinese system except all were named for dinosaurs. The dinosaurs used to exist there, but had become so legendary as to become almost gods in King Pritchet's time.

Honest Archibald Speaks

by Nathan Gorenstein

AMHERST — It would probably be fair to say there is a lack of decent public servants around these days.

The moment you find someone you dig, his (or hers) reputation starts to rust. Everyone's hero, Sam Ervin, has, with his 500 tape subpoena, started looking suspiciously like an old man eager to keep the Tungsten lights on. And everyone early-on forgot, if anyone remembered, his vehement opposition to virtually every piece of civil rights legislation passed by the Congress in the last 10 years.

Judge Sirica, another temporary hero and "Time's" Man of the Year, is, of course, known to Washington attorneys as "Maximum J[illegible]" a nickname honoring hi[illegible] sentencing in criminal cases.

It goes further back. Where are all the leaders we read of in the civics texts? People with trust in the people, [illegible] the laws, honest pe[illegible] people, people with a larger sense of right and wrong and a lesser sense of the expedient. People with a sense of the spirit of the law, rather than a desire to twist the letter of the law. Did we think Kennedy had it? Perhaps so. But if so, the current histories show he too got caught between what was right and what was politically easy.

Well, we all know no one is perfect, but when Archibald Cox showed up at Amherst College a few weeks back one had the feeling that, well, finally here was a man with a moral sense, who believes in something and acts on something that every[illegible] in [illegible] se[illegible]

[illegible] fe[illegible] 22[illegible] de[illegible] w[illegible] sa[illegible] so[illegible] op[illegible] ha[illegible] di[illegible] He seemed a classical man. Secure in himself, but not oppressively so; proud, but not egotistical; intelligent, but not believing that his was the only intelligence.

The questioning, understandably, centered around all our current troubles in Washington, Cox's reactions to the newer disclosures and a quest for some insight into the whole mess from someone who was once enmeshed in it more than most.

Indictment? Cox: "I did think a good deal about the question, whether an incumbent President should be indicted, as a matter of policy, or whether exclusive reliance should be placed on the process of impeachment. My tentative view was to learn that it was more appropriate before the Senate rather than before a jury in a local courthouse.

But I never really wrestled with that question with my staff so I never came to a final conclusion. I think my answer as a matter of constitutional law probably leans in the opposite direction than my answer as a matter of policy. Technically there is probably no constitutional impediment to indicting and trying a President. But as I said before I lean to the view that that's not the appropriate way. The appropriate way is for the House to impeach and then from there to be tried before the Senate."

What does he think of the House Judiciary Committee's work and [illegible]

The [illegible] Cox said he [illegible] critical of [illegible] con[illegible] op of [illegible] as [illegible] As far as [illegible] thorough [illegible] job. [illegible] man [illegible] the c[illegible] pressure [illegible] his [illegible] do for the Judiciary Committee in terms of handing over evidence) than what he can't."

Should Nixon be impeached? Cox: "I'm afraid I can't properly answer that. By the very way you (the reporter) preface it, 'based on what you know,' has a way of conveying the impression that I know certain things — but I'm not supposed to indicate what I do know. One should reserve judgment until the evidence is in."

Would he suggest, after seeing what he had, any reforms in the election process, specifically public financing of campaigns? Cox came out emphatically for public financing, "clearly one specific that should immediately be put into effect." The conditions that made private contributions once an appropriate way of financing the electoral process, Cox said, were fine when government activity did not affect people's lives and businesses the way they do today. Nodding to ITT and the milk fund, public financing, he said, would eliminate the pressure upon people to give for selfish economic reasons and one "source of distrust in government."

A question that Cox gave a long answer to, an answer broken down into three, and then four points, was what his sense, his impressions were, on leaving Washington in October.

"I come away with I guess three very general reflections. One, I think my illusions about government and its competence are neither greater or less than they were before, government reflecting the failing and capacities of all of us, and it is human as all of us are. Two, I think one of the greatest problems today is that in government, public advertising techniques and loyalty to person and party have become greater virtues than integrity, trust in the people, candor with the people, and equal administration and enforcement of the law. Too many men, who were generally honest in their own conduct, became like the three monkeys when they saw others who were not as honest, out of reasons of loyalty and the pressures upon them of people in higher office.

Three, I think the events of October 20 and 21 were enormously reassuring. Maybe my own pair of glasses distorts my perceptions, but I think the events that occurred over that weekend were an extraordinary demonstration of the determination of the people to insist on the equal administration of justice and to hold their highest officials to the rule of law just like everyone else. And the events proved they have the capacity to do it.

After all, they did compel the President to turn around in the space of three days as far as the tapes were concerned, and the space of ten days or two weeks as far as the conduct of an independent investigation was concerned. I found that part of it very reassuring. And my fourth point in answer to your question would be if somebody were to put me back in last May and say, now, knowing all you know today but not expecting an exact repeat performance, would you think it worthwhile to give it another try, and my answer would be I most surely would."

Any idea when you were fighting for the tapes that they might have been tampered with?

"No, indeed I understood, or thought I understood, from Fred Buzhardt, that no one, but no one, had access to those tapes. I was surprised when I found that people did have access to them. I deliberately say I thought I understood, I don't know that, I have nothing in writing, I don't have that distinct recollection. I just had that impression so that I was surprised when I saw that anyone had had access to them."

What does a special prosecutor do when he is no longer a special prosecutor?

"Well, he chops wood for a couple of months and then he, beginning on Thursday the 25 of January, starts teaching administrative law." Administrative law.

Cox's speech that night, for which he got standing ovations of 60 second length at the b[illegible] [illegible] with the [illegible] as the title [illegible] been sub[illegible] law has [illegible] most hour [illegible] was [illegible] ac[illegible] lawyers and [illegible] The [illegible] law, so [illegible] buyer [illegible] law and [illegible] the [illegible] Con[illegible] bound hand [illegible] lawyers, and their [illegible] were [illegible] for which the [illegible] were scarce [illegible]

[illegible] that area [illegible] making a [illegible] proceeds [illegible] is now [illegible] ered until [illegible] republic [illegible] come to [illegible] is the [illegible] President, [illegible] restless [illegible] was [illegible] That [illegible]

We write upon an almost-clean slate. Little law or political precedent is available to guide the hard decisions. Yet, regardless of the outcome, the value of the proceeding will depend upon whether the process is so conducted that the country perceives it as a fair and legitimate measure for restoring integrity to government. If President Nixon should be impeached and convicted, the question of legitimacy will be paramount. If President Nixon is acquitted, the country will still need assurance about the integrity of that conclusion.

The central challenge is to formulate the principles — the general standards of conduct — by which a President is to be judged in a proceeding that vacates, without direct expression of the popular will, a choice made by the people — in this case overwhelmingly made by the people — in the regular election only a few years before. Too little hard debate has focused upon what should be impeachable offenses — upon why some wrongdoing should be grounds for impeachment while other misconduct is left to popular judgment at the polls. I am convinced that the legitimacy of the final conclusion in the view of the American people will depend upon the success of counsel and other public men in formulating general standards of conduct fairly applicable to any President and in educating the public upon their meaning and legal and moral base.

Cox finished with a final "personal thought." Not read to the assembled crowd at the cage, but nonetheless in his prepared text. It is as follows:

"Watergate can be a turning point and therefore a blessing. If not [illegible] lethargy the [illegible] Nation. [illegible] self-centered and [illegible] influenced [illegible] the letters I still receive [illegible] seems to me that t[illegible] [illegible] may well have joined [illegible] the longing of countless simple direct and moral people for [illegible] simplicity and rectitude in conduct of government [illegible] in ourselves."

Galbraith's ECONOMICS: Inexcusable Apologies

ECONOMICS AND THE PUBLIC PURPOSE
by John Kenneth Galbraith reviewed by Kevin Mack

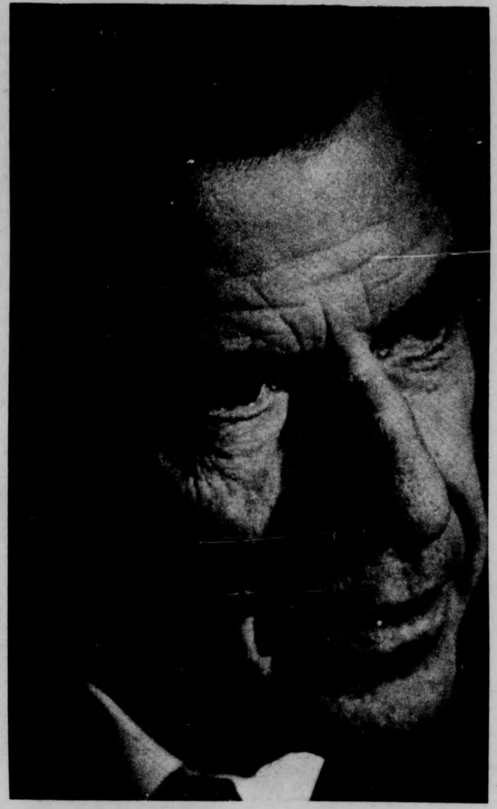
If the field of economics had its own equivalent to the magazine, Popular Science, then surely John Kenneth Galbraith would be the leading candidate for editorship. Galbraith, who is a professor at Harvard, is the great populizer of economics in America today, and has been since the appearance of The Affluent Society in 1956. Although his views have never been taken very seriously by his professional colleagues; his wit, his elegant style, and his mildly radical description of the economy, which is tempered by an unequivocally reformist plan of action, have helped to endear him to the reading public. Galbraith not only says what those who read him want to hear; he says it with just enough mastery of economic jargon to exude an air of authority.



John Kenneth Galbraith

Economics and the Public Purpose is Galbraith's latest volume on the subject. It continues in a direct line from two earlier works: The Affluent Society and The New Industrial State; and, to some extent, from an earlier work: American Capitalism: The Concept of Countervailing Power. In this earliest work (1953), he proposes a theory of self-regulating economy, consisting of large corporations, whose power is countervailed by large retailers and consumer cooperatives.

The Affluent Society (1956) portrays the American economy as being "geared to the least urgent of human wants". He calls for a redirected output mix, with the public sector of the economy providing more goods like schools, parks and hospitals, to be paid for largely through higher sales taxes on the frivolous trappings of affluence — things like second cars and television sets.

In The New Industrial State (1967), Galbraith admittedly contradicts the earlier American Capitalism. The more recent work continues in some of the same directions adumbrated by The Affluent Society, such as the notion that wants are created by the processes which satisfy them, that is, by the manufacturers themselves.

The main body of The New Industrial State is directed at describing the forces which govern the behavior of large corporations. Galbraith dismisses the classical descriptions of a market economy, and knocks the neo-classical school (Paul Samuelson is this school's most famous spokesman) with equal vigor. Galbraith feels that the neo-classical viewpoint is irrelevant because it is still committed to the market theory of economics — the laws of supply and demand. The mature corporation, he contends, has transcended the marketplace.

This has occurred for one reason: the necessity of corporate managements to plan its supply and demand. Because of the huge expenditures of time and resources necessary for the development and marketing of its products, the large corporation must be assured of an adequate demand, and attempts to plan accordingly. One vehicle for this planning is advertising, through which the public is persuaded to buy the corporate lifestyle. Another, more important, means of effecting this planning is the state. Galbraith sees the function of the state in the corporate economy as providing for the aggregate demand, (the purchasing power), through fiscal and monetary policy. The state spends its money in ways which are helpful to the corporations — military spending and things like roads (which benefit the automobile and trucking industries.)

Because of the development of the mature corporation, which is dependent upon planning, Galbraith believes that corporate behavior can no longer be explained in terms of the classical and neo-classical goals of profit maximization. These goals have been replaced by the goals of corporate growth and expansion, and the protection of the corporations autonomy (from both the state and from the stockholders).

This thesis is not without merit and deserves consideration. But when it comes to backing up his hypothesis with empirical data. Galbraith leaves us in the cold. He describes how many corporate managements do not see their goals simply in terms of profit-maximization, but he fails to prove that corporations do not in fact act in such a way as to maximize profits. Economics, as the science which purports to describe how goods and resources are actually distributed, if it is truly a science, must describe how material power is, in fact, used, and not how those who possess the power feel that they use this power.

A good part of Economics and the Public Purpose is a restatement of Galbraith's earlier works. Galbraith would have served his argument better if, instead of repeating his arguments, he had enlarged upon them or attempted to empirically support them. He might have questioned the efficiency of the mature corporation in its attempts to plan its supply and demand or he might have looked more closely at the ramifications of the trans-national corporations (oil companies, for instance, an economic institution which has only arisen and achieved prominance in very recent history.

Economics and the Public Purpose aims also at what remains of the market economy — the world of the small businessman, the doctor, the photographer, the farmer and all those who are not involved in planning their supply and demand — and seeks to bring this sector of the economy into focus with the whole. There exists an inequality between the world of the large corporation and that of the small businessman, similar to that which exists between the developed and underdeveloped nations.

The corporations or as Galbraith calls them, the "planning sector", use their power in such a manner as to intensify this inequality. The legislative tools of the state also act in such a way as to enhance corporate power. The state, through wage and price controls and through beneficial fiscal spending, aids the planning sector of the economy to a much greater degree than the market sector. Since the market sector is weaker in economic and political power, Galbraith calls for legislation which will support the market sector. Because the market sector is still subject to the laws of supply and demand, particular industry in this sector will be headed for market equilibrium — the point at which the supply equals the demand.

Pricing is determined by the market, not by the producers themselves, as in the planning sector. Any particular industry in the planning sector, especially those which are characterized by an oligopolistic structure, will not be heading for the same type of equilibrium. Hence, the planning sector of the economy is by nature stronger than the market sector. The market sector cannot compete with the planning sector.

Galbraith feels that the lower average wages in the market sector is evidence for this contention.

Enough of Galbraith's thesis. What does he propose to do? First, he lists a number of reforms, the goals of which are to enhance the power of the market sector — exemption of small business from anti-trust laws; regulation of wages and prices in the market sector; an increased minimum wage; and strong government encouragement of unions within the market sector and support of the educational, capital and technical needs of the market sector.

Galbraith then gets a bit more radical, calling for socialization of industries which cannot effectively function in either the market or the planning sectors — housing, transportation, health and defense industries. He cites the example of European countries in which these industries are frequently state-owned and feels that they have proved the effectiveness of this plan.

Much of Galbraith's arguments consist of similarly insubstantiated statements. His arrogant self-assurance is his own particular way of compensating his lack of intellectual rigor. Those who disagree with him are accused of being victims of the "conventional wisdom" or of displaying a "convenient social virtue". Any political position which refuted Galbraith's reform measures is simply "the consequences of the effective conditioning to which we have been subject by the planning system and, on its behalf, by the established economics." Galbraith would have us believe that his detractors are simply brainwashed by the powers that be. And Galbraith is quick to accuse his colleagues of serving the interests of the planning system and of being conditioned by the tenets of neo-classical economics.

Being a reformer, Galbraith sees hope. This lies within the liberal wing of the democratic party; with men like Kennedy and McGovern. (Less kind persons might dismiss Galbraith — after his own fashion — as merely serving the interests of the liberal democrats). But if Galbraith is to be dismissed — and I think he should be — it should not be because of those whose interests he appears to serve, but rather because of the shallowness of his views.

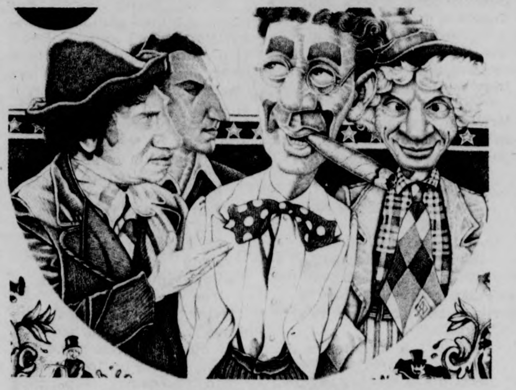
'The Best Marx Bros. Book Yet!'

by Groucho Marx and Richard Anobile
Norton Book Publishers, N.Y.
$13.95 P. 256
Reviewed by Frederic C. Weiss

During the past several years the Marx Brothers movies have had a renaissance in popularity. While in the fifties their films were exiled to the land of late night movies to greet frustrated insomniacs and day shift workers, more recently they have been promoted to cult heroes! Their films have been consistently viewed in Campus cineams.

To meet this Marx Brothers boom, many authors have tried to dig up interesting anecdotes, and stories about the Marx Brothers. In the past few years, there have been more books about them, than the total number of movies produced by the Marx brothers team. Out of all the books concerning the Marx brothers the best one so far has to be The Marx Bros. Scrapbook by Groucho Marx and Richard J. Anobile. The book is just that, a scrapbook. There are no pretentions of lengthy researching projects or searches to find out the "true" history of the Marx Brothers. Rather Groucho Marx and Anobile have let it "all hang out" so to speak, through personal interviews and a collection of memorabilia from the various collections of the Marx brothers. Actually Anobile does all the interviewing, and most of the time he is interviewing Groucho! However, many other relevant people are interviewed as well: Zeppo, Gummo (the fifth Marx brother, he quit the team before they ever made a movie, only the most devoted fans even know who he is) Susan Marx, (Harpo's wife), and many people who worked with the Marx brothers in Vaudeville, (including Jack Benny) on Broadway, and in the Movies.



Anobile has presented the interviews verbatum, and has not edited out little bickerings between himself and Groucho (showing the latter to be quite grouchy at times indeed).

Occasionally he has let Groucho ramble on aimlessly. While this is tedious at times, I think that it is an important part of the book. It lets you feel that Groucho, and the other people interviewed in the book are talking to YOU. The Marx Bros. Scrapbook is a very personal reading experience. It is also so loose and candid that a warning had to be added to the label: "UNEXPURGATED GROUCHO: Portions may not be suitable for children."

Unexpurgated indeed! Groucho spends almost as much time talking about his sexual experiences as his cinematic comedies. Referring to his days in early vaudeville he quipped, "I was an innocent boy (then). Why it wasn't until the following year that I got ghonorrhea from a hooker in Montreal... My mother sent me a bag full of stuff — bananas and sandwiches — and some money for the train (to come home)."

The Groucho interviews add the most insight into the Marx brothers as individuals; Chico's peccadillos, and Harpos personality. Small talk about Zeppo and Gummo, and various personalities. While at times Groucho makes cruel remarks that are damaging to the reputations of people who are already dead, usually his remarks are thoughtful and most humorous.

In addition to the interviews, there is an extensive collection of photographs that are quite striking; pictures of the Marx Brothers as youngsters, stars, and even a final poignant shot (right before Chico died) in 1961 of all five Marx Brothers, as middle aged men.

Anobile's book isn't perfect. At times it is sloppy, other times cruel. However it is the most interesting book, as well as the most artistic of all the recent efforts to bring literary life, to the cinematic giants of the thirties, who have achieved a renaissance of sorts in the seventies.

Dylan Book Con't.

Hentoff: Since you didn't stay in college, does that mean you haven't found someone to love you?

Dylan: Let's go on to the next question.

Hentoff: How do you get your kicks these days?

Dylan: I hire people to look into my eyes, and then I have them kick me.

Hentoff: And that's the way you get your kicks?

Dylan: No. Then I forgive them; that's where my kicks come in.

It's also interesting to note how the level of criticism takes a great jump around 1967, as Rock (capital R) jutts up, and magazines like Crawdaddy!, Fusion and Rolling Stone start nourishing minds like Paul Nelson, Jon Landau (whose piece on John Wesley Harding is the best writing in the book, and remains, after five years, a classic overview of Dylan), Robert Christgau and Nik Cohn, all of whom outclass the plain nitpickers (Sing Out!'s Irwin Silber, Hentoff, Robert Shelton) who chronicled Early Dylan. This swing of music criticism's shifting from staid bastions of hacks and ignorance like The New York Times, Newsweek and the shamefully narrow Sing Out! is the best development ever to happen to the intelligent discussion of 'non-normal' music in America.

This Retrospective speaks then, of much more than 'merely' the shifting soul of modern music's best poet. Try it, there's really a bit of all of us here — a little good, but unfortunately, mostly bad.

The Battle In The NFL Trenches

By Mike Brophy

In this modern era of American football the average fan looks to the long-bomb touchdown pass as a mark of true excitement.

How many would look to the artful display put on by the free safety or cornerback who had the assignment of covering the receiver on his pass route for their afternoon of entertainment?

This is the half of the game discussed and illustrated by Murray Olderman, an established (writer of football) and author of The Pro Quarterback and The Running Backs, who brings to life the game that is played in the trenches by the defensive tackles and middle linebackers.

He discusses, at first, the historical chronology of the game and variations of defenses as developed by the coaches of yesteryear.

Much the artist with pen and ink, Olderman uses not only his own illustrations, but blends them with a wide variety of over three hundred photographs to present a surprisingly accurate portrayal of what defense is all about.

From the days of Sam Huff and Andy Robustelli, Olderman brings the reader right up to the Miami Dolphins and Nick Buoniconti along with Manny Fernandez and their 53 defense that has been molded out of a bunch of no-name guys who simply, as Doug Swift put it "love their games."

He talks of the Jimmy Pattons, the Larry Wilsons, and the Cornell Greens who had the pleasure of serving as the prime concerns in the football education of this writer.

Within in the confines of the book the reader finds a section of yellow-orange pages and, upon turning to them, finds (therein) a portfolio of the all-time defenders. Thirteen football immortals are enshrined in the authors' own words and sketches. Twelve men and a coach, none other than Dallas' Tom Landry who led the Giant defense as coach for many years and was credited with devising the 4-3 defense that has become a mainstay in the annuals of professional football.

(There are twelve players named as there were three qualified men to fill the positions.) The likes of Bob Lilly (defensive tackle for Dallas), Deacon Jones (defensive end for the Rams), and Gino Marchetti (the other defensive end for Baltimore) highlight the gallery's hangings.

These men were, and are, a great credit to the game of football, as are all defenders who strive for that one chance to pick up the pigskin and run to paydirt. Few get that... but most get satisfaction for having done a job well. For they are — The Defenders.

I, as a writer associated with football, greatly enjoyed reading the book and I am sure that any football fan who has nothing to do but wait for the start of the World Football League schedule in July would gain great pleasure from reading it during the off-season.

The writer has an ability to keep the context on a level that all can understand. It is not written in the complex football language of a playbook that the New England Patriots might use.

This is, indeed a book that is worthy of being read by an and all football enthusiasts. If this book does manage to gain your interest, then Prentice-Hall has many more in a series of sports publications presented in much the same manner.

This was one book I could not manage to put down until I had completed reading its entire contents.

Somewhere between the fifth and the tenth second of the first song the words, "He's back" surfaced in my mind. And stayed. Anything else I write here is nothing more than a variation on those two words. It doesn't matter whether you thought of Dylan as "the spokesman for our generation" or just someone who had put a lot of the things you had felt and thought into words and music. What's important is that he meant a lot of things to a lot of people and now he will mean more things to more people. Dylan's back.

—Your Sacred Cowboy

Let's cast aside some junk right now. I see no obligation on Dylan's part to keep writing songs in any particular form. He's not going through the insidious slum life he was before that prompted him to write what he did. He's always maintained that he has to live his songs before they get written if they're to be any good, and it's obvious that he's not, for better or worse, living the same life. This 'what have you done lately attitude' is a corrupt and foolish one, for the old songs still exist (and who put the time limit on songs or art for that matter?) and I'm sure that no one could say that his message has taken hold in any great respect anyway.

On the cover Bob's painted "Cast-Iron Songs & Torch Ballads" which is a good description of this iron ribbed collection of love songs:

"On A Night Like This" is a beautiful painting of a warm night of love in a frosty cabin, done in the "I'll Be Your Baby Tonight" genre. "Hazel" is a slow, firm lament asking for a touch of her love. "Something There Is About You"'s subject is a charmer, with parts of her character from another century, and doesn't require mindless, killing fidelity. She moves, as does the melody, with style and grace, taking Bob out of his whirlwind to a better place. "Forever Young" closes side one and opens side two, once in a medium speed, the other up tempo. Some reports peg this as a message to his children, but if it were only for them, he wouldn't have shared it with us. So it is a general well-wishing to all, like Zappa's "Every Poor Soul Who's Adrift In The Storm" from the end of 200 Motels, but Bob's is, naturally, a bit more noble. Where Bob hopes we "build a ladder to the sky and climb on every rung", Frank hopes the Lord will "help everybody so they all get some action, some love on the weekend, some real satisfaction". "Forever Young" is no classic, but it's nice to hear Dylan wish us well, the pawns in their game. "You Angel You" is "as fine as anything's fine". "Never Say Goodbye" is another quick, poetic love note. Excellent. I can already hear "Wedding Song" being played at thousands of weddings across the land. Just Dylan and a guitar, it's about, well, love, but also a definition of Dylan's position in his love, in his world:

"It's never been my duty
To remake the world at large,
Nor is it my intention
To sound the battle charge
Cause I love you more than all of that..."

The original title for the album was Lovesongs, and while Dylan obviously believes what he wrote before, singing many of his old songs with fierce intensity on his tour, he has found in itself a love he wants more than anything else. He tried, and couldn't do it all for us, and now he knows that more than ever. The last lines on the record are: "I love you more than ever - Now that the past is gone." Now that's a message that needs exposure.

Getting away from the 'simple' love songs, we find several that have a bit more than joy to express.

"Dirge" is about bittersweet, 'weak' love, with only a piano and acoustic guitar to tell the story:

"Heard your songs of freedom
And man forever stripped
Acting out his folly
While his back is being whipped.
Like a slave in orbit (?)
He's beaten till he's tamed
All for a moment's glory
And it's a dirty, rotten shame."

A final, regretful look back at the Folk World that scorned him so badly? Dylan goes on:

"So sing your praise of progress
And of the doom machine.
The naked truth is still taboo
Whenever it can be seen.
Lady Luck who shines on me
Will tell you where I'm at.
I hate myself for loving you
But I'll sure get over that."

Mankind, perhaps, is the subject of Bob's wrath here, and if so, would indicate, along with his other, more tolerant songs on the album, an ever-turning attitude towards us (I guess he might be human after all).

"Going Going Gone" has some beautiful guitar playing by Robertson, and is Bob's realization that what's done is done, and that he can't live "hangin' by a thread - playin' it straight" and "I've just got to cut loose before it gets late". The core of the song comes through in this verse:

"Grandma said 'Boy,
follow your heart.
And you'll be fine at the end of the line
All that's gold doesn't shine
Don't you and your one true love ever part.'"

Dylan has to be honest with himself and follow his heart, as once again, he tells us he has nothing to live up to.

"Tough Mama" is perhaps the best song on the record, with a bouncing, rolling feel that supports the song's idea of the past as passed, and that he can't make it alone as well as reaffirming his stardom stunning for a life of personal love:

"I ain't haulin'
Any of my lambs to the marketplace anymore.
Prison walls are crumblin' down
There is no end in sight.
I gained some recognition
But I lost my appetite.
Sweet beauty,
Meet me at the border
late tonight."

Nine new songs about love; some sad, some totally fulfilling, some false and deluding. Planet Waves is a mature, full picture of a man in his thirties finding new personal values, and refusing (though struggling with) compromise. Dylan's not turning his back on us, but he knows that with the way things are now, as he reminded us in every encore in every city on the tour, most likely he'll go his way and we will, unfortunately, go ours. But if we can make it, and begin to accept the naked truth, Bob sounds like he'd be glad to have us go his way.

What Planet Waves can do for all of us is to begin to show the true, solid side of love — that love is not a psychedelic cloud, but a foundation that has to be worked and worked on to get anywhere. The mere invocation of the word is not enough. Dylan's 'message' has always been one of love. Before he showed us what was bad. That helped a little, and maybe more will happen if he shows us what's good.

Bob Dylan is quite likely the only person who has successfully transformed the impersonal Boston Garden or any other arena into a dignified concert setting. The four o'clock kiddie show was peopled generally by a younger, less serious group of Dylan devotees who would have been satisfied by the mere sight of the man. The early show lacked the musical and spiritual graces which had an awesome effect during the evening concert. As Dylan came out unaccompanied after the intermission, the Garden could have been a coffee house somewhere in Greenwich Village. It could even have been 1965. It was during this part of the concert that Dylan sang some of his most poetic and prophetic lyrics. At both shows, the crowd responded overwhelmingly to "Gates Of Eden" and "It's Alright Ma (I'm Only Bleeding)" and almost hysterically to the lines 'Money doesn't talk, it Swears' and 'Even the President of the United States sometimes must have to stand naked.' But it wasn't hysterical, it was dignified and that is a tribute to Dylan.

The support given Dylan by the Band was impeccable in its clarity yet Dylan was always the center of attention. As he walked over to the piano before doing "Ballad of a Thin Man" the entire stage underwent a transformation. Although Dylan chose to perform mostly from his older classics, he gave new life to many of them and a whole new flavor to the more obscure "Ballad of Hollis Brown" and "I Don't Believe You", and this succeeded in adding heightened variation to a show filled with diversity. Dylan's performances represented an anthology of his musical and lyrical greatness and if he didn't speak to the audience, he was letting the music speak for him. The Band's set in contrast to Dylan provided a kind of relief from the intensity of Dylan's music.

Whether Bob's return stems from greed, an expired recording contract or simply moving off his duff for the first time in years doesn't really matter. What also doesn't matter is the 'event'-ness of it all, for that is only based on the giddiness humans feel when confronted with a situation in which many fellow humans share in their judgement, and therefore make it something it isn't. All this foolishness is connected to our basic insecurity and need for self-assurance. Thus do we import importance to the proceedings, putting an incredible strain on the performer, and making the actual concert far less, out of practical necessity, than the foreplay hype build-up. This is the stuff of which the Star Syndrome is made, and on which Time, Newsweek et al. base their misjudgements, and is the main reason the conventional newspapers and newsmagazines so often miss the essence of a story ('this is no story, this is real!'). Woodstock is perhaps the prime example of the straight media's ignorance, though Kent State is another good one.

This is why Dylan lives as a semi-recluse, and why any concert in this tour must be judged on the only reason for its existence — the music these people play (AP, in all its noseyness for news, thought the fact that Dylan spoke three times during one of the Boston shows as good enough to send all over the country via its wire news service). Let's keep things looking real.

What does matter about this 'event' is simply the fact that Dylan is moving around the country again, ("I expose myself every time I go on stage," he says) singing some of the best messages of personal revolution ever written. Yes, the Sacred Cowboy's right, Dylan is back, and it feels so good to see him again. Eight bucks? For Dylan and The Band? Easy. If an 'entertainer' like Bette Midler can get $7.50, Dylan & Co. are worth at last $20.

His two shows in Boston weren't uniformly splendid; the first was low-level and merely functional too much of the time. They had to be there, they had to be singing those songs. Maybe 4:00 isn't to Dylan or The Band's liking. An interesting (and painful to many) sidelight to the nationwide media ticket flush is the fact that five minutes before the four o'clock show all the amateur scalpers who were blessed with extra tickets in the mail and who were unable to sell the extras at any price, panicked and were giving them away in a final goodwill gesture as they scrambled to get inside at the last possible moment. So it was that in the span of five minutes in one small area outside the Boston Garden Kostek got himself a souvenir ticket, and could have had two more for the asking.

While the 4:00 show was spotty, the 8:30 was all you could ask for. The best way to approach the show was to stay open and not tie yourself up in mind games, comparisons to recorded work, or how 'demeaning' Boston Garden was to Mr. Dylan's music. I feel my friend Mr. Sokol missed a great concert in his tangled web of doubts. And I'm sure many also got caught up in the ultimately self-denying, hollow and pointless shell of Anticipation ("... is making me crazy ..."), but I found it a delight to sit back and watch a master in action. I know I'm a different person (and, better) for following Dylan through songs like "Gates Of Eden" and "It's Alright Ma (I'm Only Bleeding)". [illegible] intensity flow and flow. The Band provided excellent, excellent backup, with each note [illegible] in its place [illegible]. It wasn't rock they played, it was more like marble, with some songs smoothly polished, others rough chunks, but all seemed the perfect way of expressing the song's [illegible]. Bob Dylan on stage has only his voice. [illegible] his songwriting has already occurred, so he has only his voice to express his gathering soul. His inflections and bizarre rhythms were a delight both shows, and it's interesting to note that he sang no two songs alike. There were many individual beauties: the very rhythmic "Hollis Brown", the soaring and falling "It Ain't Me Babe", a slightly reworked "Gates Of Eden" with a new melody catch line adding additional color and meaning not exhibited previously.

One of the two highest musical spots was a driving thorough gut grabbing "All Along The Watchtower" done Hendrix style. Robertson's guitar couldn't of course match Jimi's musical soar, but the beautiful power of The Band's perfect working together added immensely. Dylan rode on this bulk of power sound, and crested along, line after line adding to the ominous scene. By the time a wild cat did growl and that two riders were approaching, the wind really did howl, at least in my head. Check this one out when the live album is released.

There are some concert moments that are classic, and I will always cherish. One of these was during "Like A Rolling Stone". As the song proceeded, we looked out across the 18,000 people, and watched every one of them get to their feet and begin cheering and clapping. They weren't getting up to dance, and they weren't getting up to see better. They knew the show was almost over, and wanted to cheer, to salute, to praise this extraordinary man as he sang his greatest song, not because he was a Star, or because they were caught up in the immediateness of it all, but they wanted to thank him for making their lives richer ones to live. This is love, so gimmie more and more and more and more and more.

Manhole Coverage

Manhole
Grace Slick
(Grunt BFL 1-0347)

At last: an album by anyone from Jefferson Airplane that can be called successful. And leave it to amazing Grace to get it together. Hers were the only worthwhile songs on Baron von Tollbooth and the Chrome Nun and Long John Silver, the two most recent neo-Airplane-or-parts-thereof albums, and her sardonic wit and San Francisco sensibility always make for an interesting digression from the norm.

Manhole is being billed as Grace's solo album in spite of the fact that most of side two is written by cohorts Kantner and Freiberg. One song, "It's Only Music", with lyrics by Grateful Dead sideman Bob Hunter, shows Grace absent entirely. Nevertheless, the record also marks Paul Kantner's finest writing in years and the whole affair is a joy to report.

Manhole's raison d'etre is the fifteen-minute Slick magnum opus, "Them from the Movie 'Manhole'." Sung largely in Spanish, it's similar to Cat Stevens' "Foreigner Suite" in that both are extended pieces made up of several smaller pieces, all coalescing to form an impressive whole. There is no dominant theme to the composition, except perhaps the importance of personal freedom. The music largely makes use of the same five or six chords, (within a minor-key framework) that Grace dished out in varying combinations on previous songs. The Spanish motif is present also in "Jay", the album's opener featuring Spanish guitars.

Grace is in full glory with "Better Lying Down", a boogie-woogie tune that seems to sing the praises of eating out: "Well long tongued daddy a few people may get up on their morals and go — But as long as you're smiling nothing wrong about where you're going down." Some fine banshee wailing from our First Lady helps things along.

"Epic (No. 38)" is a monumental ode to Our Generation and Kantner's finest song since Blows Against the Empire. Here are the bagpipes Grace and Paul recorded on a special trip to London last summer, s well as what seems like a symphony orchestra. At the risk of treading on pretentious ground, the song emerges as a beauty, truly inspired. Grace's singing is impeccable throughout as she bounces off Kantner.

"Come Again? Toucan" is the fluffiest piece on the album. A Freiberg-Slick song, it offers us a lighter, less frenetic side of Grace without marring the grandiose ambiance previously created by the longer pieces.

We could have hoped Grace Slick's solo album would be all Grace. She has sufficiently established herself as a songwriter worthy of her own record. Manhole does offer us more of Ms. Slick than any Airplane or Starship album and for that, along with the fact that the album is undeniably a major achievement, we should be content.

— Steve Feld

Just a couple of words to supplement Steve's review. This album reminds me of mothing so much as listening to the radio some afternoon, mainly because it calls it "eclectic" would be to give new life to that old reviewing cliche. Musically, not a single style dominates or unifies the album — which is not necessarily a vice, mind you, it's just the way things are. Moreover, the presence here of a song on which Grace never appears ("It's Only Music") tends to weaken the solo album concept. My personal favorites are "Jay", which bears a striking resemblance to Yoko Ono's "Windholes", "It's Only Music", with lovely vocals and evocative back-of-the-mind lyrics, and "Epic (No. 38)", which features bagpipes (but not enough), glass harmonica, and full orchestra put together in a pleasantly surprising, coherent way. On the other hand, "Theme from the movie 'Manhole'," makes me get picky, like: the orchestration tends to lapse into "Man of La Mancha", it's a 15-minute rock epic all in the same key, there are too many Slickian vocal swoooops and dives, and I DON'T UNDERSTAND SPANISH ANYWAY. MANHOLE (thus) is the archetypal good-but-flawed solo album, stunning in places and excessive in others.

DEATHS

Live Music:
Topper Carew
Bluewall
Jan. 28

The stage stood full of instruments waiting for their guides as the piped-in music filled the people infested room. The lights were dim and the smell of corn popping and alcohol evaporating was engrossed in the stagnant air. People. People sitting, people standing, people talking, people listening, people yelling, people walking, people drinking, people eating, people looking, people seeking to be found, people seeking to remain hidden.

The pipes lost their pressure and the music ceased as the band walked in unnoticed by the people. Slowly the instruments came alive as the flute played a few notes, next the sax, then the drums. The remarks of "it's jazz they're playing, jazz" could be heard as the already overheated crowd began to get hot. Then the instruments paused a moment and began in an apparent jazz mood which quickly switched to rock. A few bodies began to move in a rhythmic fashion to the sounds of the music. Most, however continued their consumption of alcohol, words, and sounds. The P.A. system which transformed the notes into a distorted cacophony added just the proper touch to this crowded room.

The people kept coming as the stomach expanded to capacity and the only thing which could be heard within were the rumblins of a sick organ. People were pushed, packed, and blasted out by music turned into a loud distorted jumble. They sat there and drank at tables covered in the stench of fallen beer and talked increasingly louder so that they could hear themselves over the noise.

Who would submit themselves to the crowd, stench, and noise and call it fun? "Not I" said the slightly intoxicated student sitting at a ringside table in the Blue Wall.

ROCK ON DAVID ESSEX
(Columbia KC 32560)

1973's Rock On was no new taste of humble pie. David Essex is something of a cross between Sly Stone and Randy Newman, or was that Dr. John and Jimmy Cliff? Anyway, these ears enjoy this record most when they're in the mood to be tickled by funky water-soaked rhythms, juicy bass lines, spackle background violins and choruses, and uneven vocals. And these ears get into this mood quite frequently.

The title tune is an off-the-wall pick for hit single which induces those caffeine jitters without artificial stimulation. Where do we go from here? A little reggae, a little funk, something old, something new. Best cuts are the smooth "Bring in the Sun", "Rock On", and "We All Insane". Well, aren't we? C'mon ears, let's go eat some coconuts.

In Concert:
Johnny Winter
The James Gang
Springfield Civic Center
Jan. 16

Springfield, where the flung frisbees clunk unimpeded on the punkin heads of the dazed audience, and where there indeed appears to be nothing to do save leave or get stoned. Joints go at two dollars each, though some gentlemen are known to take but a buck.

The James Gang were useful to the 8,000 in the sold out hockey rink because they flashed pretty lights, made a lot of noise and taxed no one's sensibilities. Tommy Bolin, their guitarist who made more than one rude, crude and delightful noise for Billy Cobham's Spectrum album, proved that he could be lulled into an evening-long snooze, if only for the sake of continuity. Living up to their reputation, the crowd threw money at them. Pennies. Hard.

Johnny Winter needs a band. Since there is only one Rick Derringer, who plays excellent back-up guitar, and Rick is now with brother Edgar, Johnny's left as a trio, and not a very powerful one either. Drummer Richard Hughes is hereby branded as less than appropriate, as his moronic bashing kept anything from going anywhere. Bassist Randy Hobbs could've played a little more than he did, but Johnny is apparently so concerned with getting that stupid Thump-Thump Bash band backing that Hobbs has no choice.

As for our albino wonder, his playing was a bit slower, his voice has lot a bit of its edge, but he is still amazing and an immense talent. The sad part is he is not, after all, another Hendrix, and can't hold down the whole show by himself. It's a shame and a waste to see him grinding through the Grand Funk routine. With his deadhead iron 'rhythm' section, the holes left by Derringer grew and grew as the evening proceeded.

The songs were the usual vehicles for Johnny's lightning solos that are, as always, something to see. The spotlight knew that, and focused clearly on his hands. Having a rave-up? Only at times.

Afterwards the crowd pelted cars, people, lights and hamburgs with snowballs. Biggest 'ball raiser' was a Volkswagen driven by a black. "I haven't done this in years," said one hairy beard in twenty years.

THUNDERMUG-THUNDERMUG STRIKES (Epic KE 3264)time: 33:22

Interesting Canadian band here, one that sounds like Flo & Eddie singing for Slade. There's some fine, demented music here fronted by their Canadian hits "Orbit" and "Africa". B

Our staff, agreeable as always, dragged 129 different albums onto page 11 of the December 14 issue of Poor Richard's in an orgy of Democratic Opinionation. Everyone that wanted it had their say. (Say what? - Ed.)

Now here, presented in the interest of Computer Technocracy and Jon Carr, compiled through a fairly complicated and fairly fair formula, are the totals. I guess this is what you'd have to call the Staff Consensus of what was what, 1973 style.

READ THIS (it may mean whether or not you'll get something other than a diploma from college)

by Garuman Gomes

Yes, it's me again. I'm here to attempt, in this column, to let you understand that a university can be more than just classroom in the way of its education. A great many of you have learned — within a relatively short time, I might add — the horrors of Whitmore (or less) and the dining commons, as well as encountering within the classroom the abominations that pass for courses. This will be however, an educational channel, and will show you fields of endeavor within the University which may be of use to you.

Since it's important to look at your own backyard first, then set to cleaning others' later. It is in this light that we shall do an overview of the Student Government Association.

I. Student Government

The offices of the SGA are located in the upper level of the Student Union. You may visit them — they are not quarantined.

What the hell can Student Government do, you may ask.

Plenty, I reply — if you know where to look.

The Student Government of UMass is among the best in the nation, believe it or not. They have power of funding groups with special abilities (known as R.S.O. groups, see part II.)

If these groups deemed worthy by the representatives (senators), you have elected (either directly — or indirectly, by not voting), and who are, if I understand my two main sources this year, currently involved in much infighting — the groups are funded. If you think you'd like to see this rhetorical melodrama when it's in session, it usually occurs Wednesday night in Rms. 166-67 Campus Center.

The Senate also has committees, which you can join and at least get a lot of information out of, and at most (for those greedier, or more righteous, amongst ye), a certain degree of decision-making power, or potential for power, on the direction of overall student life. So we have:

Subjective Power Rating:
(Gomes' Version)

1) Budgets — the Student Activities Tax; grills RSO groups. Spanish Inquisition work interest you? Go for Budgets — although I've heard they've cleaned up Budgets considerably — pity... Contact all committees through R.S.O. Offices.

2) Academic Affairs has a very distinguished record, despite a few immense failures, which were fought against overwhelming odds — Rhetoric and language requirements. The thing I can remember disliking about this committee was that it seemed to be inclined towards Liberal Arts, to the detriment of such cruelties as math courses and engineering courses. I think these folks got it rough. Really. Interested in tea with the Provost? (Contact...)

3) Governmental Affairs — within the SGA constitution, the most powerful in terms of running the Senate — after SGA President Apostola and Speaker David Booker resign (unlikely) — Chairperson of this committee (if I recall correctly) reigns over. Oh, that's right — Treasurer Paul Hamel would have to resign too. Anyway, they look over RSO constitutions, and amendments to the SGA constitution and By-Laws. A good place to learn how to do it. Learn some structure. It doesn't hurt. (Contact...)

4) Rents and Fees — Ahhh, yes — what you pay to go here. Campus Center Fees are discussed, athletic fees, the Dining Commons (there was once a very active Food Service Committee), occasionally with success, more than often not. It's worth a try though. (Contact...)

5) Student Matters (or Social Matters or Social Action) — Interest in dormitories, services, and the general rights of students. I would say it's a humanitarian committee, as is Rents and Fees. (Contact...)

6) Financial Affairs — very powerful on the Senate floor. Budgets work in categories, and Financial Affairs is concerned with Category changes so that groups may use something specifically allotted for one thing for another category. Very interesting work. (Contact...)

7) Communication Committee (formerly Communications Co-ordinator, prior to that Public Relations) — Good will. These are the folks who are to keep us informed on what the Senate is doing. Where are they? Come out, and show us your stuff. (Contact...)

These are the people who run Student Government, though not necessarily the school. Real Power lies in funding, however.

II. R.S.O. GROUPS RECOGNIZED STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

You are paying for this piece of paper that contains my words, and those of several others. But that's not nearly enough. You pay for this R.S.O. group. IF YOU WANT TO WRITE, YOU SHOULD. I didn't get into this office through any supernatural power — unless you call walking up a flight of stairs on the left hand side of the entrance to the Student Union a supernatural feat. There is a need for reporters, lackeys, photographers — anything, Jim, and you don't need a license to type. Please ... come on up.

WMUA is also an RSO group, paid for by you, the student. If you like broadcasting, you should be able to head up there and get a space depending on the time they have available. If you really want to go hog wild, you can even go for a first level engineering license from the government, so that you can become another ... disc jockey (sigh!).

Concert Committee, although now seemingly doomed through over-conservativism, was also an RSO group, and they will be working on at least one or two more concerts. Get involved. There may be a way to save this thing, and Program Council, who they are working with now, is responsible for special events and films. Contact the RSO offices for locations — 2nd floor Student Union, the right hand stairwell.

WTOY and WMUV are really the same thing — a place where you can learn the techniques of video tape, then rush anxiously to the Senate to get some type of broadcast facilities and get refused... Still they try — and have produced some monitor work in the Campus Center. And because it has no broadcast capability, the television and videotape are much more experimental. Again, it's on the 2nd level, Student Union, — in the back, so we can keep it TOP SECRET!

Statement of purpose of this page

Political in implication, this page of Poor Richard's will be set aside for suitable commentary on the behalf of anyone who wishes to submit suitable political commentary. I really don't relish the thought of sitting down and typing a dissertation a week, so LET'S HEAR FROM YOU.

WHAT DO YOU WANT TO SEE COVERED IN THIS PAPER?

WHAT TOPICS WOULD YOU HAVE US AIM OUR RATHER SCATTERED MINDS AT? Well, Bozo? — YOU'RE PAYING FOR THIS TRIP.

If you want to write for us, it is easy, all you need are a bunch of facts and something to make them stick on paper. DO IT.

Also, this page starts an overall look at Politics currently affecting us in some way or another — threading out the blameful from the blameless in power situations. Hey! Can you follow?" — Pete Brown.

—GOMES

Very well then...

We have the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP — translation to those who still wish to see Moe Howard brought up as a Distinguished Visitor — I knew the campus was going to HELL, but that bowel movement last semester convinced me more thoroughly than any statistical analysis would), which tries to get important and or relevant "SPEAKERS" (it's become a profession now) for big buck$$$. Now, you might try applying — apply through the Student Senate — and you might succeed in getting Howard up here. A pox upon your cause.

III. Transition

Getting more involved, there's the Fine Arts Council, which currently needs four (4) student members. The blends of "classical" art, supposedly representative. Art Galleries and Duke Ellington, and rumors of other Big Things. There are nice people in the office, and even if you don't want to join the Council, I'm sure they could use some help in some area, and you could get to meet interesting people. Herter 116.

And there's the Student Faculty Academic Matters Committee.

The above-named groups are partaken of by Students and some have RSO status, and a good deal of them are at least partially beneficial in the long run. They also may wield some power on this campus, and these seem like a good place to start. There are also mainly socially-concerned groups and self-help and informational agencies like the Women's Center in Goodell. And there is an Astronomy Club, and groups within which you can self-indulge in your own particular interests. Then there's the Third World Alliance and Ahora — many more, most formed by students who found something lacking for them or the entire community, and decided to do something themselves.

And there is also, currently springing from a deep-felt need on the part of many of us, a 'Jazz' Society. 'Jazz' itself is an improper word (origins obscure — probably from Jivin' Ass to J'ASS to JAZZ), and it encompasses the music which makes up about ninety per cent of currently popular forms — Afro-American Music would be a more proper term. To be more precise, the Jazz Society is currently undergoing a process of RSOhood, including Budgets. And if you want to hear the source of the music, this is really where one should come. But help is needed. Contact me or Tony Tatum, care of Bill Hasson, Student Activities (2nd floor Student Union, 5-2351) — a lot should be happening, but help will be needed. I really don't want to see the Campus die, and with the help of the Jazz Society, it should live.

Of Course, if you can't take the pace or place of ego of the 'big time' at UMass, there are always things like house councils, area councils (one for commuters), and the like. Not enough time or patience for the haughtiness which often comes with those who run central student organizations? This might be your best bet.

Or, if you wanna pay a little bread for enlightenment, Students International Meditation Society might be able to help. Funny though — it always seems that it takes a lot of money to be officially enlightened. What happens — is the poor man or woman doomed to be in the darkness all his-her life? Frightening thought. Well, if that thought doesn't frighten you, may you go to the truth and let that frighten you.

IV. The "Infighting" or Ego Interplay of Illusory Power

In the case of the Student Senate, and many other of the top RSO groups, it's not really surprising to find a clique, dabbling in power, or influence. Microcosm of the larger society we have to deal with. But the main thing to remember is, whether or not you stood on the Senate floor last year, you helped — with your money, to put these institutions in safe lodgings for another year. And one of the chief responsibilities is to see that power does not blind a person to the truth.

I do not like the Student Government at UMass. Speaking as a subject, I find it disquieting that people think they should mirror a bureaucracy. Imaginary power, too — really now, admit it. The main power of the Senate lies in its funding so that useful groups can do what they have to do for others — and themselves. The Board of Trustees has the final say over taxation of students.

Perhaps a Student Union? It's a hope (or a curse, depending on your viewpoint), but unlikely for the time being, because, if I understand a veteran reporter of the Collegian, the state considers an education at UMass to be a product. You, and I, my dear friends, in addition to being computer numbers, are also the chief product of the University of Massachusetts. And somehow, that upsets me very much. That's a long range thing to change here, then — unless you want to find yourself in a supermarket, stacked up with some inexpensive cuts of beef — and the beef will be more expensive to buy than you and two others like you will cost. Ahhh, volunteered slavery. In the meantime, if you vegetate long enough up here, you might end up next to the potatoes, and if you 'blip' long enough you'll be a computer component. Go -- I wish you realization, and I wish you would help.

Cocktails in Maine

Sitting around the patio, I wonder about your dress.
It's the color

but no birds deck its hollows.

(Or do you purposefully guard the 'clink'

so no malice can glitter through?)

Moved forward

I sip your tea,

harvesting the words of men

After The Flowers

She plucks buttercups from her

In the room's mist of dust specks,
the visiting husband pauses at the evening window, a frame of a pale reflection.

He is surprised at his dry mouth when he speaks-
  "That was a great day, gliding
through Kew Gardens,
taking Edna out of the sun, under the trees, and then our picnic...
What was it? Yes... hard-boiled eggs, cucumber sandwiches, wine
    for us,
cool water for the children... with the children... when you were well."

The mist thickens, like soup in a cool
evening air;
His finger quivers along the wallpaper:
an hysterical bee over faded flowers.

  "Do you remember the Kew Gardens'
flowers, the colors, the colors...
These are a poor substitute;
    why,
even the folowers on your wall at home are more real."

Awakened, her vacant expression hardens,
but is no less vacant-
  "These flowers are real.
    There were no flowers at Kew Gardens. They were torn up long ago.
The pond there has the stench of dead fish and glows with phosphorescence of rotting fish."

Every two months the two hour visits ended like this. Now he was patient,
He no longer reacted to her remarks with the shock of a struck child, but was able to return to the mad mist
where threaded buttercups were real.

Sophistication

Of course I couldn't tell when it started. But now things are fine.

At regular intervals things slow down. That's when we rest.

I am inside something. There must be another something outside the first something. I know this because things happen which we didn't think about first.

I was a piece of the light. I fell from it. Someday I shall return, through the seven restraining levels.

Lately I have more and more trouble remembering about the light.

But there is something like the light. We get high. Sometimes we do speed, or skag, or liquor. My mother, that thing around me, gets us stuff to make us feel good.

A new feeling is happening. Sometimes I feel very, very awful.

But I can take it because I am getting interested in a lot of things, and I love my mother.

ROISTER DOISTERS RETURN

Roister Doisters Present:
5 Way Overlay
Bowker Auditorium,
Jan. 30-Feb. 3

by Michael Kostek
David Sokol
Andrew MacKenzie

The production presented last weekend by UMass' Roister Doisters theater group, Five Way Overlay, turned out to be a mixed evening both engaging and dull, awkward and graceful.

The "five one act plays for the contemporary audience" all dealt with the same themes: alienation, actual repulsion from society, Liberals, Rednecks, sex, noble sex, freedom and the almost total lack thereof, frauda and pseudos.

The difference, then, in the five plays, was in their presentation, and this is what made the evening so uneven.

The first two were Jean-Claude Van Itallie efforts, Almost Like Being and I'm Really Here. Almost Like Being outwardly concerns a MOR female singer who never gets beyond 'almost like being' in her life; patterned after the song "Almost Like Being In Love", it was interesting and effective overall in detailing her insensitivity. I'm Really Here went a bit further in actually depicting the same giddy girl (she is a good example of why we call women girls) finding that her chestful of showtunes and great USA expectations don't mean a thing in the face of reality. Where Almost Like Being was light I'm Really Here was blunt, at times overly so. Pam Demers gave a credible turn as the culturally, emptily programed Doris D. in a role as a person all too familiar as you see these same people each day in every way. So it is commendible that while Pam didn't totally transcend the easy manner of portraying Doris in a normal way, (made all the harder with the shoot-for-the median lines), she did interpret well enough to open up new insights into Miss Normal, as well as being an effective mouthpiece for Van Itallie's cutting remarks.

Easily the highlight of the bill was Sam Shepard's Chicago, both in the plan itself and in Bob Tracey's glowing performance as Stu, the main character in this extensive look at dreamers, doers and some sorts of reality. Tracey's easy going and engaging manner made Shepard's well written images fill the stage until we could, along with Stu, vicariously partake in his descriptions about sleeping fat men farting in trains, balding sailors and grey-haired virgins living in rooms entirely covered in rugs, and a revitilizing course in the breath of life itself. Chicago went by far the smoothest although it certainly had the simplest production, with Mr. Tracey making things work as smoothly as he wanted.

Unfortunately, John Guare's Muzeeka lost some of its impact as a result of its length. Dealing with the all too familiar themes of power, salvation, madness, and mediocrity, the play revolves around the life and eventual demise, disenchantment, and suicide of one John Argue, played respectably by Alan Kurtz. The play shrouds Argue's lust for power and control in a veil of absurdity. His incessant desire for the power to free men back to their Etruscan instincts through his abilities to write and direct Musak (the musical marshmellow fluff produced by the Muzeeka corporation) dominates his motivation. Argue goes to war to escape his problems at home. The war is absurd, as each individual soldier is contracted to a specific television network and can't fight in battles covered by non-syndicated stations. The war ends suddenly with a P.A. announcement cancelling it. Argue's perverse sexual fantasies and his encounter with a prostitute (who works from a suspended bakset and performs 'basket jobs') are equally absurd as is his war buddy's (Jack Haskell) invitation to Argue into a partnership in a sewage eliminating firm. ("You poop it, We scoop it".) The buddy's desire to save the world through eliminating its waste (and all other problems) furthers Guere's statement of power. Argue's ultimate realization of his own mediocrity and of its existence all around him leads him to his final act against himself. Credible acting and impressive lighting give continuity to this choppy and sometimes redundant play.

"It Fell Right Over"

As all faithful followers of Your Sacred Cowboy know, I am basically a reviewer of music. I usually restrict my coverage of theatrical events to food fights, the 'bedpan' shift at the Bluewall, and the old cellophane-under-the-toilet-seat trick. However, this particular invitation (Read: threat) from my editor fell within my sphere of knowledge, by some miracle (said sphere having approximately the same circumferance as your average bagel), and I gladly accepted.

There is only one person on the Famous Name staff and possibly in my entire circle of acquaintances (Remember that bagel?) who knows more about the Firesign Theater than I do, and for him I have some good news and some bad news; The good news is that you weren't out in the audience with me, watching the travesty of actors mumbling and bumbling through one of our favorite Firesign classics with no apparent knowledge of its significance, making worthless the inventive staging and lighting that went into this production. The bad news is that you weren't in the audience because you were backstage, directing this furshlugginer bomb.

What Makes Stewy Run

by John Dean

The Ballroom lights appeared to be dimmed somewhat being in the middle of what some call a crisis. The chairs were slowly filled with moving bodies quietly, almost solemnly taking their positions facing the solitary elevated podium. Capacity was not quite reached as the middle-aged mid-westerner entered the room. The crowd sat lifeless as he carefully removed his glasses and began his ascent toward the podium. After a rather inarticulate introduction which included a reading of events which this semester would bring (including a loud cheer at the mention that Moe Howard was coming to UMass) and a Who's Who rundown on the speaker, the speech began.

From Congressman to Secretary of the Interior, to writer, and finally tonight to poet, Stewart Udall had moved quite a distance. "We are coming to the end of the petroleum age. We may have come to the end of the line as far as the kind of growth we've had. We've reached the point where we have to make big changes. We are the energy gluttons of all times. Maybe we should declare those great buildings" (meaning the great skyscrapers which use up large amounts of energy to keep them hot and cold) "and the superjet port as monuments to an arrogant age. One third to one half of the energy we use is wasted. We're not only going to have to cut back, but change our values." What has led this seemingly placid man to make such seemingly radical statements? Or are they radical?

The energy crisis

The Energy Crisis began long before Stewart Udall became Secretary of the Interior. It gained minor recognition from the so called "Ecological Crisis" which this country began to notice after the printing of Rachael Carson's Silent Spring in 1962. By the middle and late sixties, the Ecological Crisis was in full blossom. Housewives to politicians, everyone's consciousness was raised at least an eyebrow. Conservation of resources was one of the main themes to which lip service was given by many governmental agencies and major oil companies. We (meaning everyone from the common laborer to the oil producer) continued through the late sixties and early seventies to squander our resources and increase our growth. You and I continued to drive our gas guzzling machines, you and I continued to demand more lights, you and I continued to demand rooms heated to seventy five degrees, you and I continued to ignore an impending crisis which has arrived.

A very interesting point which has almost become an obsession with many "environmentally aware" individuals is a desire to return to the past, when times were "better". Surely if our present situation does not satisfy, our past will suffice. Mr. Udall called for people to get their homes and their work places together "as they were thirty years ago". We have to slow down, "live simpler" comments the Secretary. For one who claims to be an idealist these statements and the general thought pattern they contain may be logical and well thought out, but for one who (like Mr. Udall) claims to be a realist, these seem to be merely pipe dreams to alleviate the energy problem. It seems unrealistic to believe that the American people will be willing to travel slower and less in the coming years, but then who thought that people would be willing to drive fifty-five miles per hour on highways?

Someone once said that a good politician seldom losses his-her touch and this is certainly true of Mr. Udall. If it had been another day and another crowd, one might easily have mistaken the former Secretary's performance as a political speech by a politician looking for votes. His comments on nationalizing the railroads, moving back to our cities, and turning the Houston Space Center into an Energy Center seemed to overgeneralize populist slogans. The only things which were lacking were the bumper stickers and the picture buttons of a smiling face. It is very interesting to observe the many innovations a politician without any power has.

The question and answer period which followed the prepared text sounded more like a press conference than what it was supposed to be. He bobbed and weaved on many questions which he was either unfamiliar with or just didn't want to commit himself on. Why for instance, after telling the audience about the many dangers implicit in the use of nuclear energy, did he fail to endorse Ralph Nader's call for a moratorium on nuclear energy development? Why, when asked to reveal his sources on his statement that the United States at present has only eight years supply of oil left, did he hedge and finally refuse to make known the author of the figures? He's not a politician anymore or is he? One wonders what makes Udall run. Is it the money? The fame? Or because he profoundly believes that he has an important message to deliver? When asked about his future, Mr. Udall replied that he was a wandering Gypsy having fun.

The crisis in energy is one which we will face for many years to come and will touch upon everyone's life be he rich or poor. There is definitely a need for "wandering Gypsy's" to notify the public of the dangers they are facing, but there will be little fun in actually getting the job done.

American Graffiti
This film is more than just another nostalgic look into the 50's. It grapples with the very real difficulties of growing up and finding a niche for oneself in the adult world. The film recounts the exploits of four friends on the night before they are to go their separate ways; some to college, others to continue to haunt the local street corners. There's a lot of fun and good music, but also some interesting studies of American youth. Mountain Farms Mall.

The Big Sleep (1946)
The Howard Hawkes adaptation of the novel by Raymond Chandler, set in the same mold as the Maltese Falcon. It's Bogart and Bacall at their best, with an endless barrage of sexual banter and barbed retorts. The plot defies comprehension, yet for all its confusion it remains one of the slickest detective thrillers ever made. Globe Northampton

The Circus — Charles Chaplin, 1928
The Circus was made just after Chaplin's huge success with THE GOLD RUSH the previous year. Despite his mother's death and an impending divorce from his second wife, Chaplin resisted the temptation to try and outdo his previous accomplishments and prove himself. THE CIRCUS is a modest film compared to the later features but has been described by nearly everyone who sees it as "a little gem". Much ignored in the Chaplin ouevre, it will come as a surprise to those unfamiliar with the early Chaplin features that the Master could move so swiftly from the 2-reelers into the feature length. It is a fine, funny film. Playing with THE CIRCUS is Chaplin's THE IMMIGRANT an early short. Thompson 104, 6, 8, 10 p.m. Monday, Feb. 11.

Dirty Harry (1972)
Clint Eastwood chases a psychopathic murderer through alleys of San Francisco. Not very much on suspense, but for those who love blood and guts, this is the film. Some emotional relationships are thrown in so as not to make Harry seem too dirty. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, Feb. 10

The Don is Dead
Another Mafia film dealing with three families and their bloody battles. Mountain Farms Mall

The Exorcist
A hair-raising horror show, based on the work by William Blatty. It deals with the possession of a young girl by demonic spirits and subsequent exorcism. Recommended for those who like to dabble in the occult and-or are strong of stomach. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Fritz the Cat
The first feature length X-rated animation. Campus Cinemas

The Godfather (1972)
One of the most talked about films of recent years and winner of numerous Oscars. Marlon Brando and Al Pacino head an extraordinarily realistic cast. At the Calvin, Northampton

Intolerance (1916)
"D.W. Griffiths epic, film, sub-titled 'Loves Struggle Through the Ages," is a sentimentally conceived look into the intolerance of four separate periods of history. The film moves continually from one period to another, with frenzied cross-cutting at the end. The spectacle of the Babylon sequence is on a massive scale, but the public was confused and the film was long considered a commercial failure." University Film Series, Thompson 102

Magnum Force
Clint Eastwood still chasing murderers through the streets of San Francisco. He's not quite as sadistic, but dirty nonetheless. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Monkey Business (1931)
Groucho, Chico, and Harpo are stowaways on a ship. Great comedy with some hysterical love scenes. Mountain Farms Mall

Papillon
Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman star in this epic adventure film, based on the memoirs of the late Henri Charriere, who at the age of 25 was sentenced to a life of hard labor in the French penal colony in Guiana. Unlike most protagonists in this age of the anti-hero, McQueen displays all the virtues which enable him to overcome what appear to be insurmountable hardships and achieve freedom. Sometimes the flashbacks to Charrieres younger days in Paris appear obtuse, still the superb acting of McQueen and the sheer fascination with his struggle for freedom, save the film from mediocrity. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

The Petrified Forest (1936)
Originally a Broadway play, starring Leslie Howard, Bette Davis, and Humphrey Bogart. Later brought to the screen by Warner Brothers with the original cast intact. Bogie plays an escaped murderer who holds a group of helpless travelers hostage until he can make his escape across the border. It's a rarely released film and one well worth seeing if only for Bogie. Globe Northampton

Philadelphia Story (1940)
"This glossy cocktail comedy, not without its serious points, stands out as by far the most adult and successful film of its type. Adapted by Donald Ogden Stewart from the play by Philip Barry, it stars Katherine Hepburn in her stage role as Tracy Lord the idle rich heiress with the wrong kind of standards; Cary Grant as C.K. Dexter Haven, her ex-husband, James Stewart as Macaulay Connor, her would-be next." Campus Cinema

Based on Herman Hesse novel. It's the story of a young Brahmin in search of truth and knowledge. Beautifully photographed and fine musical score. Mountain Farms Mall

Slaughterhouse Five
The very successful novel by Kurt Vonnegut, turned into the not so successful film. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, Feb. 8 at 7, 9, 11.

Sleeper
Allen is the writer, director and star of this new film which finds him awakening in the year 2173 after being frozen for 200 years when an operation for an ulcer went amiss. The futuristic satire is full of the usual Allen sight gags and slapstick. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Sounder (1972)
A moving story about a family of black sharecroppers in the Deep South during the Depression. The film shockingly exposes the ignorance and hatred of white society, that was so prevalent. Beautiful photography as well as Oscar nominated performances by Cicely Tyson and Paul Winfield, make for a memorable experience. Sound track by Taj Mahal. Sage Hall Smith College, Sat., Feb. 9, at 7:30 and 9:30

The Sting
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the Depression. It's an authentic look into the thirties with a lot of good era music thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Stolen Kisses (1968)
The film by Francois Truffaut, starring Jean Pierre Leaud, the young boy of 400 Blows, grown up. It's the story of a young man just out of the army, who is eager to begin life, but isn't sure in what direction he should head. Wonderfully impromtu acting as well as Truffauts warm feelings for people, make for an unforgettable viewing experience. Sponsored by the Amherst Film Co-op, Merrill Science Center Amherst College

Thousand Clowns (1965)
Jason Robards plays the part of a non-conformist ex-television screenplay writer, living in New York with his nephew. As well as battling the Child Welfare Bureau, who threaten to take his nephew from him. He must battle the absurdity of life in the city merely to keep his sanity. A film well worth viewing if only for Robards clownish wise cracks and impossible logic. Campus Cineams

Three Stooges Film Festival
Five Three Stooges Films, featuring the original Curly will be shown Saturday, Feb. 9, in Mahar Auditorium. The films are: Men in Black, Pardon My Scotch, Horses Collars, Hoi Polloi, and Restless Nights

What's Up Doc (1972)
This is Peter Bogdanovichs attempt to recapture the success of the screwball comedies of the thirties, but it doesn't quite make it. Its resemblance to Howard Hawks "Bringing up Baby" is obvious, but Ryan O'Neal and Barbara Streisand cannot imitate Grant and Hepburn. There are many sub-plots and a lot of action, but little real comedy. Playing at the S.U.B. Feb. 14, along with "Hollywood in the 30's.

SHOOT THE CRAP! It was a hectic money-mad scene at Las Vegas Night and the (play) money changed hands in a hurry.

Odd and even starts today

BOSTON (AP) — Motorists whose license plates end in odd numbers were expected to pull up to gasoline pumps this morning as Massachusettts embarked on a voluntary gasoline rationing program. Drivers whose plates end in even numbers are asked to stay away until Tuesday.

The plan, announced by Gov. Francis W. Sargent last week. calls for the alternate-day gasoline sales depending on license plate numbers, a minimum $3 purchase and color-coded flags to indicate whether a station is pumping gas.

A green flag indicates gas is available to eligible motorists, a yellow flag means gas is available only to emergency and commercial vehicles and a red flag indicates no gas is available.

Out-of-state vehicles, except those operated by resident students and commuters, and vehicles operated by salesmen and physicians are exempt from the voluntary regulations. Emergency and commercial vehicles are also exempt.

Verani said Friday the state will be watching the effectiveness of the plan. He said Sargent is prepared, if necessary, to file fair practices legislation aimed at abuses, such as favoritism for regular customers.

There will be no blast of trumpets and no red carpet when the People's Market makes its debut of the semester today.

There will be a whole lot of people, though, who have anxiously awaited this grand opening.

But what is the People's Market, you say?

Well, according to Buffy Weissman, one of the coordinators, the idea behind the market is to provide the best prices possible, and a friendly atmosphere very different than that of a supermarket.

The Market is two small rooms on the second floor of the Student Union building, behind the Cape Cod Lounge.

It is a non-profit organization based on the cooperative system, staffed by students for students.

Mark-ups are made according to an approximation of upcoming expenses, and money left after the usual bills are paid goes towards covering the expenses of the people who work there, and maybe, with luck, towards a new refrigerator.

Most of the produce and dairy products will be there today, some will not drift in till the end of the week.

The Market's hours are Mon.-Fri. 9:30-5:30 and Sat. 12-5.

P.S. Volunteers are needed!

UMass woman graduates from ROTC

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Pat Wojtas graduated a little differently than any other woman in the history of Massachusetts.

Ms. Wojtas, in commissioning ceremonies held Saturday in Dickinson Hall, became the first woman to graduate from ROTC in the history of the Commonwealth. When she entered as a freshman there were four other girls with her, she said. "The other three dropped out after a while, she said, but now there are thirteen women in the ROTC program."

Also at the commissioning was former chancellor Oswald Tippo. Tippo, who presented the commissioning address, is now a Commonwealth Professor of Botany at UMass.

Frank Wojtas, Pat's father said that his daughter's decision to join ROTC came as no surprise to him.

"She does pretty much what she wants anyway, he said, and if this is what she wanted--good." Wojtas, himself an Air Force veteran, is a farmer in Chelmsford.

Ms. Wojtas, who is also a part-time gasoline station attendant in Chelmsford, said that she went through the "same thing any guy would in his four years."

"People were getting out of school with no jobs, she said and ROTC seemed to pay well." She will receive over $600 a month as a Second Lieutenant.

Ms. Wojtas in speaking about the presence of ROTC on college campuses said "people should have the chance to take ROTC courses--no one is forcing them to take any courses."

On March 17, Ms. Wojtas will enter active duty at Kessler Air Force Base in Mississippi, attending the Air Force Communications Officer School.

Tippo, who was introduced to the audience by Colonel Paul H. Fisher as "one of our strong supporters throughout the years", spoke of the days when he was "in the cavalry," at the Massachusetts School of Agriculture, and game a brief history of ROTC on the UMass campus.

Getting in on the fund

By SHARON HUGHES

Money from the largest scholarship fund in the history of Western Massachusetts may not be available to most UMass students.

The decision depends on how the trustees of the fund interpret the intention of the man who established the fund in his will. Did he mean to include nine month residents of western Mass. as scholarship recipients?

The $3,000,000 scholarship fund has been left by a Russian born doctor who practiced medicine in the Springfield area, it was announced Friday by the Third National Bank of Hampden County, which was named trustee.

Dr. James Z. Naurison designated in his will that more than $150,000 in college scholarships be given each year to worthy men and women in Western Massachusetts and Enfield and Suffield, Conn.", said President of the bank Wilson Brunel.

Dr. Naurison, a cardiologist, was born in Kiev, Russia, on Feb. 12, 1888. He came to America in 1891 and graduated from the Tufts Medical School.

The will states, "My reason for confining these scholarships to residents of the area enumerated is that most of the patients whom I have treated in my practice of medicine have come from these areas," bank officials said.

He was a physician at many hospitals in this area including Mercy in Springfield; Wing Memorial in Palmer, Mary Lane in Ware and the Monson State Hospital.

Students may claim the town they live in while attending college as their legal residence for voting purposes. However, Brunel said yesterday the bank doesn't know if students who aren't permanent residents of this area will be eligible for a scholarship. The decision, he said will be made by the bank's Trust Department which is managing the fund.

According to the law, when details of a will are vague, the trustees have the power to interpret the will, said UMass Attorney for Students Richard S. Howland. They must decide what the intent of the donor was when he drew up the will, then carry out his wishes.

"Naurison's intention was to help out those families who made him a wealthy man by returning the money to him," Brunel said.

If the trustees make the decision, they may seek a court ruling or an outsider who thinks he has standing can sue the court for a court opinion, Howland said.

The maker of a will can stipulate requirements (including residency) for the recipients Howland said, as long as the requirements are within their constitutional limits.

The will states that scholarships should average between $500 and $1000 and no scholarship be less than $250, bank officials said.

Application forms will be sent to the 80 Western Mass. and Suffield and Enfield, Conn. high schools and college by Feb. 18, the bank said. Applications will also be available at the main branch in Springfield in care of the Trust Department.

The Trust Department will select recipients on the basis of need and academic standing, according to Brunel. Residents of Hampden, Franklin, Hampshire and Berkshire counties plus those Connecticut towns are eligible to apply.

Naurison was a fellow of the American College of Physicians, Academy International of Medicine, American College of Chest Physicians and the American Geriatrics Society. He was also the author of two volumes on medicine.

Five-college astronomy is looking up

By MARSHA VENUTI

The next step in the present endeavor to improve the Five-College astronomy department will be the construction of a millimeter wave radio telescope that will be the country's most sensitive in its frequency range.

Professor G. Richard Huguenin, director of the Five-College Radio Astronomy Observatory which was established in 1969, is the principal investigator for the new facility.

"When completed this will be the largest facility of its kind in the country and will make the University of Massachusetts one of the most important university radio astronomy centers in the U.S.," Huguenin said.

The telescope will be built by students and faculty and will be located at the site of the Five-College Radio Astronomy Observatory in the Quabbin Reservation. Only the antenna system will be built outside the Five-College department. It will be built outside the Five-College department. It will be built by the Electronics Space Systems Corp. of Concord, Massachusetts.

The National Science Foundation has announced an initial grant of $252,000 for the first year of the project. total federal funding is expected to be $750,000 over the next three years, with matching support from the five colleges. UMass aid is expected to reach $400,000, including salaries and equipment, according to Huguenin.

Huguenin said that although it will take three years for the telescope to become fully operational, it will be in use after about two years.

"We have just gotten the money and are busy with the plans," Huguenin said in a Collegian interview. "We have started to build in the lab but we'll wait until spring before we begin work on the site." He said that more than half of the project is building electronics.

Huguenin explained that he came out to UMass with a group of engineers from Harvard in 1968 with the understanding that they would set up an observatory which would improve the Five-College astronomy department. They started to build in 1969 and the observatory went into operation in 1970, he said.

"The millimeter wave radio telescope is the next step to improve the department," Huguenin said. "This facility will exploit the new developments in astronomy that are the most exciting right now."

Hugeunin said that there are two main areas which will be opened up to Five-College students by the new telescope. He said that they will be able to study how stars are formed, and how complicated organic molecules which are "the precursors of life" are formed.

"Normally, matter in space was believed to be thin and uninteresting," Huguenin said. "But now there is evidence that there are regions in space where matter is congregating. With the telescope we will be able to study these areas," he said.

Millimeter wave lengths are the shortest of the radio spectrum and will be used to detect the faint signals of interstellar molecules. When these molecules are bombarded by radiation from stars they radiate waves at characteristic frequencies that can be detected with radio telescopes.

One component of the telescope will be a series of maser receivers to be developed by Professor K. Sigfrid Yngvesson and the Quantum Electronics Group at the UMass Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering. Yngvesson began development of a super-sensitive maser design for use with short wavelength radio in 1971 at UMass, with support from the National Science Foundation.

Yoga: window from within

By E. PATRICK McQUAID

Amid the mass confusion and pele-mele chaos of our present day, crisis-ridden world, Veronica Narzilli has found a place where she can retreat to "serene and gentle quiescence": Within.

"Some people ask me all the time, "Do you really get high doing it?" states Veronica.

"They don't understand that it's a way of life..it's a different kind of high. A lot of people get high playing tennis," she continues, "or jogging in the morning..Like the long distance runner; he was the last man and he was the first man. He was aware of his position; his head was in a good direction."

A senior transfer student, Veronica first learned of Yoga while studying English at Worcester State College where it was being offered as a Phys Ed class. Continuing her studies on a night school basis, her interests led to taking other related courses such as Ballet and Modern Dance.

Last semester Veronica conducted her first class in Yoga and both she and her students found it to be quite rewarding. Asking her what she tries to relate to her pupils, Veronica replied:

"It depends on what their energy is geared to. I can only show you what's there to be shown. There are all kinds of possibilities."

Yoga is both a science and an art. The technological viewpoint involves physical mastery of the body and controlled, disciplined breathing. This is known as Hatha Yoga.

A more serious and complicated study of Yoga involves solemn meditation: self mastery, mind over matter, and total awareness.

Although originating in the East, Yoga is quite applicable to anyone who wishes to examine his inner self regardless of creed or nationality. It is, as Veronica put it, "Beyond ritual religion; it doesn't commit you to an established way of thought. You can believe in something without calling it religion."

In short, Yoga is spiritual freedom.

Southwest discusses night spot

By STEVE TETREAULT
MDC Staff

A memorandum released recently by John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, proposed the establishment of a rathskellar operation in Southwest.

The memo, sent to Dr. John Hunt, SW Director, & Larry St. Cyr, President of the Southwest Assembly, stated, "The relative remoteness of the Southwest Area to the Town Of Amherst and to the rest of the campus, together with its large body of population, justifies the rathskellar concept in this area and its ability to support this type of operation."

In January, 1973, 450 Southwest students took part in a marketing study to determine the feasibility of a nightspot in the area. Ninety-eight percent indicated that they would support such an operation.

The study further recommends that the nightspot be operated by Campus Center Food Services, Beverage Division, since "The Campus Center Food Service has had several years of experience in the successful operation of this type of beverage facility and is the most suited agency for the planning operation of an additional facility on campus."

The Campus Center would pay $30,000 yearly rent to Residence Hall Food Services for the use of parts of Hampden Dining Commons, which is partially vacant at present.

A further $15,000 would be budgeted for entertainment, under the advisement of a Southwest Student Board.

According to the memo, the rathskellar operation would be similar in price structure to the Blue Wall, but would serve beer and wine only.

SGA meet for reorganization

By MARSHA VENUTI

Two of a series of meetings to reorganize the constitution of the Student Government Association were held Saturday and Sunday. The aim is to make the SGA into a better organization more capable of handling the problems of the student body.

High upon the list of issues to be discussed by the committee is ways to increase student participation in governance.

Other issues to be discussed will include minority and women representation, merger of the undergraduate and graduate senates, election of a student trustee representing this new group, the powers of the presidency and senate and area governments, and the applicability of a labor union model for the SGA.

Students representing both the undergraduates and graduates attended the meetings. The series of meetings is expected to end in March, according to SGA president Nick Apostola, at which time the committee will present their proposal(s) to the entire student body for discussion.

What a deal!

By MICHAEL E. C. GERY

The extraordinary combination of two royal straight flushes in one deal occurred late Friday night during a poker game held in Thatcher Hall. Unofficial odds against such a combination are over 422 billion to one.

Jim Dello-Russo, a Brown University student, won the hand with a royal flush in spades (10-J-Q-K-A). It is the best possible poker hand that can be drawn from a 52-card deck.

UMass student Peter Kowalski lost to Dello-Russo since his royal flush was in diamonds.

Senior Chess Master Norman Weinstein took on 33 opponents simultaneously in an exhibition match in the Campus Center yesterday. He lost to only one opponent.

That was to junior Mark Andreoli, a physical ducation major who has been playing chess for three years. Andreoli, pushing black, played a Sicilian defense until the 15th move when he "started to ad-lib."

Norman Weinstein

It was sweet victory for Andreoli who considers Weinstein one of the nation's top five chess players. "I sort of idolize him," Andreoli said after his win.

He said Weinstein could defeat him with relatively little trouble in a head-on match.

There were four draws. Those were to freshman math major Milt Watt; Patrick Mullen, a sophomore philosophy major; Peter Feeney, a graduate student in public health; and Michael Majka, who works in Ware.

The 23-year old Weinstein has been competing in U.S. Chess Federation tournaments for ten years and recently won the U.S. Chess Open competition, above seven hundred other entries.

The Senior Master has been making his living playing chess since he received his Master's degree in Math from Brandeis University. Weinstein plays one or two exhibition matches weekly and finds it exhausting. The 5'10", 175 pound, sports figure exercises to stay in shape.

The touring that Weinstein makes his living by helps keep him in practice so he can hope to advance his tenth ranked standing in the country. Weinstein, who achieved the level of Master at age sixteen, has 2500 U.S. Chess Federation points and is one of the twenty-five Senior Masters in the United States.

A resident of Alston, Mass., he finds that he spends most of his time in cities where he attends tournaments or gives exhibitions at schools.

To exemplify what publicity could do for the sport, Weinstein said that the membership of the U.S. Chess Federation doubled when Bobby Fischer received notariaty with his tempermental antics.

Let's hear it for frozen knuckles

By BONNIE ASSELIN

The winter night drudgeries of snow sculpture making proved lucrative for Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity and Kirk Grim.

They each won a $200 first prize donated by the Gillette Company in this year's Winter Carnival Snow Sculpture Contest. Phi Sigma Kappa's sculpture entitled, "The Hot One," won in the Greek category and Grim's, "Sportsman of the Year," won in the residential or commuter category.

The Greek Council Activities Committee with chairman Bob Kinkead sponsored the event with the assistance of the Gillette Company. The sculptures under the theme, "The World of Sports," were judged Saturday.

The Greek Council awarded a 100 second prize in their division to "Sammy on Ice, Double Edge Blades," a sculpture by Sigma Alpha Mu Fraternity. Third place, a trophy, went to Iota Gamma Upsilon Sorority for their sculpture, "Stubble Stopper." The other winners will also receive trophies provided by the Greek Council in addition to their cash prizes.

An account of the sights and sounds at the judging scenes:

"Notice the forward motion," stressed Barry Sherman and Jim McDonough of Phi Sigma Kappa to the judges. The two were largely responsible for making their "secretariat", a winning horse. It's helmeted driver, wearing red and green lunged forward in the racing tradition. Judges walked slowly around in a small arena, surveying the horse, frozen in a gallop.

Greg Forbush, the Gillette Company representative, expressed appreciation. "I'm very pleased with the turnout, the enthusiasm...the frozen knuckles."

In all, 20 Greeks and independents participated in the contest. There were Butterfield's eskimo ice-fishing, Chadbourne's ski jump and Sigma Phi Epsilon's match between right guard and brand x, "Protect Yourself".

Hit me!

All that was missing were the can-can dancers swinging their skirts through the smoke-filled room and a shoot-out over a poker game.

Other than that, Saturday's Las Vegas night lacked nothing.

Most of the players were fighting the odds at the black-jack tables. One man lost $10,000 on the flip of a ten which "should have" been an eight. He threw his cards disgustingly as if the money were worth its face value.

In one corner of the Campus Center Auditorium a woman placed $5,000 on black and won. In back of the roulette wheel, on the wall, were posters saying "If Your Check Bounces..So Will You," and "Check All Dice and Firearms Here."

On stage a piano player honkey-tonked ragtime tunes that would have sent Wyatt Earp's spurs clinckin'. Doc Holiday would have been disappointed; there was no alcohol.

Hiding behind a ten and a five was Student Senate President David Booker. He played the part of a crooked town politician very well, insisting it was "too early" to tell how he was doing.

At the night's end, many players left "poorer" than they had arrived, learning a lesson, perhaps, with play money.

Mideast fighting continues

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian and Israeli artillery batteries blazed away at each other on the Golan Heights again Sunday, but Israel said Russia will try to persuade Syria to meet Tel Aviv's main conditions for negotiating a troop separation agreement along the tense front.

These conditions are a list of Israeli POWs held by Syria and permission for the International Red Cross to visit them.

The Israeli announcement marked the first time that Israel has attributed an active role to Moscow in efforts to free the more than 100 Israeli soldiers captured in the October war.

The Tel Aviv command said four Israeli soldiers were wounded in the fresh fighting along the heights. But the U.N. Emergency Force said all was quiet on both sides of the Suez Canal, and that Israel and Egypt were pulling out as scheduled.

At the same time, Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy launched a savage verbal attack on other Arab leaders he said obstruct Arab unity. He said they should be swept aside by revolution.

Khadafy didn't name those he had in mind, but said Libya was ready to arm and train revolutionary fighters needed to overthrow leaderships in Tunisia, Egypt and Algeria opposed to Arab unity.

Khadafy's attempts to merge his nation with Egypt and Tunisia have bogged down. Syria said the fighting on the Golan Heights lasted 75 minutes.

The Syrian communique was the first since Tuesday, when some of the heaviest fighting since the October war came to a stop.

The communique said the artillery engagement broke out along the northern sector of the 40-mile cease-fire line.

"Our positions silenced enemy sources of fire and in many areas of the fighting and dealt strong blows to three enemy positions in the northern sector," it said.

The communique made no mention of casualties.

In Tel Aviv, the military command said Arab guerrillas crossed into Israel from Lebanon Saturday and killed an Israeli girl in a bazooka attack on a small truck.

The driver of the van, an Israeli soldier, was wounded, the command said.

The girl was the first Israeli civilian killed in more than two years. Arab guerillas killed an American nurse in an ambush in the occupied Gaza Strip in January 1972.

In Jerusalem, Premier Golda Meir canceled her appointments because she was not feeling well, aides said.

Congress juggles pay raise

By EDMOND Le BRETON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an election year when constituents are testy with economic woes, Congress is juggling a hot potato; a hefty pay raise that will come its way unless the lawmakers themselves block it.

Several resolutions to do that have been introduced in both the House and Senate.

The House resolutions were referred to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which has shown no eagerness to consider them and report, despite prodding by some of its members.

In the Senate, there appears to be more inclination to bring the matter to a vote in the full chamber. And there are predictions that if that happens, the pay raise will be killed.

There is a time limit. The recommendation for the raises, 7½ per cent a year for each of the next three years for members of Congress, judges and high officials of the executive branch, was included in President Nixon's budget. They go into effect in 30 days from Feb. 4, when the budget was submitted, unless either house adopts a disapproving resolution.

Congress, meanwhile, is in recess. The House goes back to work Wednesday, the Senate Feb. 18.

The system by which Congress can get a pay raise without voting for it was inaugurated in 1969 by the Federal Salaries Act. It provides for a commission to recommend every four years adjustments in the pay of the legislators and other officials. If the President agrees, he includes the raises in his budget and they become effective unless Congress says no.

Propmnents of the law said it takes pay raises out of politics. Opponents called it a cop-out by Congress.

The argument is now raging again.

Rep. David W. Dennis, R- Ind., recently told his colleagues: "Whether members think there should be a raise or not, Mr. Speaker, I would think ordinary decency and courage would suggest that we should vote."

Pictures forming of Kent State

By NEIL BIBLER
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — Witnesses who have testified in the federal grand jury probe of the 1970 Kent State University shootings say they feel sure it will produce a definitive picture of how and why the shootings occurred.

Thus far, however, public comment by witnesses during 28 days of investigation has provided only hints.

One sketch comes from Ohio National Guardsmen who fired at the missle-hurling crowd of student antiwar demonstrators. The Guardsmen have refused to testify on grounds they might incriminate themselves.

Another picture piece comes from the students, some of them crippled for life, who feel the troopers fired without adequate provocation.

Both pictures are being scrutinized by jurors. Witnesses say the probe has been comprehensive, fair and more thorough than the first Ohio state grand jury examination in 1970 and presidential commission hearings the same year.

The current study ended its first phase last Friday and is scheduled to resume Feb. 25 with more witnesses. One Justice Department official says it should be a short second round.

The jury numbers 22, down one from when it convened Dec. 18. A woman was excused for health reasons.

The probe was ordered by the Justice Department late last year as a reversal of a 1971 decision by then-Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell.

The jurors were told to determine whether criminal actions were involved in the incident that capped four days of student protest against U.S. military involvement in Cambodia. They also were told to decide whether indictments should be returned.

Revolt in India brings down state govt.

By MYRON L. BELKIND
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) - Mob politics has pushed one of India's state governments out of power for the first time, raising ominous questions in a land that considers itself a showcase for democracy.

Changes in Indian governments always had grown out of the ballot box or accepted parliamentary procedures since this nation of 570 million won independence from Britain in 1947.

But this weekend Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's central government had to step in and take over Gujarat State in central India because of a public revolt that brought down the elected government.

Students, teachers and workers combined in a month-long upsurge that began as a protest against rising prices and food shortages, particularly in the state capital of Ahmedabad 480 miles southwest of New Delhi.

Curfews, firings by police into rioting mobs, even the deployment of the army and promises of more food failed to calm the street crowds.

The mobs demanded the resignation of the state government, which was run by Mrs. Gandhi's Congress party. The government, led by Chimanbhai Patel, tried to hold on. But it resigned Saturday evening after four weeks of rioting and the deaths of at least 50 persons.

The question being asked in New Delhi is, could Mrs. Gandhi's national government also be knocked down by popular unrest.

Labor agitation and violence are growing around the country as unions step up demands for raises to offset higher food prices. Consumers - the poor and the not-so-poor - are demonstrating against shortages of essential commodities, including food grains, cooking oils, kerosene and coal.

At this point, the possibility of national unrest strong enough to bring down Mrs. Gandhi is considered remote. She still enjoys popularity that no other political leader can match.

But her position as party and government leader is at stake in elections late February in Uttar Pradesh, India's largest state, and in Orissa.

If the prime minister is victorious, her position as party leader would be strengthened and she undoubtedly would reshape her own party and government to give it a new public image.

However, if her party loses or suffers major setbacks at the state polls, as some pollsters predict, Mrs. Gandhi could find herself the target of public pressures even though national elections are not until 1976.

Hearst fiance pleads for her safety

By WILLIAM HELTON
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The fiance of kidnaped newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst has pledged that neither he nor his bride-to-be will testify against the kidnapers if she is returned safely.

"If Patty is unarmed, neither Patty nor myself will be involved in the case in any way after that," Steven Weed, 26, told newspersons Saturday night from the porch of the Hearst's 22-room mansion in Hillsborough, 15 miles south of San Francisco.

Weed, who had been released from the hospital earlier in the day, was still black and blue from a beating the kidnapers gave him last Monday night before they carried Miss Hearst, 19, kicking and screaming from her Berkeley apartment.

An underground group called the Symbionese Liberation Army claimed in a letter to a Berkeley radio station on Thursday that it had kidnaped the heiress. It said Miss Hearst was alive and well and promised further communications.

Of his promise not to prosecute, Weed said:

"And I hope the leadership of the Symbionese Army, I hope they'll believe that for the following reason: If it turns out that she isn't released unharmed or if we are forced to testify, I think that would seriously jeopardize any future negotiations of that sort that might have to come up."

Berkeley police information officer Richard Berger said, "You can't force anybody to testify against their will. In such a case, the prosecutor has to pray he has a lot of physical evidence in lieu of testimony."

Meanwhile, Patricia's father, Randolph A. Hearst, said he was at a loss to explain the long delay since the first word from the terrorist group.

"Maybe they just wanted us to sweat it out some more, maybe they want to extend the publicity," said Hearst, who is president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner and chairman of the Hearst Corp.

The letter from the terrorists termed Hearst "a corporate enemy of the people" and said Patricia was being held as "a prisoner of war."

Weed said:

"I just hope the Symbionese Liberation Army..realize the Hearst family has only a limited ability to effect any political demands that might be made...

Moves made to get truckers rolling

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The campaign to get independent truckers back on the roads and to get badly needed supplies rolling again was intensified on Sunday.

Throughout the nation, at truck stops and at hastily called meetings, truckers voted whether to accept a government settlement proposal that would allow freight rate increases to offset higher fuel costs.

There were pockets of resistance among driver-owners who wanted to hold out for a rollback in diesel prices, but leaders of the independents urged them to get back to work.

Industries hard hit by layoffs - which totalled more than 100,000 during the height of the shutdown - prepared to call their employes back to work.

Meat and produce shippers sent convoys of trucks rolling to areas where shortages had been building up since the strike Jan. 31.

A spokesman in the office of W. J. Usery Jr., President Nixon's labor relations trouble shooter, aid: "Apparently this thing the settlement is working." He said trucks were beginning to roll and there were more and more reports of plants getting ready to reopen.

Schanno, Inc., of Minneapolis-St. Paul, organized three caravans. Two of them headed for the East Coast and another went West.

"My drivers feel safer with a convoy and traveling in daylight is safer too," said Paul Schanno, owner of the company which shut down last Wednesday. He said he resumed operations because many of his drivers wanted to work and because meat markets needed meat.

Richard Butler of Roslindale, Mass., a spokesman for about 200 truckers meeting in the Bay State to decide whether to end their strike, said: "Maybe some of the guys have gone back to work, but they're finding out pretty quickly that the offer is no good."

Authorities in Pennsylvania - one of the areas hardest hit by the shutdown over fuel prices and freight rates - said truck traffic Sunday was "near normal." The number of National Guardsmen on duty was reduced from 3,500 to 1,500, and officials said there were only a handful of incidents of trouble overnight.

The settlement reached in Washington, D.C., Thursday guarantees truckers all the fuel they need and provides for Sunday fuel sales. It also allows them to charge more for the cargo they carry to compensate for past diesel price increases and promises future rate hikes so they can pass along rising costs.

In other weekend developments:

-About 350 independent truckers met in Milwaukee on Saturday and voted to endorse the government's proposals - but said they wouldn't return to work until they knew the results of similar meetings elsewhere in the nation.

-A toll-free number to enable truckers to register their complaints begins operation Monday.

-Transportation Secretary Claude S. Brinegar said Saturday that reports being compiled by the government showed truck traffic in Indiana, Illinois and Michigan was about 80 or 90 per cent of normal.

British coal miners strike

By COLIN FROST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Britain's coal miners formally walked off the job Sunday in a strike that added venom to a bitter election battle and further crippled the nation's staggering economy.

Their walkout marked a direct challenge to Prime Minister Edward Heath's attempt to maintain his anti-inflation wage controls. Industrialists say it will reduce vital manufacturing industries to a two-day or even a one-day work week.

Most industries already have been reduced to three days of work a week because miners refused to work overtime. Coal powers the manufacture of 70 per cent of Britain's electricity, and the refusal to work overtime has reduced supplies drastically.

Heath called the election Thursday, more than a year before his full five-year term expires, setting a vote for Feb. 28. The miners rejected his plea to postpone the strike during the campaign.

The basic issue plugged by Heath's Conservative party is: Who runs the country, the elected government or the 280,000 miners and their unions.

The debate has been widened — and embittered — by the Conservative claim that leftists in the miners' union, among them Moscow-aligned Communists, are bent on destroying British democracy.

The opposition Labor party, led by former Prime Minister Harold Wilson and based on support from the union rank and file, says it would settle and get Britain back to work. It has disputed the Conservative charges of "Reds under the bed" and says the real issue is a decent living for the miners.

Heath has maintained he cannot offer more than a $5.70 a week addition to the basic average miners' pay of $81 a week. More, he insists, would shatter his anti-inflation program. The miners are holding out for $101.50 a week average basic pay.

Public opinion polls show the nation's 40 million voters are generally unsure whose story to buy.

Conservative newspapers forecast Sunday that the Conservative election manifesto due out Monday will seek to change the welfare system under which strikers' families are paid relief.

Payment of social benefits, they said, would depend on unions' paying strike pay. In the British welfare state, men have been able to strike without drastic reduction in family incomes and without depletion of union funds.

The energy crisis

Angry responses...

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England officials, except those in Maine, which has been promised more gasoline, reacted angrily to the fuel redistribution plan announced by the Federal Engergy Office FEO.

John Verani, Massachusetts consumer affairs secretary, called the redistribution decision "ridiculous." "It seems the FEO's date system is grossly deficient of Energy Chief William Simon comes up with the conclusion he has reached that Massachusetts is better off than the 12 states selected for more gasoline," he said.

Maine was the only New England state among 12 which will receive more gasoline this month, the FEO aanounced Saturday. The District of Columbia will also receive more fuel and 10 other states will receive less gasoline than they were originally allocated.

The plan is merely a redistribution of existing supplies, Simon said, and will not increase the overall supply.

New England leaders blasted the use of oil company figures in reaching the redistribution decision.

"The problem seems to be that the FEO officials are relying on an inadequate reporting system based upon information solely from the oil companies rather than the pragmatic evidence of the gasoline shortage in Massachusetts," Verani said. He pointed to longer lines at gasoline stations, more closed stations and shorter station hours as the "pragmatic evidence."

Connecticut Gov. Thomas J. Meskill aid he was outraged that his state was not included in the redistribution. "The people of Connecticut need gasoline now. Our motorists are fed up with long waits for gasoline...I'm sick of all the talk but no action from Washington."

Vermont Republican Rep. Richard W. Mallary sent a telegram to Simon after the decision was announced, protesting that "Vermont and New England are facing intolerable gasoline shortages." Mallary asked Simon to allocate more gasoline to the five other New England states.

In Maine, officials reacted favorably to news they would receive more gasoline in February than they were originally allocated.

Eric P. Stauffer, an aide to Maine Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis, said panic buying has not been the rule in that state. "But there has been a situation where, toward the end of the month, gas stations have run out of fuel, and don't have enough to supply essential services."

Energy officials say only Maine of the six New England states has been receiving disproportionately less gasoline.

Nationwide, states are receiving this month an average of 82 per cent of last February's gasoline allocations, according to Hugh Saussy, deputy New England regional administrator of the energy office. Figures released Friday show the New England average is 83 per cent.

Massachusetts is receiving 83 per cent, Connecticut 84 per cent, New Hampshire 85 per cent, Rhode Island 85 per cent, Vermont 84 per cent, and Maine 79 per cent, Saussy said.

Energy officials acknowledged that the oil company figures might not be accurate.

"We'll be auditing the oil industry to see if the data is correct," said John Sawhill, FEO deputy administrator. "We think the system will improve with each month."

Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent, saying he was upset with the energy office's decision, said he would request another meeting with federal representatives this week. Sargent said he received a verbal commitment for more gasoline for New England in a meeting with Simon last week.

Several members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation expressed their displeasure with the redistribution plan.

Rep. Paul W. Cronin, R-Mass., termed the move "bureaucratic bungling at its worst."

Rep. Torbert MacDonald, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Communications and Power, said, "I will go to work on this Monday, and if Simon cannot explain why he has taken adverse action against the already beseiged motorists of Massachusetts, I intend to call him before my subcommittee."

But Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, termed the decision "the right first step toward solving the spot supply problem."

The shift in supply, Muskie said in a statement, was "like taking from the rich and giving to the poor. That's what the allocation program was designed to do. It was designed to give the federal government the power to move stocks of gasoline from areas which were well off to areas where the need was greatest."

The gas plan

BOSTON (AP) — Here are the provisions of the voluntary gasoine rationing plan that goes into effect in Massachusetts Monday:

—Cars with license plates ending in an odd number may buy gasoline Monday and on all subsequent odd-numbered calendar days except Sunday, when stations are closed.

Those with even-numbered plates may buy on Tuesday and the following even-numbered dates.

—The 31st day of the month will be a free-for-all when anyone may buy. March 31 is the first of those.

—Stations with gasoline to sell should display a green flag. Those with fuel only for emergency vehicles will show a yellow flag. Closed stations will show a red flag.

—No purchase of less than $3 should be allowed except to emergency vehicles, small cars or motorcycles, but this is up to the dealers' discretion.

Those exempted from the plan include:

—Emergency vehicles. These are police, ambulance, fire, snow removal and sanitations vehicles.

—Commercial vehicles. These are vehicles with license plates reading Taxi, School, Bus or Farm, or beginning with the letters A, B or C.

—Salesmen. Those who need their cars for purposes other than commuting to an office and who have less than a half tank of gasoline. It is up to the dealer to determine who qualifies. Indentification is required; a certified letter from the employer is suggested.

—Out-of-state vehicles. Those passing through the state on business or pleasure. This does not include resident students or those who commute to work or school in Massachusetts.

—Vehicles used for medical purposes.

...And pleased responses

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

State officials are predictably pleased or outraged with the new gasoline redistribution system, depending on whether their areas are slated to get more or less fuel.

Democratic Gov. Daniel Walker of Illinois, one of the states which will get more gasoline, said the redistribution would ease the immediate crisis and showed that "the federal energy office has recognized what has been obvious to the rest of us — Chicago has been shortchanged on its gasoline allotment."

Gov. Patrick Lucey of Wisconsin, one of the states where gasoline supplies will be cut, said he had told his energy coordinator to find out just what the effect of the redistribution will be.

"Wisconsin must be treated fairly in gasoline allocations," the Democratic governor said. "We will willingly do our share but we will not sit quietly if conservation efforts in Wisconsin are rewarded by diversion of our share to others."

Federal energy chief William E. Simon announced Saturday that the redistribution scheme was aimed at providing a better balance of supplies. "The original unadjusted allocation scheme had supplies going into some well-supplied areas, while other areas were in greater need," he said.

A spokesman for the Federal Energy Office said the redistribution would mean that the areas involved should receive an amount closer to their original allocations. He said some states with shortages were not included in the redistribution system because they were receiving the amount of gasoline originally allocated to them.

Twelve states and the District of Columbia will get additional gasoline under the new plan; 10 states will get less.

Details of exactly how much gasoline is involved were not available.

Those receiving more are: Arkansas, Delaware, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, Maine, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina, Texas, Virginia and Tennessee.

Those receiving less are: Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Officials of several Northeast states hard hit by the gasoline shortage complained that they would not receive more.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts, one of several states where a voluntary rationing program goes into effect Monday — said he would request a meeting with federal officials to ask again for more gasoline. He said Simon's announcement "clearly brings into question the accuracy of the federal government's figures" on shortages.

Connecticut Gov. Thomas J. Meskill commented: "The people of Connecticut need gasoline now...I'm sick of all the talk but no action from Washington."

Meskill and Sargent, both Republicans, said Simon had promised them last week that their states would get more gasoline.

Slick rebuttals from oil industries

By PETER ARNETT

AP Special Correspondent

From the drilling rig to the corner service station pump, the oil industry is under attack.

And the criticism comes from all sides: federal and state government, congressmen, consumers.

This assault has thrown the oil companies on the defensive. They are trying to fight back with extensive newspaper advertising and press conferences.

Who is right. Here, point by point, are some of the salient arguments in the case against the industry, and the rebuttals:

Charge: There is actually no oil shortage. The petroleum industry contrived it to drive up oil prices and gain windfall profits.

One of the things critics point to as evidence in New York Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz's charge against four oil companies, all members of the Royal Dutch Shell group. They were charged in New York State Supreme Court with diverting and holding secretly in storage one million barrels of No. 2 heating oil meant for New York area homeowners. At the same time, according to the complaint, Shell "was telling its New York customers that it could not meet its requirements because it did not have enough oil." Lefkowitz said that Shell wanted to hang onto the oil until it could sell it for "unconscionable and exhorbitant prices."

Rebuttal: There is indeed a genuine oil shortage. Federal Energy Office chief William E. Simon has released statistics showing crude imports down to 5 million barrels a day in late January, from a pre-Arab embargo high of 6.7 million a day in October.

The gasoline shortage during the first quarter of this year will be close to 20 per cent, Simon said.

As far as the charges against Shell in New York were concerned, the president of the company, Harry Bridges, said in Houston: "We have not participated in such a scheme, and we categorically deny this charge."

Charge: The oil industry is deliberately concealing important statistics on crude oil stocks to manipulate prices. The federal government is wholly dependent on unverified industry data for information essential to policy-making.

Sen. John V. Tunney D-Calif., said that federal energy chief Simon "relies on the industry for all his gifures, and has no way of knowing whether the industry is holding back supplies from the market."

Rebuttal: Major oil companies began in January to release basic statistics on stocks in hand. Assistants to Simon claim that industry figures over the years "are a close match to those compiled by the government."

Simon said that the Central Intelligence Agency collects information on the movement of oil and the Commerce Department gets independent data on crude imports.

Charge: The petroleum industry not only failed to foresee the upcoming energy crisis, but brought it on faster by super-selling campaigns.

"While the oil companies were supposed to be preparing for the energy crisis they were dumping at least half as much money into advertising as research, to boost the sale of their individual producrs," said Rep. Charles B. Rangel, D-N.Y.

Rebuttal: "Those of us in the petroleum industry have been telling everyone for years that a serious energy shortage was developing," said the chairman of Texaco Inc,. Maurice Granville. A leading oil industry spokesman, Frank N. Ikard, president of the American Petroleum Institute, admitted that the "industry made one mistake — my misjudging the demand." He added, "But probably more than any single thing, it's the way we Americans live. We are the most extravagant people, energy-wise, that the good Lord ever created."

Charge: Oil industry critics say the American taxpayer is subsidizing the profitable overseas operations of the multinational oil companies. The companies can deduct foreign tax payments from their U.S. tax liabilities, meaning most companies pay little or no taxes. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff charges: "The oil companies are in a conspiracy with the Middle East oil nations to cheat the American public of about $3 billion a year in taxes."

Rebuttal: The chairman of Standard Oil of California, O.N. Miller, said "absolutely not" when asked if the Arab nations' tax policies helped U.S. companies avoid paying U.S. taxes. He said American companies pay Arab taxes on the basis of posted oil prices, generally higher than market prices. He said the industry has pushed to reduce the posted prices.

Charge: The oil industry is profiteering. The gusher of earnings by the oil companies in 1973 included an increase by Exxon over 1972 profits 59 per cent, or $2.4 billion. These were the highest earnings ever reported by an industrial company.

Texaco reported a 45 per cent increase, Gulf Oil 60 per cent. There are moves in Congress for a price rollback and a ceiling on domestic oil prices. President Nixon has proposed a windfall profits tax.

Rebuttal: Exxon chairman J. K. Jamieson protested at a press conference: "We aren't making windfall profits." Industry leaders maintain that a good share of the 1973 profits were from unusual factors: big earning boosts from the dollar devaluation and one-time accounting gains from writing up the value of foreign oil inventories to reflect the sharply increased price of crude.

Means contests AIM election legality

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - Russell Means, an American Indian Movement leader on trial in connection with the occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., has asked for an investigation of the recent tribal election on the Oglala Sioux reservation. Means was narrowly defeated in his bid for president of the tribe.

Mark Banks, the brother of Means' codefendant Dennis Banks, also said Means has spoken with attorneys about contesting the legality of the election last Thursday.

Means was beaten by incumbent President Richard Wilson, who pledged during the campaign to throw AIM leaders off the Pine Ridge Reservation. Unofficial vote totals showed Wilson taking a 179-vote edge.

On Friday, Means asked the Commission of Civil Rights and Community Relations Service of the U.S. Department of Justice at Denver to investigate alleged irregularities in the election.

Means alleged in the request that a ballot box was broken into at Martin, S.D., that white women and ranchers voted in the tribal election in Wanblee, and that 83 votes were cast in Potato Creek when there were only 30 or 40 voters eligible.

The two AIM leaders have said they intend to make their own opening statements when testimony begins Tuesday. The trial will enter its fourth week Monday.

You are what you eat

By ALTON BLAKESLEE
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — What you eat apparently can affect the chemistry of your brain. And any change could perhaps affect appetite, sleep, sexual activity and other behavior, two scientists report.

A steak dinner or a spaghetti dinner thus might have quite different effects, theit findings suggest.

In animal studies, the scientists find, different types of foodstuffs can alter the amount of a powerful chemical, serotonin, involved in the activity of brain nerve cells.

Carbohydrates — meaning sugars and starchy foods like spaghetti — increase the available serotonin.

But lots of protein foods, like a steak or milk, can reduce it, say John B. Fernstrom, Ph.D., and Richard J. Wurtman, M.D., of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, Mass.

Exactly what the effects may be in humans has not been demonstrated. But animal studies by other researchers have shown:

—Cats deprived of brain serotonin become insomniacs. And male and female rats with the reduced brain serotonin levels show exaggerated sexual activity.

—But high levels of brain serotonin make rats more sensitive to pain, more likely to sleep, and also reduce their appetite.

There is other evidence tha in humans serotonin is involved in the brain's state of alertness, a person's mood or motivation, and willingness or interest in doing some task, Dr. Wurtman said in a telephone interview.

He is director of MIT's laboratory of Neuroendocrine Regulation.

Dr. Fernstrom is assistant professor of nutritional biochemistry and metabolism.

They report their studies in the February issue of the publication Scientific American.

Heretofore, they said, it had been thought that the brain was not affected by diet except through chronic malnutrition. Their evidence is that what a person eats may affect brain activity within 20 to 30 minutes.

They have been investigating serotonin, which is a neruotransmitter, a substance produced in a special set of neurons or brain cells. Released into spaces — or synapses — between neurons; serotonin affects and is partly responsible for the flow of information for messages between neurons.

The new findings suggest that food intake can affect the way neurons "sense" bodily states, and help the brain "decide" whether to be hungry or sleepy, for example.

A key element in the manufacture of serotonin is tryptophan, which is one of some 20 amino acids or building blocks of protein.

A steak contains some tryptophan, but not as much of it as some other amino acids that compete for entry into the brain, Drs. Wurtman and Fernstrom explained.

The other amino acids tend to win out, and mot much tryptophan gets into the brain cells.

But carbohydrates, like that in spaghetti, spur the secretion of the hormone insulin, which in turn increases the level of tryptophan in the blood and lowers the blood level of the competing amino acids. The result is an increase in the amount of serotonin in the brain.

The scientists could study the level of serotonin itself in animal brains, but not in the brains of human volunteers following a meal. So to gauge how their findings in animals might apply to humans, they turned to measuring the levels of various amino acids in the bloodstreams of humans and animals.

These blood studies, based on the supposition that the levels of amino acids had a resulting effect on actual serotonin manufacture in the brain, showed a parallel.

Humans drinking a quart of milk protein or a quart of ginger ale carbohydrate showed similar changes in their blood as did rats after high protein or high carbohydrate meals, Dr. Wurtman said.

IT seems, the scientists write, that food consumption may affect brain chemistry, and brain chemistry, in turn, may affect food consumption. It is likely, they add, that other neurotransmitters in the brain may be affected by what we eat and thus to some extent how we behave.

Great deception

By ANDREW GLACE

The energy shortage, long predicted by environmentalists and oil companies, is finally here. But the major question revolves around whether we have exhausted the finite energy resources or the world, or whether in fact the shortages are only at the gas pumps and are engineered by the major companies.

First, although the earth's stores of fossil fuels are finite, they are far from exhausted. In Saudi Arabia alone, estimated to have proven resources of 139 billion barrels, there is enough oil to last another forty years at the present level of consumption. Secondly, the production cutbacks and embargo by the Arab states announced in October and effectively ended in December were not a major contributing factor to the crisis, which began before the embargo and promises to continue unabated now that the embargo has, for all intent and purpose, ended.

The "Seven Sisters" own about 70 per cent of the "free" world oil production and about 50 per cent of the refining capacity. They have assets of over $70 billion, greater than most countries. Not only are they powerful, but as an FTC study put it, "These major firms, which consistently appear to cooperate rather compete in all phases of their operation, have behaved in a similar fashion as would a classical monopolist: they have attempted to increase profits by restricting output."

What are the tactics of the oil companies? One tactic is to neglect import or produce sufficient crude to keep their refineries operating at required levels. This last tactic was the way in which the heating shortage of the 1972-73 winter was contrived. A Senate investigation has established that the oil companies purposely held down their imports at the end of 1972 to assure the shortages and higher prices during the winter. Without these imports, it was impossible for US refineries to operate at a high enough level to meet the rising demand for heating oil. Still another tactic revealed by the FPC was the refusal to pump oil from 167 idle offsure oil leases in the Gulf of Mexico. Lastly, and most importantly for the future, there have been no new refineries built since 1970. No matter when Mideast crude oil begins flowing freely again, the country faces shortages for at least two years.

...the country faces shortages for at least two years...

The question now becomes, why are the oil companies acting in such a manner? Obviously, since the crisis is engineered, they are expecting to profit. And, as we know, they are. Independent oil producers have been largely driven out of business. Pollution standards have been relaxed to allow the use of cheaper, more profitable fuels. Rising costs at the gas pumps are more than offsetting a staggering rise in the cost of foreign oil. Another aspect of rising prices is to make more profitable previously too costly means of securing oil such as through the use of the Alaskan pipeline and shale oil production. There are also competitive advantages for US imperialism in raising prices to the economies of Europe and Japan. It must be remembered that while Mideast oil is nominally Arab, its market is dominated by US trusts who can literally strangle competing economies. This has been reflected in the new stabilization of the dollar and a possible devaluation of the yen.

What we can expect in the near future is: 1) higher prices for goods and services and 2) a period of recession as the economy struggles to readjust itself to a lower rate of growth. Anything manufactured is going to reflect the higher cost of energy. And, in fact, some commodities such as plastics will cost more simply because of scarcity. Recession is conceded by all economists as production is cutback and unemployment rises. Detroit has cut production 30 percent and laid off almost a quarter of a million workers.

We know that the Rockefellers and Mellons are not going to suffer noticeably from this. It is we, the poor and middle class who will bear the brunt of this crisis. We must open the books of the oil companies to see what the truth is in cold figures. Labor must combat unemployment by demanding forty hours pay for thirty hours work. And, if we still can't get what we want from these modern Robber Barons, then we must replace them and the government which represents them with working people who can make decisions in their own interests.

VN embarassing thorn

To even the most casual observer of the situation in Southeast Asia, the fact that the United States has supplied South Vietnam with $284.7 million since the cease fire, should come as no surprise. It is also reported that Saigon places its losses at 13,778 soldiers killed, and 2,159 civilians, all since the cease fire. They also say that North Vietnamese and Viet Cong losses number 45,000. (This last figure is undoubtedly exagerated, and could safely be divided by 2. But no matter.)

And silly as it sounds, the war is over for the people of the United States. Nobody wants to talk about it, read about it, watch it on television, and least of all, have someobody write a column about it. It's become an embarassing thorn in the side of most people, and they'd just as soon forget the whole thing. The attitude reminds me of a solution posed, in the late sixties, by a prominent member of Congress: "How do we get out of Vietnam? Why that's simple. Just tell everyone that we won, and then march the hell out of there." He must be pleased that we finally took his advice.

How can we sit back and kid ourselves about peace with honor, when everyday battles are being fought with American machinery, technological assistance, and money? A few years ago the campuses and streets of America were screaming for peace, on very pure grounds. Back then it wasn't enough to demand withdrawal, because peace was the goal. But it seems now that the GI's are back in Georgia, we are pacified, and conveniently forget that war is still war, no matter who does the fighting.

We're right back where we started in Vietnam. Oh sure, maybe the South Vietnamese are more experienced in miliatry matters, as well they should be by now. Maybe they have ten times as many soldiers, (the third largest standing army in the world). And perhaps some of the millions of aid dollars find their way to the needy every now and then, but not often enough to notice. But the Saigon government is as dictatorial as it has ever been. And the people for the most part, are as poor as they have ever been. And the prospects for a just election are as dim as they have ever been. And the will of the people is as remote as it has ever been. And to top it off, the North Vietnamese have a stronger foothold in the South than they have ever had. It sounds all too familiar; a little country fighting for its existence against the Communist invader. You've come a long way, baby.

Now don't get the idea that I'm advocating an invasion, or something. But isn't it ludicrous that a national sentiment can be so overwhelming as to erase the actual results of something so momumental as war? And the thing that keeps turning over in my mind, is whether or not we have a responsibility to those people over there. Oh, I don't mean to drive out the nasty invaders kind of responsibility, but rather that we're keeping that government going with our money. And as long as we pump $284.7 million into it, are we not also keeping the war going? GI's may not be sipping tea in Cholon, or getting wrapped in plastic bags somewhere near Tay Ninh, but the United States is still in Vietnam.

It's obvious to me, that to accept our responsibility in Vietnam requires more than financially supporting a dictatorship. It means picking up where the cease fire left off, and coming to a coalition agreement. It's either compromise, or more fighting, with the United States footing the bill. And the fact is, that the White House is genuinely happy with the present situation. A true peace, with a coalition, is not very good politics in this case. If Nixon doesn't have to face the possibility of a coalition, then he can still point with devious pride at his "peace with honor". Otherwise, how does he explain to the American people, not to mention the POW's, that it was all really a big mistake. And if we were to take the other road, and simply withdraw our assistance, how could he ever explain Saigon's overthrow? Would he call out the Marines? Mine a harbor or two? Start quoting Lyndon Johnson? No way. He has no intention of going in either direction. He's stuck in the middle, and he knows it. And every night he prays, to whoever he prays to, that things will reamin status quo. So the real American decision in Vietnam is yet to come.

And that's why I'm writing on this subject. It just gripes the hell out of me to see how content some people become, with a situation so potentially volatile. Vietnam still means something in this country, especially if the pendulum, now balanced at a statemate, begins to swing either way. It will then call for decision and leadership, two qualities we are short of at the moment. Nixon's withdrawal has solved nothing, and our responsibility for the ongoing war in Vietnam won't go away because he says so. Somewhere, sometime, the question of solution will have to be dealt with, in a manner equally acceptable to all sides. But I'm not so naive to think that Nixon will deal with it, after all, he has all he can do to chew gum and walk at the same time. And once he's mastered that, maybe someone will take the potato out of his mouth.

Indians up pubs

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

There's an explosion of communication among the groups which make up the Amerindian Nations, according to Clive Lawrence of the Christian Science Monitor.

The Indian groups have increased the number of publications over three years from 150 to 700, mostly newspapers, magazines, radio and TV programs and movies.

This Amerindian rennaissance is an agreement with "Only an informed people has its future in its own hands," said Rochard LaCourse of the American Indian Press Association. And the future is exchanging information among all different Amerindian Nations -- from achievements, to common problems, to where they each succeed in dealing with the federal government.

But to achieve the goal of communications among nations or tribes is not easy. There are about 265 nations in the U.S. and 300 communities in Alaska, with too many different languages.

The solution to this communications gap is English, which can be used as a linguistic tool to create a unity which would otherwise evolve over centuries.

While Amerindians in the U.S. are increasing the control of their own communications, in the rest of the hemisphere, Amerindians, lack communications. Only on Indian nation, in Ecuador, is organized as reported by Akuesasne Notes. The lack of publications dealing with their situation is notorious.

Probably the only Latin American publication that deals more with it is a Bohemia Magazine from Cuba. Akuesasne Notes is a nationally circulated U.S. newspaper originating from the Mohawk Nation in New York state.

Amerindians in the U.S. are increasing their ability using tools from the technological world, tod efend the right of maintaining their own way of life. For instance, using T.V. and movies are close to traditional audio-visual methods for educating.

This is the opposite of the South Amerindians. Quatro Rodas, a Brazilian magazine, said TV and movies are destroying indigenous folklore, mostly Amerindian and African.

The Amerindians of the U.S. seem to accept the benefits of the linquistic transculturation. But they aren't the only ones. Mexican Americans, Cubans and Puerto Ricans, as well as other immigrants, are learning that to use English is the best way to communicate with other people. Besides, the result is that channels are opened to more crossculturation than ever. The transculturation passes the conflict stage and is synthesized, and with the synthesis comes a new and stronger culture and a more intense nation.

A Red under every bed

To The Editor:

It seems the Collegian's Bircher in residence, alias Bob Estelle, has outdone himself this time with his latest work of irrational ramblings. He gets his attempt to analyze the energy crisis mixed up with his perpetual search for a Red under every bed, and ends up calling for an end to the oil companies fraud while having argued for everything they want all through his article. I'm sure most people who read the article were aware of the illogical inconsistencies but I feel some points mentioned could use a realistic appraisal.

Taking his points in order, he claims the government's at fault for charging high taxes to drill oil. In fact, Nixon has continually encouraged the oil companies by temporarily suspending import quotas, allowing an 8 per cent increase in fuel oil prices in Feb. 1973 in defiance of his own price controls, and even begging the oil companies to increase their refinery output from 89 per cent to 91 per cent of capacity. But still the oil barons weren't satisfied and prolonged shortages so that in April to encourage refinery construction, the government allowed the oil companies to import 75 per cent of their new capacity TAX FREE for the next five years and decided to triple the leasing of off shore drilling sites.

Next, Estelle blames the so-called ecology movement that began on Earth Day in 1970 for hindering oil development. Any true ecology activist recognizes this movement as nothing more than a liberal shuck consisting of business and conservation interests whose only concern for the environment is that it be exploited with taste and efficiency. And the National Environmental Policy Act, which he claims has put a dent in oil production, is in fact commonly exploited by special interests. It's only binding effect is to require an environmemtal impact statement which can possibly lead to a court review. But even then, ecologically destructive projects are usually just delayed or suffer a minor alteration. The rape of Alaska now proceeds with government approval despite the evidence that what Estelle calls "useless tundra" is required to keep the delicate balance among the eco-systems of the area and to prevent the permafrost below from melting into a swamp of mud. Damage to the artic ice pack also risks altering global weather patterns and there are many other destructive possibilities too numerous to list here. And Estelle's racist attack of AIM for defending what little land they are given by our government is sickening, but expected from a Bircher.

Estelle would have us tear up every last patch of earth in his lustful search for more gas for his car so he can help poison the air some more. His ignorance to the lasting effect of the major oil spills can be attested to by anyone who's gone swimming off the shores of Santa Barbara lately. And while I've never been one to argue for government control, the rationing of gas does seem like the only fair way to give the poor an equal chance for the limited supplies. I guess Bob's simple-minded analogy used as an argument shows his lack of a better solution.

Yes, Bob, the oil companies and our government are to blame. The rich businessmen do control the so-called ecology groups. But giving the oil companies free reign won't solve the energy situation. Until we restructure our society to fill human needs instead of businessmen's pockets, until we abandon faith in liberal reformism and technology and pursue true ecological and human priorities, the crises' will continue until planet Earth becomes an unhabited wasteland.

Library hot stuff

To The Editor:

This letter is based on my feeling that the University, in general, is not living up to its proposed conservation of fuel program.

I currently have classes in Hasbrouck 124, S.B.A. 120, Machmer W-17, and I spend a lot of time in the library (I work there). In all four buildings, I would make an educated guess, that the temperature is either 72 degrees or above. I have recently read the thermostat in the library at between 72 degrees and 76 degrees. This does not seem to conserve fuel. In two instances at work I have asked that the temperature be lowered. Although the message was relayed, nothing ever came of it. The only place in the building that is cool is the front lobby, at times it is necessary to wear a coat at the exit control desk.

Because of the outside temperature and lack of an excessively warm coat I wear a jacket, scarf, sweater, shirts and long underwear to school every day. I have to take off my sweater and sometimes an outside shirt to relieve some of my discomfort and I'd like to disrobe more but would most likely be arrested as an exhibitionist. Actually, I haven't anything earth shattering to exhibit although someone once told me that my navel was rather sensuous.

The University has publicly stated its intent to conserve fuel and I don't think they are living up to it. It pisses me off and hopefully others. Possibly through letters like this and pressure from other sources, the University will be forced to conserve the fuel that is now in precious short supply.

Jack Devnew

P.S. Although the heat in the library is at times unbearable, it is conserving energy by regulating the lighting. The elevators also do their part by regularly breaking down.

Irish lib in SW

To The Editor:

Members of the Irish Community have long been the objects of discrimination at this university, which has a large Irish-American population. There has been an absence of Irish courses and cultural affairs here. We, the members of the IRA (Irish Recognition Association) have proposed the following demands:

1. More Irish administrators and faculty at UMass.
2. Irish stew and corned beef and cabbage on dining commons menus.. Irish coffee in the Bluewall and all faculty lounges.
3. Development of an Irish-American major, with "St Patrick's Contribution to Man" listed in every history book.
4. Rolls Royce transportation for all Irish students.
5. End to discrimination in jobs. Want Irish representatives in the Student Senate and Judiciary.
6. End to bitter racial slurs against Irish people (i.e. Mickey Mouse must go!)
7. Irishmen being held as political prisoners in drunk tanks must be released immediately.
8. UMass Police cars must be repainted green.
9. St. Patrick's statue erected in front of Whitmore.

Tackeff unaware

To The Editor:

It is disheartening to read an editorial so lacking in awareness as Matt Tackett's dramatic call-to-arms for Alexander Solzhenitsyn. What country was this written in? Certainly the politically concerned among us realize the tragedy and hypocrisy of capitalist "revolutionaries", but sighting them as the dissidents who have any real concern over the fate of this country and its people is pure fantasy. Have we already dismissed the courage of those who died and those who lived to fight again at Attica, Jackson and Kent State? Has Wounded Knee been safely and painlessly replaced in our consciousness with concerns that are easier to deal with because of their distance? Why is there no mention in this editorial of the blacks (and whites) currently resisting the "legal lynching" that is taking place across the country, notably in the case of the Charlotte Three? Are the thousands of people imprisoned in Amerika for their particular beliefs, their war resistance, their sexual preferences to be disregarded as "placard & slogan" protestors? The "primrose path" has not made itself known to these people, and what they have dared to express and fight for should be realized as the essence of Amerikan dissent, which (as Tackeff tends to maintain in the manner of a high school principal), is no longer a "constitutional right" in a country where laws are perverted to oppress and persecute at a corrupted government's will.

Solzhenitsyn, one cannot deny, is engaged in a difficult struggle for his right to self-expression. But I wonder at this point if the growing concern over him is an unconscious, almost naive attempt to remove the focus of our concerns and revolutionary energy from the immediate and unified resistance that will be necessary to create true freedom in America, if indeed that is possible at this late time. Listening to soap box speeches develops a soap box consciousness that denies the sincerity and effort of those whose lives are spent working for change.

Beyond the naivete, one even suspects the cause might be constructed and publicized so as to cause a greater fear of communism by sensationalizing Stalin's perverted Communism, tending to be a support of right wingers who blanch at the word, and who in these days on increasing crisis placate the voice of dissidence by using Russia to prove "We don't have it so bad here."

The prisons are horrendous in Russia, but the prisons in America are no better. Why in hell do we turn our attention away from those situations in our country that need it most. To what extent is the preoccupation with Solzhenitsyn a rather glorified escapism? Little seems to be reported of Solzhenitsyn's previous reactionary stance, as evidenced by the letter he sent the Russian church on Lent of 1972 pleading for "spiritual renewal" without defining his request, seemingly ignorant of the horrible oppression and intolerance the church in its days of power had exerted.

Aside from the total insensitivity in the editorial toward the real dissidence that has been and will be in Amerika, I am appalled at Tackeff's desperate patriotism, and in hope that in the wake of Nixon's dictatorship, and the intolerable oppression maintained by the government and the capitalist system, that the cause of Solzhenitsyn is not forgotten, but rather within the turmoil of people struggling against the insanity of Amerika, that his struggle is seen from a realistic perspective.

I guess I was daydreaming

When I was in my early years under the guidance of the Sisters of Saint Joseph, I spent much time daydreaming of when I would be going off to college. I really wanted to be part of that concerned, radical, sect who marched waving their banners covered with Dylanesque phrases aimed at shaking the "establishment". I had even imagined what it would have been like to get a beating or two at a Democratic Convention. High school tried to teach me that such things may not be hip anymore, but I refused to give in. One of my reasons for coming to UMass was the size, which to my thinking could only generate social awareness and discontent for the status quo.

I guess I was really daydreaming.

Somehow I expected a little more than what I saw. The only time the students rallied to a cause last semester with any earnestness was when the possibility arose to bring Moe Howard to campus. The march after the presidents "Saturday Night Massacre" had the air of a Saint Patrick's Day parade or a 1950's football rally. When the labor force of the school went on strike for a day, the students could have made a difference and helped to keep the administration from milking the workers, but at that rally in front of the Student Union there seemed to be more people concerned with getting in and nabbing their Collegian than anything else. Even groups like the Northampton Volunteers, the Belchertown Group, WMPIRG, or the United Farm Workers draw only a small number of participants.

Last semester it wasn't even unusual to hear phrases like: "Do you get credits or anything for going to Northampton?" or, "How come they changed the lettuce in this place? Let's get the other stuff back."

Last October 3rd, the executive editor of the Globe, Robert Healy, in an article entitled "Students Back to the Silent State", talked about UMass and how students have returned to the business of getting an "education". Healy pointed out that though the students of the sixties could not elect Eugene McCarthy, they were still instrumental in forcing an end to the war, and Lyndon Johnson stepping down. But, as Healy concluded, students "... aren't about the business of changing the world these days."

I am not out to recruit people to blow up Whitmore (though I have had the thought once or twice), I am only afraid we are in a sad state when this college has become a four year cement sanctuary before we emerge into the outside world. We are only headed then, to a world just as plastic, just as oppressive, just as sick as the one that is bombing Vietnam; as the one that elected Richard Nixon, and the one that allows the huge corporations to control our daily lives.

We can change the world. We must first change ourselves, even an hour a week at a state hospital, or picketing an Atkins Farm, or even attending a Student Senate meeting.

To quote Alfred Tennyson, "Come my friends, 'tis not too late to seek a newer world."

Poll says crunch fake

I am rather upset. Recently I have been taking a random poll among the people I have come in contact with. The poll deals with the question of whether the energy crisis is real or if it is a contrivance of the oil industry and or Richard Nixon.

The poll was not one in the realm of Gallop professionalism, rather, I would simply bring up the question whenever possible in the course of everyday conservation. Also, I did not write down or log the results. As it turned out, I really didn't have to transcribe the responses, for in the past two months I have come upon a minute number of people who firmly believe we have an energy shortage and of the people who thought there was an energy shortage their statements were usually qualified with the belief that it would be only temporary.

The vast majority of people with whom I had contact believe that the oil industry and Richard Nixon have brought this situation on knowingly. I am by no means defending these manipulators of public thought and policy. Indeed, they both have distasteful records within the scope of public service. However putting the energy shortage off on Richard Nixon or the oil industry is as ridiculous as putting off the prolongation of the Vietnam War on the anti-war movement. God knows, the last thing Richard Nixon needs now, on top of all his other problems, is an energy crisis to hit the people with.

I agree, it is undeniably true that Mr. Nixon has been completely blind to the fact, either knowingly or unknowingly, that steps should have been taken four years ago to prepare our country for the unnatural task of adjusting to less energy. Although, even if Mr. Nixon did come out four years ago and tell the people they would have to cut down on some of their luxuries, the majority in this country would have thought him insane. So we still have Richard Nixon today, appeasing the people, and providing no leadership whatsoever to help alleviate the problem.

As for the oil companies, I don't think they are naive enough to believe that they would reap windfall profits by hoaxing the public. I realize they don't hold much stock in the mentality of Congress, but there is no way Congress would let the oil companies go so far as to reap obvious windfall profits. True, the price of gas has gone up, and it will continue to go up in the future, as is the case with everything when demand exceeds supply. America will simply have to pay more money if they want more gasoline. Exploration and new refineries cost enormous sums of money.

Americans have been living high off the hog for quite awhile now, it simply isn't possible to go on forever, there is only a finite amount of natural resources.

Blaming Richard Nixon and the oil companies is taking the easy way out. If blame is to be assigned it should be allocated most generously to the public, who incessantly squanders everything offered. I am of the opinion that the vast majority of Americans won't admit, or can't admit, that they are going to have to change their lifestyle.

I think it will be interesting to see in the next few years how we as a people will react to the initial stages of the inevitable lifestyle and living pace change. We will see just how intelligent a mass we really are.

Walpole cover-up: everyone's cover-up

By BOB MACKAY, JR.

It is late at night. Most of the prisoners at Walpole State Prison are asleep. Suddenly, a group of so-called guards appear and open a prisoner's cell. This goon squad--for no apparent reason--and certainly no legal reason--proceeds to beat the prisoner mercilessly.

In the morning, those of the prisoners who have any appetite can eat a cold breakfast. Their other "meals" will be cold, too-the inmates haven't had a hot meal for months. They're not allowed to work in the kitchen or eat in thé dining room.

During the day, some of the prisoners may choose to work. The incentives, though, aren't very good - maximum pay per day is $1.50. Many of the inmates must wonder when they get their checks - nobody has been paid since last July.

The prison itself doesn't even deserve to be called a prison. Walpole is the only state prison where the inmates live in six feet by nine feet cages with no windows. The nine and ten block cells are used for "disciplinary segregation-" what the prisoners in these cellblocks experience is anybody's guess. Sanitation is something seriously lacking at the prison.

Few people, though, really know just how bad living-or dying-at Walpole State Prison is. You see, it's a well-kept secret. A lot of people have a lot to hide. It is virtually impossible for the press or anybody concerned about the conditions to get inside.

On Jan. 14, 1974 Walpole inmate Robert Daigle took a guard hostage for several hours. Daigle, already in prison, would face serious charges for his actions. Yet, he certainly had nothing to lose. So Daigle demanded that he be allowed to speak before television cameras to tell the public about condidtions at Walpole. The cameras came and Daigle was on the news that night. But the viewing public didn't really seem to care - I mean, it wasn't like Daigle was telling them they wouldn't have any gas to go to the Cape this summer.

Robert Daigle also presented a list of ten demands. Basically, they sought to correct the injustices described in the previous paragraphs. The demands included payment of back wages, ending the goon squad, depopulating the nine and ten cellblocks, allowing the inmates to work in the kitchen and eat in the dining rooms, and permitting the inmates to clean up the prison. Also, one demand asked that there be some development of furlough, school, and job training programs for the Walpole prisoners. Finally, Daigle asked that Walpole Superintendent Douglas Vinzant negotiate twice a week with the N.P.R.A. -- something that Vinzant had promised to do on a previous signed agreement which he had failed to honor. The N.P.R.A. is the National Prisoners' Reform Association-a prisoners' bargaining unit to which 90 percent, or approx. 500 of Walpole's inmates belong.

Superintendent Vinzant stated that Daigle's demands were reasonable, and signed them and agreed to implement them. But, N.P.R.A. has repeatedly negotiated demands similar to Daigle's-with little change actually resulting. When the pressure is on, Vinzant and others readily agree to make changes, but those changes are seldom made.

On Thurs., Jan. 24 approxiamtely forty people, from Concerned Citizens of Mass., delivered in silent vigil a three page letter to Governor Sargent. The following are excerpts--

"On Jan. 24, we citizens of Mass., and you our Governor, heard an outcry of personal desperation describing the violence and injustice at Walpole State Prison. Robert Daigle ... risked his life and that of a guard to get word to the public about the horror of conditions at Walpole..."

"For months we have appeared to forget that there is still massive violence at Walpole..we pledge that the Walpole cover-up will no longer succeed..."

"As we come here, we give you notice that we do not seek to talk with you. The past year of talk and agreements has led nowhere, and the time for talk has ended. The violence of Walpole policies and administration will only be healed by your personal commitment and action to change it..."

In the letter, Concerned Citizens asked that they be permitted to enter Walpole on Feb. 4, to see if the changes to which Vinzant agreed were being implemented. Also, the group asked Sargent to see that Daigle "does not suffer punishment" for his actions. The Governor never responded to the requests or the letter. So, last Monday, Concerned Citizens conducted another vigil in front of Sargent's office. The group definitely plans further action.

Use less energy -and pay more

If you are cooperating with energy conservation programs, you're probably trying to cut down on use of electricity. But you may be shocked to know that you won't be saving any money on your electric bill. In fact, Mass. consumers are being punished for their energy-conservation efforts.

Dermot P. Shea recently stated that, "...in the $100 million plus electrical rate increases pending before the Department of Public Utilities, there is a substantial amount just for loss of volume of business due to the reduced usage by consumers in compliance with electrical conservation programs..." Shea is a former Exec. Secretary of the State Consumers' Council and is now a consumer advisor to House Speaker Bartley.

Shea explained that, "In the Boston Edison case the rate increase filing is based on a projected $30 million loss of revenue as a result of conservation measures; in the Mass. Electric rate filing which affects over 700,000 subscribers, there is a ten percent or an estimated $25 million loss of revenue projected as a result of reduced energy usage by consumers. The consumers are expected to pick up this tab which is based on the experience of a short period of time-particularly in Dec. '73 - since the voluntary energy conservation measures have been in effect. These rate increase demands are premature and typical of the arrogance of private electrical utilities who have dominated our state energy policy and have led us into this present situation of high energy cost..."

Also, Rep. William G. Robinson (R.Melrose) Republican Whip has forwarded a strong request to Department of Public Utilities Chairman Robert L. Mead, asking that the Mass. Electric Company be denied its rate hike request. Robinson says--

"...Their (Mass. Electric) request is based on the contention that an increase is necessary to compensate for their loss of revenue which has been brought about as a result of conservation practices. It seems to be grossly unfair for government to require the consuming public to pay extra for having responded to a patriotic call for conservation and cooperation."

"It is a matter of public record that energy suppliers have expended enormous sums of money during the so-called energy crisis, instructing consumers on ways and means to conserve. While at the same time the energy suppliers have, of course, attempted to add lustre to their own public image. It's difficult for me to believe that the suppliers would now have the audacity to ask the consumer to pay for the public relations campaign of the Electric Company."

State college tv network

Mass. could soon have a college television network. The system would originate here at UMass-Amherst and would be connected to at least 25 state-community colleges.

Speaker of the House David M. Bartley (D-Holyoke) is sponsoring a bill that provides for a closed-circuit college educational network. Those students who participate in the TV system would receive academic credit. The multi-channel television hook-up could be used for both educational and entertainment purposes, according to Speaker Bartley. The bill-House no. 2903-will receive a hearing by the Committee on Education. Passage of the bill is by no means certain-a similar measure introduced last year won House approval but died in the Senate.

Rep. Collins to speak at C. Dems.

College Democrats of Massachusetts (C.D.M.) is an organization in the making that is to consist of thousands of students from virtually all the major colleges in the state. C.D.M. will ecome an effective voice in communicating the interests of college students to Beacon Hill.

State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) will be the guest speaker at the first meeting of College Democrats in this area. Students from the Five-Colleges are invited to attend. The group will meet in room 162 of the UMass Campus Center, tomorrow night (Tues.) at 7 p.m. Rep. Collins will speak on "Young People and Involvement in Politics."

The first statewide gathering of College Democrats will be held at the Boston College campus in Chestnut Hill, Feb. 16 at 1 p.m. in room 113 of McGuinn Hall, John Kerry, past Congressional Candidate from the 5th District, is tentatively scheduled to speak. At the meeting, a structural organization for College Democrats will be established. Also, C.D.M. will draw up plans for a major electoral caucus, to be held by the group in March. At its March caucus, C.D.M. will nominate candidates for some or all of the Mass. Constitutional Officers, including: Governor, Lt. Gov., Attorney General, Sec. of State, Treasurer and Auditor.

Goodby Poor Richard's. Yes, that's right, our editors have decided that The Collegian's magazine supplement named after Ben Franklin's almanac needs an original facelift (and a change of name too). To put it more clearly, Friday was the last time you'll see the name "Poor Richard's" on our weekly arts-feature magazine.

It began with Dave Williams — a four-page weekend section and lots of trips to the printer in a battered Volkswagen. It ended with a red Christmas pastiche cover prominently featuring editors Coffey and Kosofsky as one of only three campuses in the country with the lucidity to float such a weekly fine arts and real world magazine.

Now UMass has been blessed or cursed with the weekly for 2½ years now, and it's been known as "Poor Richard's" all the time. From the furious writing of Frank Baglione and the erudite auto series of Frank Williams, to the lifting exposees of Amherst Towing by Barbara Voorhees, you've been sitting through the 20th century spinoff the original almanac.

The new editor doesn't like that so much and figures things need a change. The change is a new name. But we want everyone to be thinking about what that name should be. So starting this morning, The Collegian is accepting ideas for the "name the magazine contest".

Here's what you frustrated publishers who want to name your very own magazine should do:

1) Think of a new name for "Poor Richard's".
2) Write it down with your name, address, and phone.
3) Bring it to The Collegian office before Wednesday afternoon, in time for Thursday's first edition of the new weekly supplement. The office is on the second floor of the Student Union, and it's open from 8:30 to 4:30.

Our editors will consider all ideas and choose one as the best. It will appear as the new title for the first twelve-page magazine to be contained in Thursday's Collegian. The person who's name idea is chosen will be appropriately rewarded. If you haven't got a piece of paper, the space below should suffice.

HOW DO YOU THINK MOST PEOPLE YOUR AGE DIE?

It's not drugs.
It's not suicide.
And it's not cancer.

It's automobile crashes.

More American people between the ages of 15 and 25 die in automobile crashes than in any other way.

At least half of those deaths are alcohol related. And the drunk drivers who cause most of them are under 25. Sometimes, many times, they kill themselves.

One of the most dangerous things you can do is get drunk and drive home.

You can change it. You have to.

You march against war. You fight for clean air and clean water. You eat natural foods. You practice yoga. You are so much for life. And you are so much against killing.

It would be unthinkable for you to wittingly kill another human being.

So then, why is this happening?

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra attempts to see various points of view but usually arrives at definite decision. Libra may appear soft, gentle, even weak — but these natives know when to draw the line and to set down policy and to see that it is carried through to successful conclusion. Libra is deceptive in that the outward signs are anything but positive while, in actuality, the mind is made up, the jaw is set and the wheels are in motion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Sudden changes indicated in areas of marriage, partnership, joint efforts and legal agreements. Be ready to deal with the unorthodox. Stick to principles. One in authority is backing you, perhaps even while appearing to criticize.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): One phase of basic activity is finished. Prepare for new concepts, procedures. One who shares interests has workable idea for saving and producing. Co-operate. Take a chance. Odds actually favor you. Know it and state case with clear voice, pen and confidence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with love, creativity, children and drama. You come alive. What was routine takes on aspects of color and change. Leo, Aquarius individuals could figure prominently. Imprint your own style. Lead rather than imitate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Practical matters which concern budget, investments dominate. You need co-operation of mate, partner. Joint effort is likely to be bright in financial sense. There will be support for your efforts — from substantial sources.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Confusion attempts takeover. Key now is to be versatile, to piece together bits of information. Short trip, visit, relatives are in picture. One who does plenty of talking may not be straight where facts are concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Protect valuables. Refuse to accept allegation as fact. Someone wants something for nothing — from you. Know it and don't sell yourself short. You have right to expect compensation for efforts, services, ideas.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Cycle high; aura of excitement prevails. Creative spark is ignited. Make new starts. Welcome opportunity to express ideas in meaningful ways. Be ready for change, travel, variety of experiences. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You love secrets but now you should be prepared to have them publicized, revealed. Don't be caught off guard. Hold something in reserve. If you throw hole cards on table, you open yourself to possible malicious gossip.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends are open, even eccentric. You may find it difficult to reconcile statements people make and the way they act. Ride with the tide. Wait. Hold off on forming conclusions. Your ally now is patience. Perceive subtle nuances. Someone is trying to tell you something.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You make money now with one who is professional, skilled and capable of putting ideas to work. You also gain prestige by accepting responsibility. There is synchronicity between what you do and the results obtained. Motion is not wasted.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Universal appeal is featured. Means you feel pulse of public. Cycle is wide-ranging. You no longer are limited. You can go far — and those who are petty will fall by the wayside. Philosophical concepts are accented.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Important now to probe, dig and cut away superficiality. Take direct action. Bring forth creative resources. It is your style that counts — emphasize it. Money deal will be clarified. Ask questions of partner, mate.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are intuitive, a natural teacher and somewhat puzzled about your relationship with family members. This will be a year of self-discovery — September and October will be key, pivotal months. You draw to you many born under Pisces and Virgo. You are going to make your mark and many of us will be reading about you.

AMNESTY TOPIC ON WMUA'S "FOCUS" SERIES TONIGHT AT 10

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will highlight the question of amnesty for American draft resistors.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

One segment of tonight's 60-minute program will feature an exclusive interview with Darryl Robertson, a 1969 UMass graduate who fled to Canada after having unsuccessfully applied for Conscientious Objector status. Robertson was interviewed on the subject of amnesty and a variety of other topics last Christmas eve at his home in Downsview, a borough of Toronto.

Commentary will follow the pre-taped interview.

Bowlers sweep doubles

By MDC STAFF

In bowling action this past weekend it was a clean first place sweep for members of the UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team. Members of the men's and women's team competed in the Eastern Intercollegiate Bowling Congress doubles qualifying tournament in Wilbraham. In the men's division first place was captured by Alan Segal and Pete Henderson with a fine 2994 for the eight games. Nancy Heglin and Karen James captured first place in the women's division with a 2759. These two have been consistently at the top of the women's division in the past tournaments. Second place in this division also went to UMass. Joan Felde and Linda Radwanski combined for a 2507. In the men's division another performance worthy of note was turned in by Steve Roberts and Dave Dimmick who combined for 2783, good for fifth place.

The finals will take place next weekend. The men will compete in New York City and the women in Chicopee.

Catamount women nip UMass swimmers

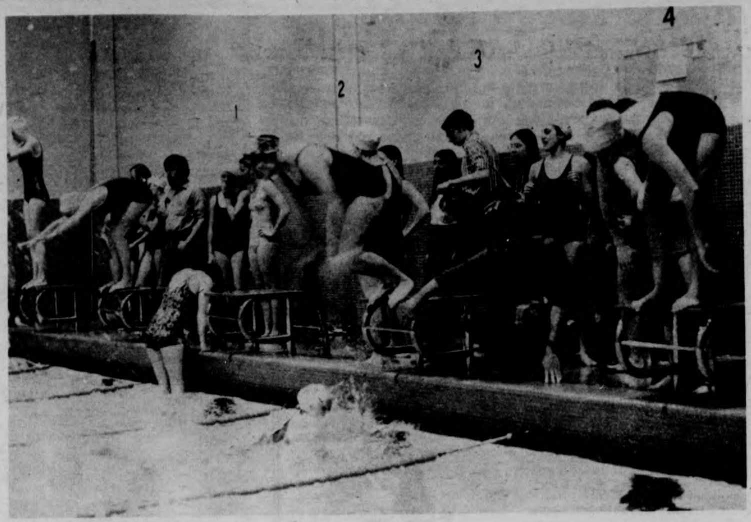
by Jan Garavano

Saturday afternoon was one full of highlights and heartbreaks for the swimmers at NOPE pool, and despite a fine team performance by UMass, Vermont wound up on top, 62-60.

The highlights evolved around the freestyle and butterfly events as Melon Dash, Laurie Selik, Karen Johnson, and Cindy Whiting earned their share of points. Cindy has tied the 50 freestyle pool record three times in a row with a time of 27.5, and is determined to break it the next time out. Melon was strong and fast as she swam away from her competitors to take first in the 50, 100 fly and 200 individual medley.

The 200 I M was part of the strategy of Pat Griffin, and Karen Johnson swimming for the first time in the No. 2 spot, finished third. Laurie Selik, was then free to swim the 100 freestyle, and the result was a one-two sweep, as she and Cindy captured top honors.

The heartbreak came at the 50 freestyle and the diving competition as mere fractions separated the two teams. In the freestyle event, Roxanne Balducci and two Vermont women were within one-tenth of a second... the judges deliverated and Roxanne fell to fourth. Carol Canterbury and Vermont diver Cindy Prehemus both led during the five rounds of dives, but a slightly higher degree of difficulty became the deciding factor, and Vermont surfaced with a 1.5 spread and the victory.



Exhorting their teammates to victory, the UMass women swimmers led all the way against Vermont on Saturday afternoon only to be edged out in the diving competition. The aquatic Minutewomen face Yale and Springfield College in their next meet Wednesday night.

RANDY THOMAS — set UMass mile record Friday night with a time of 4.09.

Tracksters lose to last event Dartmouth rally

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Indoor Track Writer

If records are made to be broken, Randy Thomas is the man who's going to break them. The junior speedster set a new school record in the mile in Friday's tri-meet, in which Dartmouth rallied to nip UMass 67-65, while UNH made little noise, scoring just 16 points.

Thomas, who now holds three school records in track and cross country, took four tenths of a second off the old record by running the mile in 4:09. Thomas, also holds the two-mile record and the cross country course record.

Thomas wasn't the only record-breaker, however, as Dan Grigus cleared 13'7" in the pole vault for a new UMass record. The junior vaulter, a transfer student, who came to Amherst from the Air Force Academy, recently tied the mark of 13'6".

The meet was as close as track meets can be. With all of the competition completed except the triple jump, UMass was still in excellent position to win the meet. Things looked even better for the Minutement when Mike Geraghty set a new meet record in the triple jump. Geraghty moved into first with his jump of 46'8¼". Warren Cassiday of Dartmouth had two jumps left, and it was all up to him. Cassidy ran through his next to last jump, and set a new meet and Dartmouth College record with an effort of 46'10¼" on the last jump of the day. Cassidy's clutch performance gave Dartmouth the victory and prevented UMass from finishing the regular season with a 4-4 record.

As it turned out, Coach Ken O'Brien had nothing to complain about. O'Brien explained that the team has come a long way since the layoff during intersession. The team started practicing together again on January 23, with double workouts. The result has been a team which O'Brien says, "is a little bit better than I thought it would be." The mentor admitted that UConn is a heavy favorite to take the Yankee Conference championships, but stated that the team will go into the meet with intentions of winning.

The trackmen completed the regular season with a 3-5 record that could have been 5-3. Only a record-breaking performance stopped UMass from defeating Dartmouth, and a gamble that O'Brien took earlier in the season cost the team a victory. O'Brien rested some of his top athletes in the Rhode Island meet, hoping to upset UConn and Manhattan in the following meet. The gambit failed, however, and UMass lost all three meets.

In other top performances in the meet, Mike Geraghty set a new meet record in the long jump. Geraghty, a "pleasant surprise" took first with a jump of 22'8½". Steve Crimmin ran the 600 in 1:13.1 to lower another meet record, and Tony Pendleton set a freshmen record by running the dash in 6.3.

The fast times proved that UMass is a better team than its 3-5 record indicates. The upcoming championship meets should prove interesting. Connecticut and Northeastern appear to be the top teams in New England, with Boston College, Springfield and UMass bidding for third place. The team has the talent to lower more records when the competition gets tougher in the YanCon's and New Englands, and should finish the season on a high note.

CALL FOR RIDES!!

Cliff Blom lone Yan Con titleist as...

UMass matmen finish third

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Staff Wrestling Writer

ORONO, Me. — The Second Annual Yankee Conference Wrestling Tournament made two things crystal clear — 1) The Rhode Island Rams sit undisputedly at the top of New England Wrestling and 2) the tournament was an absolute endurance test for the teams involved.

Everything from the seven hour ride to the possibility of wrestling five times to get to the finals made the tourney a grueling eight and a half hour affair in the frozen Maine woods. The University of Rhode Island proved itself better at outlasting the rest of the Conference as they sent nine men to the finals, crowned six champs and walked away with their second Yan Con title in as many years with 171 team points.

Boston University upset the UMass Minutemen by edging them 128 to 117 for second place. The Terriers had champs aa 134, 150 and 177 pounds. The only Champion that UMass brought home was Cliff Blom, who garnered all the honors at 158 pounds. Blom was never seriously tested on his way to the finals where he won by default over URI's Marty Periera.

Other finalists for Massachusetts were Steve Benson at 167, who lost 4-1 to the Ram's Mark Jones at 177; and Heavyweight Dennis Fenton who fell victim to a headlock thrown by URI's Ray Miro, and was pinned.

The margin of difference between UMass and BU turned out to be UMass' failure to place at 118 and a loss to one of the Terrier's in a consolation round match. The reason in the 118 pound class was the fact that Minuteman Peter Sachon pulled cartilege off his ribs in a bout with BU's Jeff Lambert. He continued the match but lost by a fall and subsequently defaulted in the rest of his matches.

In the 142 pound weight class Russell Chateauneuf was bested by BU's Guy Bercier in the consolation finals, 8-1.

The tournament was a double elimination affair, which meant that a man would wrestle until he lost and them would wrestle back through consolation rounds until he either won, which meant he would be in the finals against the man to beat him before. If he lost, it would eliminate him from further competition. The matches were six minutes in length instead of the usual eight, so a wrestler who had to wrestle five times and then a final added it up to about 35 minutes of wrestling.

The remainder of the team placed third at their respective weight classes. Reynolds at 126, LeMire at 134, Chateauneuf at 142, Jabaut at 150, and Spaulding at 190.

The Minutemen will be away Tuesday against conference doormat UNH (all will wrestle up a weight class), and return this coming Saturday against powerful Wilkes College.

Women gymnasts batter West Chester St.

By CANDY GROSS

With a score of 97.70 to West Chester's 82.75, the Minutewomen brought their record to 4-0 this past Saturday. It was a one-sided performance with UMass taking at least the first three places in all four events.

The first three places in sidehorse went to Linda Nelligan 8.15, Jeannine Burger 8.10 and Ann Vexler 7.95. West Chester's Denise Zook took fourth with 7.80 followed by Margie Combs' 7.55. Sixth and seventh places went to Marion Kulick and Heidi Armstrong, respectively. Event score came to UMass 24.20 to West Chester's 21.85.

In bars, UMass placed all five of their gymnasts in the top six positions. Ann Vexler won the event with 8.25, having some trouble on her mount. Jeannine Burger's second place 8.15 was again due to a problem with her twisting dismount. Betsy East took third with 7.80 and fourth went to West Chester's Nancy Harper scoring 7.55. Gail McCarthy took a solid fifth, but continues to lose points due to a disagreement over the point value of her mount. Linda Nelligan tied for sixth with a West chester gymnast. The Springfield meet will see some routines modified to iron out the difficulties according to Coach Virginia Evans.

The score at the halfway mark was UMass 48.40 to West Chester's 42.05, not yet at the level necessary to overcome neighboring rival, Springfield College.

Beam as a team event, continues to be weak. Ann Vexler suffered two falls but took first with 7.85. Second place was a UMass tie between Marion Kulick and Margie Combs at 7.55. Both women continue to improve and performed the only two 'falless' routines of the event. Jodi Hitt continues to display her ability, earning third place with 7.15, an early fall costing her a score in the eights. Jeannine Burger's three falls placed her fifth with 6.95, while teammate Heidi Armstrong had a shaky time of it for this meet. But if UMass women had some problems, the West Chester team couldn't pull even one routine together, and fell 11.05 points behind with their low event score of 18.25.

UMass swept the floor, taking the first five places of the event. A 9.3 for Ann Vexler rounded out her overall good night, and was her top floor performance this season. Jeannine Burger followed with a fine 8.75, having only slight tumbling difficulty to iron out before Thursday. Third place was Margie Comb's 8.3, whose strong return has been a bright spot to the team's depth. Marion Kulick's fourth place 7.9 shows continued polish as the season progresses. Jodi Hitt took fifth, there was a West Chester tie for sixth and UM's Alicia Goode took seventh, making it definitely UMass's event.

Although Coach Virginia Evans was pleased with the victory it wasn't as sound a team performance as was expected. Looking ahead to Thursday, she outlined the necessary improvements. "Beam continues to be the main problem and should improve by four points. Then if bars and vaulting each increase by two points we'll be well over the 100 points needed to defeat Springfield."

Of all the meets, this Valentine's Day clash at 8:00 is the most challenging dual competition. Both teams are of National caliber and it will be well worth the trip to the Springfield Memorial Field House. (See photo P. 21)

Campus Athletics

Five days a week the Daily Collegian sports pages record the feats of intercollegiate and professional athletes.

But who is there to record the athletic feats of the average UMass student en route to daily classes?

There is ... Me!

In my quest for equal coverage of the real student athletes, I managed to obtain numerous scoops. Here are a few:

NORTH PLEASANT STREET — Larry (Lunatic) Lawson shocked the UMass sporting world today when he crossed North Pleasant Street at rush hour. In so doing he became the eighth person in modern times to perform such a feat. He was the first to cross the infamous no-man's land at the height of traffic since Darlene (Daredevil) Dive completed the fifteen yard trek back in 1964.

Observers of the totally unannounced dash were surprised when they saw Lawson warming up for the sprint. Many tried to talk him out of it. However, Lawson reportedly just kept muttering, "I've got to get to my four o'clock."

One eyewitness reported to the Collegian, "I thought he was done for when the bus ran over his ankle, but the dump truck hit him in such a way that he was knocked to safety".

The bystander also added, "It was the most exciting street-crossing I've ever been to. And it was the first time I've seen a successful one".

Lawson could not be reached for comment as he is in the intensive care ward at Cooley Dickenson Hospital. Plans for Lunatic to cross the racetrack at the start of this year's Indianapolis 500, are in the works — pending, of course, his recovery.

CAMPUS CENTER — "I seemed to be able to hit the holes just right". Those were the words of Tad Trudge after he set a UMass record for shortest time getting through the Student Union and Campus Center between classes.

His official mark was 52 minutes, 13.5 seconds.

Trudge set the record despite being pushed down a flight of stairs, tripping over a display table, after having lunch at the Hatch.

"I spotted some daylight just as I was finishing my ham and cheese," Trudge recounted, "so I didn't bother to bus my tray, and I managed to get there before the hole colsed. Twenty minutes later I was through."

It was Trudge's last competition. He will, however put on three more exhibitions before he retires.

"After those three, I'll just take the Campus Pond route.", Trudge said. "It's quicker."

ORCHARD HILL — Rookie Sidney Snowshoe upset veteran Jean Claude Umie yesterday in the Orchard Hill Giant Slalom Championships held on one of the semi-plowed sidewalks leading down the Hill.

Jean Claude, usually at his best under yesterday's course conditions (glare ice), was a heavy favorite, but he lost his chance for a third consecutive title when he tried to get down the Hill standing up. He was dug out of a snowbank and suffered only minor lacerations.

Snowshoe, meanwhile, went down in conventional style, on his back, and managed to get to the bottom unscathed.

Neither competitor wore skis.

SOUTHWEST — This community was set agog today by the inspiring performance of Rita Runsumore, who drenched in perspiraion and noticeably limping, arrived on time for a 11:15 class at John Quincy Adams.

Her class at the Graduate Research Center had ended at 11:00.

A residential hero, Miss Runsumore will be honored in a ceremony Saturday when she will receive the key to Southwest and a bronzed Puma shoe.

A ticker-tape parade will top the festivities.

Women hoopsters win a pair

By LINDA MACKLER

The UMass women's varsity basketball team upped their record to 3-1 as they defeated Central Connecticut Friday night, 51-41. The junior varsity was also victorious in Connecticut 47-39. Going into the second period and trailing 16-3, UMass looked bad. The offense was totally nneffective, but the team quickly pulled themselves together and turned the game around. With one minute and forty-six seconds to go, Jenny Edminster scored two points, stole the ball and scored another two making the score 19-18 UMass. At the end of the first half UMass led the game 24-23. Coach Jane Farr attributed this turnabout to UMass' very effective press. She stated, "we started slow. But in the second quarter we made a real team effort and forced Central into sixteen turnovers."

UMass maintained the lead until the end thanks to outstanding efforts by Marilyn Ritz and Chris Basile. Marilyn was all over the court — stealing the ball and sinking diffibult outside shots. Chris was high scorer with 13 points and high rebounder with nine. Elated with her performance. Chris said, "We deserved to win. We worked hard as a team and had a strong winning attitude."

Coming off last week's defeat, it was essential to win this game for the team's spirit. Coach Farr was pleased with the results and claimed, "This is the first time we were down by so much and we still came through. It's a good thing to know that we can do it."

The junior varsity also put on a fine display. Center Jan Franks scored the first two points and UMass never lost the lead. Terry Pudlo was high scorer with 14 points, sinking a couple from midcourt. With one minute and thirty seconds to go, a Central Connecticut player clinched the game for UMass. The score was 45-39, when she stole the ball and stuffed it into the wrong basket.

Coach Ellen Greaves was delighted. " I was pleased with our press. It's been steadily improving. A very disciplined offense kept us in the game. Everybody's performance was good."

Both teams will face a tough game this Monday night in the Northeast Physical Education Building. They face Springfield College starting at 6:00 p.m.

UMass drops second straight in overtime, 79-76 to UConn

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Overtime and UMass just don't mix.

The Minutemen dropped their second straight overtime cliffhanger Saturday afternoon as Connecticut converted on four free throws in the final 44 seconds en route to a 79-76 victory at Storrs.

Sophomore Al Weston broke a 75-all tie with two free throws at that 44 mark and another soph, John Thomas, iced the verdict when he converted on both halves of a one-and-one with three seconds remaining.

Al Skinner had a chance to bring the Minutemen back after Weston's deuce but was able to hit only one of two foul shots.

"I'm disappointed because I thought we should have won it," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. But he added, "They won it at the right time. I've won a few of those and I've lost a few of those. In a game like this, the team that wins is the team that's ahead when the buzzer rings."

Actually the game was played in three stages. UConn rolled up an eleven-point halftime lead on the strength of fine shooting by Weston and Earl Wilson. Weston notched 19 of his game-high 29 points as he and Wilson accounted for 31 of UConn's first-half total of 37 points.

The Minutemen barnstormed back after halftime to erase the UConn edge. Peter Trow made good on his first seven field goal attempts of the half and Skinner added six quick points of his own to pull UMass even. After experimenting with a zone defense in the first half, The Minutemen went back to their more accustomed man-to-man and held the Huskies to two hoops in eight minutes.

The rest of the way was tooth-and-nail, with first one team and then the other racking up short-lived leads.

The Minutemen were up by one and had the ball under their own basket with 1:25 to play in regulation time. Rick Pitino got the ball on the inbounds pass and was quickly trapped by two UConn defenders. As he tried to release to a teammate, Al Weston flicked the ball away, retrieved it, made the lay-up, and was fouled. The free throw was good to put UConn up by two.

Bill Endicott came right back to tie it up on a driving left-hander that was batted away by John Thomas, who was called for goaltending.

UConn froze the ball until the buzzer when Al Weston threw up a thirty-footer that bounced in and out to send the game into overtime.

Al Skinner was again the man for UMass as he tossed in 24 points and picked up 11 rebounds. John Murphy and Peter Trow added 18 points apiece.

Commenting on his team's poor first half, Leaman said, "The toughest thing in basketball is to come back from an overtime loss and we had a tough time dgetting started." The second half turnaround was the result of "a little bit of discipline," added Leaman.

UConn coach Dee Rowe was impressed by the Minutemen. "I certainly think Mass is in a fine position," he said. "They are definitely a tournament team."

On his own tourney chances, Rowe was not so sure. "We gotta fight our brains out to stay alive," he rationalized. "I hope we go someplace. These kids deserve it, but we gotta win, that's all."

Connecticut is now 14-5 overall and all but out of the Yankee Conference race at 6-3. They face a murderous schedule this week as they play New Hampshire, Georgetown, and Rutgers on the road. In addition they still have to face Boston College, that on February 26 at Storrs.

The Minutemen are still atop the YanCon at 6-1 and boast an overall record of 14-4. UMass, however, is at home for its next five games, starting with Boston University tomorrow night.

Tim Berra signs with Colts

By GORDON BEARD
AP Sports Writer

BALTIMORE, (AP) — Tim Berra, who once confessed to his famous father that he couldn't hit a baseball, signed a football contract Sunday with the National Football League Baltimore Colts.

Yogi, the former catching great who played sand-lot football on "The Hill" in St. Louis before starting a probaseball career at age 17, looked on proudly when Tim's signing was announced at a news conference.

"I didn't know what 'red dog' was until Tim started playing," Yogi said. "When I played, we didn't red dog, we all just rushed in together. I played center on offense, but I liked it when the other team had the ball, so I could tackle."

The 22-year-old Tim is a wide receiver from the University of Massachusetts. He was picked on the 17th round in the recent national Football League draft, the 24th of 25 players selected by the Colts.

"Tim runs excellent pass routes and has great hands," General Manager Joe Thomas said. "He'll catch anything thrown near him. But the main thing is his dedication to the game, and his willingness to learn."

Thomas conceded that young Berra, at 5-foot-11 and 184 pounds, didn't have outstanding size and admitted that his speed once posed as a possible problem.

"But when we timed him," Thomas said, "we clocked him in 4.7 seconds for the 40-yard dash and thought maybe something was wrong with our stopwatches since his dad was not known for breaking track records.

"But we got the same time again, and when we asked Tim about it, he told us he got the speed from his mother."

"I didn't shy away from baseball," he said. "But I liked football more and concentrated on that in college."

Skaters dropped by Yale

By BILL BALLOU

You've got to figure that when you can manage 41 shots on goal against a team that's beaten Boston University and Cornell you're doing pretty well.

But when you get beaten for four power play goals and can only score on one of those 41 shots (against a back-up goalie), then things don't look so good.

That's what happened in New Haven Saturday afternoon as the Division I Elis trounced the Minutemen 6-1.

The shots on goal were pretty even, 44 for Yale and 41 for the UMies, and for the most part so was the play. But Yale hit for four goals in the space of 11:53 during the second period to negate anything good UMass could do after that.

It was the strong Yale power play and the anemic UMass attempts at same that spelled the difference. The Elis converted four of six chances while the Minutemen hit on just one of eight.

The only goal of the first period was on the power play as Phil Clark gave Yale an early lead, blasting a 20-footer past Chick Rheault with John Muse off for charging.

Dave Mayer and Bobby Kane upped the count to 3-0 with even strength goals early in the second period before Ron Graber and Mike Flatters hit on the power play to put the game out of reach.

The Minutemen had plenty of chances to score as well, but couldn't capitalize on them. Mike Merchant hit the post on a breakaway, Carl Burns did the same when Merchant fed the rebound of that post shot out in front of the net, and then Kevin Conners just missed about 45 seconds later.

A couple of minutes after that flurry, Billy Harris stickhanded through the Yale defense and beat goaltender Gerry Stenson only to have the puck die right on the goal line.

Stenson had his share of luck, but the second-stringer from Albuquerque, N.M. played sensationally throughout the first two periods. When he was finally removed to allow first stringer Ken MacKenzie some ice time with about eight minutes left in the game, he got a well-deserved standing ovation.

UMass finally scored at the 25-second mark of the third period when Jim Lynch zipped a thirty-foot slap shot past Stenson on the power play, but Yale got it back at 16:05 when Mike Walsh scored with Merchant off for slashing.

INCIDENTALLY:

"A rich man drives a Cadillac,
A poor man drives a Ford,
But the hockey team went down to Yale
On four wheels and a board."

Somebody in the Athletic Department ought to have their butt booted for allowing any one of their teams to take an 200-mile trip on the travelling style that we took the pucksters to New Haven. It was cold, bumpy, uncomfortable, and has so little room for equipment that several players had to stuff theirs into the luggage racks.....UMass has never beaten Yale, now standing at 0-3....Three straight key Division II games are scheduled for this week. Tuesday night its UConn at Storrs, Friday afternoon Colby at Orr Rink and Saturday night vs. Bowdoin, also at Orr.

Earle Barroll

No cause for worry

By EARLE BARROLL

Well, let's see...the question today is not what a team in the top 20 with 16 wins and two defeats and a one-point heartbreaker to Providence College can do for an encore on the road to a possible NCAA berth. And, in fact, there is also no team with a 15-3 record, a perfect Yankee Conference slate and an academic invite to the NIT awaiting.

Rather, the stats on this Monday morning tell this story. That UMass is 14-4, no NCAA, ditto the alphabetical others, with two consecutive overtime losses to its credit. And the two teams that beat them, UConn and Boston College, both 14-5 and inside New England, telling the rest of the world that they too belong in New York come NIT time.

So, Jack Leaman, where does your team stand? "I really don't think that anything has changed in New England," he said yesterday before practice. "I still think that we're the number one contender in the region and I think that most people feel that way also." That is, if your not from Boston or Storrs.

But coach, what about the losses? Sure, you beat Providence for 35 minutes and had BC on the ropes for more and yes, you had UConn in a 14-2 tizzy. Somehow the "W" went to them, you got the "L" and no matter what the home court dictates or who played how many minutes, it is 14-4, not 16-2.

"Don't worry," smiled Leaman. "I guarantee you that we'll be alright. We have five games in a row at home and I'd be unfair telling you we shouldn't win all five. That's 19-4, a good tournament record with Fordham and New Hampshire on the road. If we need those two, we'll get them."

Leaman begrudgingly sees Boston College as a contender. "They've won three or four in a row and now they're talking a lot," he says. "Let them win another three or four straight and then I'd consider them a legitimate contender." Make that two or three more. They pummeled St. Joseph's, 81-64, Saturday night at the Height's.

BC, ok, Leaman can handle that. But UConn, that's an entirely different arena. "Unless they win the conference, they shouldn't go," he demands, a point well-taken. The Huskies have lost three in the Conference, UMass one and would you believe New Hampshire two.

"It would be impossible and more than that, a shame, to send the second place or even third place team to the tournament and not the champion," he said. "If we go undefeated the rest of the way (11-1) that should rule out their possibility."

"The emphasis for us now," he added, "is to get ourselves together and go after those last seven games, win them all, take the Conference and not leave any doubt for anyone."

"In conjunction with this, there was a team meeting at Curry Hicks Cage yesterday. "They've had maybe a dozen of them this year," said Leaman. "What it does is bring the obvious more into the open," said captain Al Skinner.

What is the obvious? "Probably my foul shooting," laughed Skinner. "But seriously we still know that we have the NIT and we just don't want to blow it. The biggest thing that has troubled us as of late has been attitude.

"We get into the frame of mind that we have the game won before it ends and you've seen that it cost us two ball games that we should have won."

"We know deep down that we're a much better team than the ones that played at BC and UConn," said Rick Pitino. "We didn't even play the first half at UConn and BC..."

"What came out of the meeting was that we resolved to only dedicate ourselves to the last seven regular season opponents, but to blow them out of the gym with 40 minutes of basketball." Amen.

From the battlefield...

On being a veteran in an 18 year old world

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Veterans on campus say they don't want to be treated like 18-year olds by their professors, but would rather keep their service background unknown in social situations.

That's one of the results of a questionnaire submitted recently to 600 randomly selected service veterans on campus. The study was prepared by Paula M. Nassif.

Nearly 70 per cent of the veterans said they were somewhat bored with academic life due to their wide range of military experiences.

Seventy per cent of the veterans also said they feel academically insecure because of their long absence from school.

Many of the veterans completing the questionnaire said they were "frustrated" being older than most students. They do not feel relaxed in classes with 18-year olds when they themselves are 25 or 26.

Some 62 per cent of the vets were satisfied with the University's social life. About half, however, felt the Conn. Valley is socially unsatisfactory.

Not surprisingly, the ex-G.I.s find scheduling courses and trying to break campus bureaucracies a big "hassle". One exception was the Veterans Affairs Office, which received high ratings.

With 2300 veterans on campus, the Veteran's Affairs Office is one of the few such campus offices in the nation. In addition to offering advice on almost any subject, the office also helps veterans find part-time jobs.

The office plans to use the questionnaire results to better assist the vets here. Most indicated they never hear or read about veteran issues.

The VA office plans to remedy this situation by sending the men a monthly newsletter.

UMies receive recognition for walkathon contribution

By STEVE TETREAULT
MDC Staff

Two women who claim to jog 50 times around their floor each morning received recognition last night for making the largest contribution to the 1973 Heart Fund Walkathon.

Rosie Chagaruly, A Junior Public Health major, and Mary Barcellona, a Sophomore CASIAC student, represented John Quincy Adams Middle House in the 12 mile excursion, which was held October 27.

In the process of completing the circular route, which ran from Whitmore, through Amherst to Atkins Farm, back on Route 116 back to Amherst and Whitmore, the two filled many of their sponsor contracts. When the money collecting had finished, Ms. Chagaruly and Ms. Barcellona had gathered $193 from over 150 sponsors. They stated that "just about everyone in Middle House had money on us." The average sponsor pledged ten cents per mile.

A plaque and a trophy were presented to JQA Middle in an impromptu ceremony last night. Stephen Noyes and Roberta Oliver co-chairmen of the Walkathon, explained that the dorm will be allowed to keep the trophy for one year, until the results of next year's walkathon are released. The two women were also presented baby shoes mounted on a plaque from their fellow residents.

Overall, the 1973 Walkathon raised over $1600. John Quincy Adams Lower finished second with a total contribution of $180. Seventy-two people participated in the event, and 55 made contributions.

According to Ms. Audrey Anderson, Heart Fund Field Worker, the money will go towards heart research and education programs for professional and laymen in Western Massachusetts.

Southwest Assembly pres. sees budget problems ahead

By FRAN BROCK

Southwest Assembly is in session again, a little poorer than last semester and a lot more cautious. Larry St. Cyr, president, feels that too many things were not accomplished last semester, and those things that were done were not always in the best interest of Southwest.

St. Cyr's biggest complaint is against the Budget Committee. The committee, established last spring, is composed of the Area Director, one representative from each cluster, a group of dormitories, the Business Manager, six students and a representative from each of the various Centers.

The rational behind such a system was to have the monies distributed in a more orderly fashion, with money being used in the interest of Southwest.

According to St. Cyr, the committee has become too large and the representatives are not acting in a way that is beneficial to Southwest. The question of the Budget Committee will be brought up later in the semester.

Another major concern of St. Cyr's is the organization of the Assembly, specifically, the committees. He has already re-defined the duties of each committee, and now hopes that they will carry them out.

The Finance Committee is supposed to investigate where money has been spent, keep an inventory, and make financial rules and regulations.

A duty of the Civil Liberties Committee is to compile a complaint form for SW students. It seems that many residents have complaints but haven't the slightest idea where to voice them. This committee would then follow up the complaints.

Distributing Project Fund money, reviewing the governmental structures of the staff, assembly, and the dorms, and raising the political consciousness are the duties of the Social Action Committee. The only problem here is that Dr. Cage, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, has temporarily frozen the Project Fund money. Although Gage has not given St. Cyr any definite reason as to why or when it will be lifted, St. Cyr feels it has to do with Thomas Campion's resignation.

The fourth group is the Social and Cultural Programs Committee. Their job "is to try to get as much going as possible."

St. Cyr, disappointed that little was done last semester in the way of programs, hopes that things will improve this semester. He also hopes that planned programs will be more promptly and efficiently executed.

The only immediate event that St. Cyr is concerned with is the "Student Phonothon," sponsored by the University alumni. They have decided to sponsor a fund-raising event which involves students calling alumni and asking for tax-deductable contributions. The money will go toward special academic projects such as BDIC, Outreach, International Studies, and the Honors Program. Money will also go to organizations such as the Everywoman's Center.

Any student interested in getting free beer, a free meal, and making phone calls one evening is asked to contact Larry St. Cyr or the Alumni House. According to St. Cyr, he is interested in getting one student from each dorm who will help organize a group of callers for the "Phonathon."

Stolen library books pose a problem

By FRED NOBLES

You're writing a paper and find you're missing that only great quote. You go to the library, but the book is not on the shelf...and it hasn't been checked out.

According to Betty Brace of the circulation department, the book could either be stolen, misplaced in the library, or "deliberately misplaced to some other shelf by someone doing research" and "effectively lost as far as anyone else is concerned." George Wright of the Library Public Service Division cited the further possibility that it could be one of many books that disappear "at the beginning of the semester and turn up at the end of the semester."

So what do you do about the quote? Ms. Brace suggests you start your research early, for the library could probably replace any "misplaced" book within three weeks. If none of the five college libraries have the book, the library will buy a new one. If the book is out of print, get a zerox copy from somewhere else.

You may, however, be somewhat comforted by the fact that an electronic detection system is being considered for the library. According to Wright, a charged magnetic metal strip would be inserted in each book. Somewhere in the checkout process the strip would be deactivated.

Anyone trying to actively "misplace" a charged book outside the library would set off an alarm in the detection unit. Hopefully, this system will reduce, if not do away with, the number of stolen books.

And you just might find your quote.

Glassblowing

An art preserved in Goessman

By BRIAN COYNE
MDC Staff

Deep in the bowels of Goessman Laboratory, a man is bringing a time-honored craft to a few select students.

The man's name is Gordon Good. His craft is glassblowing. Every Monday, Wednesday and Friday he holds a senior honors course in glassblowing for ten students. The fine art of shaping, stretching and cooling glass is explained to the students in a modern, well-equipped laboratory under the direction of Good and his two assistants, Joe Walas and Larry Williams.

As well as teaching the class, Good also supplies the UMass science departments with much of their glass apparatus. Good finds his job very challenging since there are no production line pressures. "Each day we are doing something different, and working at our own pace," he said.

The class Good teaches is premarily concerned with the production of scientific instruments, but from time to time he conducts an exchange with art students interested in glassworking to allow his students a greater exposure to the applications of glassblowing.

Good's work is not entirely restricted to the UMass campus. He occasionally lends his expertise to the other colleges in the area. He would like to see more Five College students associated with his shop, but so far has met with little success in that direction.

Good first became interested in glassblowing while he was employed in a dynamite factory during the Second World War. He then did glassblowing for the Monsanto Company for 19 years. Ten years ago, he came to UMass as a full-time supplier for the science department. He has been teaching the class for six semesters.

Local owner predicts longrange fuel crisis

By DEAN MERCHANT
MDC Staff

According to two Exxon station owners, Exxon believes the fuel crisis will last "ten to fifteen years."

The men, who asked that they not be identified by name said Exxon "has been getting five per cent of their crude oil from foreign sources," and "by 1985 fifty five percent of Exxon's crude oil will come from other countries."

One of the owners said Exxon must trade oil obtained in Mexico with Venezula. He said refineries in this country cannot handle the high sulphur oil that comes from Mexico.

He believes Exxon is now running their refineries at 85 per cent capacity, down from 110 per cent last fall, and that Exxon's inventory has fallen six million barrels for one month.

The other owner said this is partly because the government regulates the amount of oil that can come from different areas.

He continued saying "Exxon is now putting out the most fuel per company and are selling crude oil to other companies as they would have been compelled to do so by the government if not voluntarily."

He believed Exxon would like to build one refinery on the East coast which will cost roughly 300 million dollars.

In the past one company was trying to build a refinery in the Delaware basin, he said, and Exxon wanted one in Maine.

"But the government wouldn't allow it," he said. He believed with today's pressing energy problems those who objected before will not this time.

Another part of the problem he said is that Exxon, "finds it cheaper to drop oil off in the south than up here".

They said Exxon feels the gas situation will get worse and at other times they feel it will get better.

In 1967 Exxon told the government of a coming shortage.

Exxon just spent 300 million dollars buying the oil rights off the gulf coast and that "Exxon and Atlantic Richfield are two of the four companies involved in the Alaskan pipeline."

Registrar's backlog

Due to an immense backlog of transcript requests and grade corrections at this time of year, as well as a huge backlog of requests for certification of enrollment, the Undergraduate Registrar's Office will be closed all day on Wednesdays commencing February 13th and continuing through and including March 20th. The purpose of this closing is to allow the Registration and Records Offices to restore their files to proper working order so that students and other concerned agencies may be provided proper service.

Ticket refunds

Refunds for the Saturday, February 9 concert featuring Bonnie Raitt and the Pousette-Dart String Band will continue until Wednesday, February 13.

Ticket holders may present themselves at the Arcon desk on the first level of the Campus Center from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

The Program Council Social Committee and the Concert Committee request that all ticket holders make arrangements to receive their refunds during this time, as their personnel and stamina are wearing thin.

COFFEE FOR THREE... for some of the miners on picket duty outside the Redbrook Colliery. (AP WIREPHOTO)

British workers continue striking for second day

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Miners formed picket lines in driving rain and wind outside British coal mines yesterday on the second day of a nationwide strike.

Joe Whelan, a miners' union official in the Nottingham area, said he had been threatened with death after safety workers, charged with keeping the mines in operable condition, crossed picket lines.

"There will be bitterness, even between father and son, for years to come if this situation continues," Len Clarke, the regional union leader in Nottingham, said.

In London, police rolled up to a large power station to keep an eye on picketing operations only to find no one had shown up. The miners could not get a train from Kent to London because of wildcat strikes on the railroads.

Meanwhile, union officials and a group of industrialists met to discuss a compromise arraagement increasing miners' pay if they return to work. A special meeting of the miners' union Executive was called for Tuesday.

Coal provides 70 per cent of Britain's power needs. The Common Market's Executive said in Brussels the British have sought permission to ban the export of both steel and coal to other market partners. The commission must approve such action and British sources said it has shown sympathy to the request.

Executives of the state-owned British Steel Corp. have estimated steel production would cease by early spring if the coal strike lasts.

The walkout against Prime Minister Edward Heath's anti-inflation ceiling on wage raises started at midnight Saturday, but the 280,000 miners had not been working overtime and Sundays for three months.

Heath has maintained he cannot offer more than 7 per cent, or $5.70 a week, in addition to the basic weekly miner's average of $81. Miners want their average weekly pay raised to $101.50.

Heath initiated the Conservative party campaign for the general election he called Feb. 28 with a claim that victory would permit his government to settle with the striking miners. Labor party leader Harold Wilson said re-election of Heath's party would mean continuation of policies that have "brought Britain disastrously close to bankruptcy, industrial paralysis and economic ruin."

2 killed along Golan Heights line

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian artillery fire blasted Israeli military positions and settlements Monday along the 40-mile Golan Heights cease-fire line, killing two persons and wounding five, the Israeli military command announced. It said Israeli forces returned the fire.

The command claimed the dead included a civilian woman.

The Israeli authorities said the fighting lasted about three hours in nearly all sectors of the Syrian bulge captured by Israel in the October war.

The Golan battle was announced as Iraq and Iran were reported reinforcing border outposts because of a battle Sunday over disputed territory that cause more than 140 casualties.

Official sources said that area — near the Persian Gulf about 100 miles east of Baghdad — was quiet Monday. Irag and Iran issued conflicting claims over who had started the border clashes.

A Tripoli radio broadcast monitored in Beirut said Libya had totally nationalized the holdings of three American oil companies there: Texaco Oil, Asia-California Oil Co. and the Libyan-American Oil Co.

The broadcast quoted an announcement Monday by Libya's leader, Col. Moammar Khadafy. His government earlier had nationalized the holdings of the American Bunker-Hunt firm and took over 51 per cent of the holdings of all other major oil companies.

United States officials in Washington, meanwhile, confirmed reports that the Nixon administration is supplying sophisticated antitank missles to Jordan, the first Arab country to receive such U.S. weaponry.

The TOW missiles are the same type dispatched to Israel in the middle of the October war. The officials declined to say how many would go to Jordan.

A ranking Republican member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee said in Cairo that the October war marked "a turning point in American foreign policy."

"We are not about to throw in the sponge and walk away from Israel," said Rep. Peter H.B. Frelinghuysen of New Jersey. "But we don't want to be involved in the need to respond to a comparable situation again."

Monday's renewed fighting along the snow-swept 40-mile Golan front coincided with warnings by Israeli press commentators that Israel might retaliate for recent Palestinian guerrilla raids, and that some responsibility for the raids could be laid on Syria.

The Tel Aviv command said some of the Syrian shells slammed into the civilian settlement of Ramat Magshimim and the paramilitary settlement of Nahal Geshor in the Golan Heights.

A communique issued in Damascus claimed the Syrian guns inflicted "heavy losses" on eight Israeli settlements. The Syrians opened fire on the settlements after Israeli cannons blasted three Syrian villages, the communique added. The Tel Aviv command disputed the Syrian report of losses, saying there were no reports of casualties.

The mass circulation Maariv newspaper in Israel suggested in an editorial that the renewed Golan clashed of the last two days were connected to guerrilla forays from Lebanon into northern Israel.

Germans forget fuel crisis in wake of service strike

By OTTO DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — The automobile, temporarily dethroned by the energy crisis, was king again in West Germany on Monday as a nationwide public service strike crippled mass transit, air terminals and sanitation departments.

With streetcars, buses and subways idled in almost all large and medium-sized cities, millions of commuters forgot about soaring gasoline prices and lack of parking spaces and drove to work by car. Those lacking cars resorted to taxis, bicycles, walking or hitchhiking.

Rush-hour traffic on major feeder roads backed up for miles, creating scenes just the opposite of those witnessed in November and December when West German roads were swept clear of cars by fuel-saving Sunday driving bans.

With the brunt of the strike less than 24 hours old, government and union negotiators went back to the bargaining tables.

Public service workers, among the most disciplined in a nation with a reputation for labor peace, walked off the job just once previously and that was only for one day in 1958.

Their unions, backed by overwhelming pro-strike votes, this time ordered a series of selective or "focal point" strikes to back demands for 15 per cent across-the-board pay hikes for 2.2 million public service workers. They want a minimum of $66 a month for workers in the lower pay brackets.

Chancellor Willy Brandt's government, which draws much of its support from labor unions, refused in the first round of negotiations to go beyond 9.5 per cent and a minimum of 46 dollars.

Telephone communications were hampered in many parts of the country as switchboard operators walked off their jobs, joining streetcar personnel, bus drivers, garbage disposal men, airport employes and health inspectors.

Passengers at Frankfurt's Rhein-Main Airport had to carry their own luggage to planes, causing long delays and even cancellations of flights.

Ships which brought frozen meats, fruit or wheat to the North Sea port of Hamburg could not be unloaded because meat and plant inspectors refused to inspect their cargo.

Iraq, Iran have territorial dispute

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraq and Iran were reported moving up troops to reinforce their common border yesterday after a territorial dispute erupted in heavy fighting. More than 140 casualties were reported.

The border hostilities Sunday raised fears of a major collision between the two military powers of the wealthy Persian Gulf area, source of much of the world's oil.

But official sources in Tehran, the Iranian capital, said the frontier was quiet Monday.

Baghdad newspapers claimed Iran was rushing in tank and infantry regiments opposite Iraq's Badra border region. Reports in Beirut newspapers said Iraq also was hurrying in extra troops.

Iran, a Western-oriented non-Arab state equipped mainly with American weaponry, announced that 41 Iranian soldiers were killed and 81 wounded in Sunday's border clashes with the Soviet -equipped Iraqis.

Independent truckers' protest ending

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Despite pockets of resistance from militant drivers, the majority of independent truckers appeared yesterday to have abandoned their protest shutdown against higher fuel prices.

After 11 violence-scarred days that left two drivers dead, scores injured and 100,000 workers temporarily without a job, truck traffic was reported at near-normal levels in most states and vital produce was rolling once more to market.

Officials of the New England Produce Center and at several Midwest livestock markets reported receipts close to or above prestrike levels. Truck stops in a number of states began pumping diesel fuel for the first time in a week.

Full-scale slaughtering operations resumed at the Illinois Beef Inc. plant at Joslin, Ill., after a one-week shutdown. Deliveries at National Stockyards near East St. Louis were more than double those of last Monday.

Scattered incidents of violence continued, however, and some drivers pledged to continue the protest now or in the future, despite an agreement reached last Thursday with officials in Washington.

Highway gunfire was reported early yesterday in at least four states, and vandalism — mostly shattered windshields — in several others. None of the injuries was serious.

W.J. Usery Jr., the Nixon administration's chief labor negotiator, told newspersons that a survey by the Department of Transportation showed truck traffice had increased for the second straight day.

Usery said the Transportation Department survey included traffic counts and checks with state police and truck stops. It showed that truck traffic was 90 per cent of what it was at the same time a year ago, he said.

The settlement arrived at last week calls for a 6 per cent freight rate surcharge to make up for higher diesel fuel costs and guarantees of ample supplies of fuel, including Sunday sales. Some drivers insist they need an immediate rollback.

Some drivers' groups voted in truck stop balloting to continue the shutdown, then changed their minds after learning more details of the agreement.

Truck traffic was up in Florida as in other states, but a spokesman for the owner-drivers there maintained the strike would resurface.

"The truckers who are on the road today are fellows who have been shut down and are broke," said Ben Savage. "They are trying to get a few bucks in their pocket and then they are going to shut down again."

About 1,200 drivers met Sunday in St. Paul, Minn., and voted to continue the strike, as did groups claiming to represent more than 1,000 truckers in the Detroit, Mich., area. Officials in both states reported increases in truck traffic, however.

Indiana Gov. Otis R. Bowen called National Guard troops and extra state police patrols off the roads but said they would remain on alert if needed. In Kentucky, National Guardsmen remained on duty to provide escort service to any trucker who asked for it.

Oregon-style rationing spreads to other states

By DUDLEY LEHEW
Associated Press Writer

Service stations in the nation's capital and four states started rationing gasoline Oregon-style yesterday. Pennsylvania will go to a similar plan later this week, sources said.

Motorists appeared to be adapting well to rationing plans launched in Washington, Massachusetts, New Jersey and the District of Columbia. But New York State had a few problems.

"Right now the lines are exactly the way they were last week- about 65 cars long," said Mike Savage, an attendant at an Albany, N.Y., Mobil station. "I'm not going to stand out there and direct traffic. If he wants to do it, he should make it a law," he said of Gov. Malcolm Wilson and the state's voluntary plan.

The rationing plan is mandatory in New Jersey and Hawaii.

The plan originated in Oregon. It restricts gasoline sales on even-numbered days to motorists whose license plates end in even-numbered digits, and vice versa. Generally, motorists whose plates bear letters instead of digits can get gasoline on odd days and out-of-state motorists are exempted.

Maryland will be the next state to implement gas rationing. The odd-even plan goes into effect there today. And sources said Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania was set to announce he had approved rationing and it would become effective later this week.

A check of 65 stations across Massachusetts found the usual long lines of gas-hungry motorists cut about in half. Supplies continued to be a problem. In Pittsfield, only one of five stations surveyed was selling gas.

Most Massachusetts station operators were turning away people with even-numbered plates. Some said they were selling $1 worth of gasoline to even-numbered cars if they were almost empty.

"The lines were very definitely cut down," said Gerald McNamara, manager of a Mutual station. "It's an excellent plan that should have been adopted a long time ago."

In New Jersey, a slightly larger number of gasoline stations appeared to be open and lines were significantly shorter. A Union County station that had a half-mile-long line last week found only about a dozen cars waiting yesterday morning.

In the Trenton area, some stations said they were open and had no lines.

In Washington, D.C., some motorists with even numbers on their license plates lined up for gasoline although they were not supposed to do so.

In Seattle, a spot check showed that stations and motorists were heeding the plan.

At one station, a line of 25 cars had formed 20 minutes before opening time while another station had no motorists waiting for his opening. "It's kind of a lonely feeling after two weeks of lines, the operator said. "There's nobody out there."

Nixons hail Ellington's return

By DONALD SANDERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Duke Ellington returned yesterday to the midtown capital area where he grew up and played some of his familiar songs for several hundred inner city school children and Julie Nixon Eisenhower.

Mrs. Eisenhower hailed him as "one of my heroes" and brought a letter from her father, President Nixon, addressed to "his excellency the Duke of Ellington," and saying in part, "There'll never be another you."

Duke and Julie were on hand to give a plug for the series of performances, a part of the artists-in-the schools program, by pianist Marian McPartland in Washington public schools. It is supported on a matching basis by the National Endowment for the Arts and the U.S. Office of Education.

Miss McPartland started things off by playing Billy Strayhorn's "Take the A Train," the Ellington Theme song, with four members of the Duke's orchestra.

Then Mercer Ellington announced it was time to bring on the other piano player, his father, who played "A Train" again and then launched into "Mood Indigo."

The several hundred school students bused in from city schools applauded loudly enough to threaten the aging plaster at Hawthorne School, in a mid-town area a dozen blocks or so from the Ellington boyhood home.

Edward Kennedy Ellington is 74, and the jaunty bounce was missing from his walk, but at the piano he was as youthful as ever as he swung into "Caravan."

Solzhenitsyn rejects 2nd Soviet summons

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the target of bitter official attacks for publication of his book on Stanlinist labor camps, rejected yesterday a summons to the Soviet prosecutor's office. He said he would not appear for interrogation.

The prosecutor's office had delivered a second summons to the apartment of the author's wife, and Solzhenitsyn said he refused to acknowledge legality of the summons.

Following a furious campaign of official press denunciations of Solzhenitsyn and his book, "Gulag Archipelago," the prosecutor's action could be the start of an attempt to silence the author by arrest and initiating charges against him.

A summons was delivered on Friday, but Solzhenitsyn's wife refused to accept it. A new document was taken to her apartment Monday and Solzhenitsyn then issued a defiant statement to the prosecutor.

"In a situation of general illegality which for many years has existed in our country - and the personal eight-year campaign of slander and harassment of me - I refuse to acknowledge the legality of your summons and will not come for an interrogation to any state organ," the statement said.

The summons, requesting his appearance at 10 a.m. Tuesday, did not say why the procurator general's investigative division wanted to see Solzhenitsyn.

"Before asking legality from citizens learn how to observe it yourself. Free the innocent from confinement.

"Punish those guilty of mass executions and false informers. Punish the administrators and the special organs which have performed genocide exile of peoples. Remove from local and regional satraps today their unlimited power over citizens, the ordering about of courts and psychiatrists."

Solzhenitsyn apparently views the shifting of certain nationalities from one place to another in the Soviet Union as a form of genocide.

The office of procurator general in the Soviet Union bears some similarities to the attorney general's office in the United States and has broad powers to investigate and prosecute crimes.

The summons was signed by A. Balashov of the investigative division.

When asked about the summons, Balashov hung up the telephone without answering.

Subliminal perception question revived in television advertising

By G. DAVID WALLACE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - An advertisement for a memory game called Husker Du has revived the question of television advertising aimed at the viewers' subconscious.

The technique involved is called subliminal perception, and the Federal Communications Commission said "broadcasts employing it are contrary to the public interest."

In pre-Christmas television ads for Husker Du, the words "Get It" flashed on the screen four times, each time for a fraction of a second.

The episode presented the FCC with the first specific case of subliminal perception advertising on television. The commission said subliminal ads are deceptive, and referred the matter to the Federal Trade Commission.

The government response, if any, apparently will be to seek a promise that the advertiser will not use the technique again.

Experiments with the technique as a method of advertising raised concern and led to government inquiries nearly 20 years ago. Some spoke then of "brain-washing" fears.

A group of advertising men tried it out at a New Jersey drive-in movie in 1956. They said popcorn consumption increased when the words "Hungry? Eat Popcorn" were flashed on the screen so fast that viewers weren't aware they had seen the message.

Some viewers were conscious of the "Get It" flashes in the Husker Du advertisement.

A handful of the 200 or so stations where the ad was scheduled contacted the National Association of Broadcasters for guidance. The association, in accordance with its voluntary code prescribing subliminal devices, advised code subscribers not to run the ad.

The Husker Du advertisement was prepared by the Telecast Marketing Division of Premium Corp. of America, the company which makes the game.

Sam McCloud, Telecast Marketing's general manager, said the television ad was originally made without the "Get It" messages. The messages were added by another staffer who thought he "had something nobody had ever heard of before," McCloud said.

McCloud said Telecast Marketing asked stations to withdraw or alter the ad as soon as he found out the "Get It" had been inserted.

Since the government hasn't defined subliminal, McCloud said he doesn't see how the ad can be called subliminal.

The energy crises

The New Energy Symbol

Kissinger sees plan working

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger yesterday conceded that the United States is "the world's most profligate energy consumer."

But he said at the State Department conference on energy programs that the current conservation program here is working.

With the past four months, Kissinger said, government energy use has been reduced by 20 per cent, industrial consumption by more than 10 per cent, gasoline use by nine per cent, and natural gas and electricity in residential and commercial buildings by 6 and 10 per cent respectively.

"We shall continue to expand this program," he said. "We are prepared as well to join other consumers in pledging a sustained conservation effort.

Energy conference seeks rules of conduct

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A conference of 13 energy-consuming nations began cautiously yesterday, seeking some way to agree on "rules of conduct" for buying foreign oil without appearing to threaten oil-exporting countries.

Opening the two-day conference, U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said that bilateral oil agreements by individual nations could not solve the problems and might well make them far worse.

"We believe that it is essential that these arrangements follow agreed rules of conduct," Kissinger said.

The European nations at the conference have been pressing for an early meeting of both consuming nations and oil-producing nations.

Those attending the sessions include foreign ministers, finance chiefs and energy experts from the United States, Japan, Canada and Norway and nine members of the European Common Market: France, West Germany, the Netherlands, Great Britain, Italy, Denmark, Ireland, Luxembourg and Belgium.

Walter School, West Germany's foreign minister and president of the Council of European Communities, urged a conference of all interested nations - major consumers, producers, and underdeveloped countries - by April 1, one month earlier than proposed by Kissinger.

The conference participants have repeatedly emphasized that they had no intention of making this meeting into a conspiracy against the Arab oil-producing nations which precipitated the world crisis by cutting off deliveries to some countries last October and by sharply increasing their prices.

Arab oil shipments have since been resumed to most European countries but are still cut off to the United States.

Kissinger said the United States would seek no help at this conference in responding to the Arab embargo.

Europe relies on imports for some 60 per cent of its energy.

Kissinger warned that failure to resolve the energy problem by international cooperation "would threaten the world with a vicious cycle of competition, autarchy, rivalry and depression such as led to the collapse of world order in the Thirties." "The most immediate and critical problem concerns price," Kissinger also said.

"Current price levels are simply not sustainable. At these levels, the industrial countries alone will incur a current account deficit of $36-40 billion in 1974..."

Against that background Kissinger urged that the arrangements made by individual nations to secure oil supplies "follow agreed rules of conduct."

Rationing off to a good start

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most Massachusetts drivers and service stations went along with a voluntary gasoline rationing program yesterday and limited sales exclusively to cars with odd-numbered license plates.

Of 65 service stations surveyed across the state on the first day of rationing, most said they would sell only to cars with odd-numbered plates, because it was Feb. 11, an odd date.

But the stations got little chance to exercise their muscle, because virtually all the drivers who lined up for gas had the odd-numbered plates. Today, the 12th, cars with even plates get their chance.

The results were sometimes dramatic in a state where long lines at the pumps have become a fact of life. Many dealers said their queues were reduced by a quarter, a half or more.

"It appears most people are cooperating. This thing just might work," said Jerry Murphy, manager of the Johnson and Murphy Shell station on Route 30 in Framingham. Usually the lines go all the way around the block, but on Monday they only went three-quarters of the way around.

Under the statewide system, similar to ones adopted by some communities in Connecticut and New Hampshire, drivers with odd-numbered plates are asked to fill up on odd dates and those with even plates on even days.

"The lines are very definitely cut down," said Gerald McNamara, manager of a Mutual station. "It's an excellent plan that should have been adopted a long time ago."

Many station managers gave the customers credit for making it work.

"If a guy wants to wait in line to buy gas, I'll give it to him no matter what his license plate is. I don't want to get into any fights," said a station attendant in Northampton. But not a single car with even-numbered plates had pulled up to his pumps.

Some stations enforced the suggested $3 minimum by checking the drivers' gas gauges when they pulled into line. If the cars had more than half a tank, they refused to sell to them.

Will banding for energy lead to confrontation?

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The secretary-general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries criticized the energy conference in Washington yesterday, and said any grouping of advanced consuming nations will lead to "confrontation."

The official, Abderrahman Khene, told foreign newsmen has organization had made it clear "that the setting up of any kind of consumer group — any group of powerful industrialized countries — will inevitably lead to confrontation."

But he stopped short of specifying the kind of retaliation his group would envisage should the consuming countries form an organization to protect their interests.

Khene also declared that "Washington is the wrong place to discuss the oil issue involving the future of all nations. In my view it would have made more sense to go to New York," meaning the United Nations.

But Khene also said, "OPEC has clearly indicated that any exchange of views and information with the consumer countries on the oil issue could be useful."

He said what he expressed were "my own personal views which are more or less related to the official standpoint of OPEC as an organization."

Khene described the Washington conference as "a meeting called — or shall I say concocted — by the U. S. government, limited to major industrialized countries, the same countries which have provoked the oil problem as a result of the huge amounts of oil they have consumed and are still consuming in wasteful usage.

"The threats expressed by the U.S. government against the producing countries, in particular the Arab oil producing countries, are a clear indication of the goals the U.S. government is aiming to realize: to impose their views, using strong pressure on oil and other raw material-producing developing countries and to claim for themselves the unshared leadership in world affairs."

FPC denies N.E. power request which would hike customers bills

In response to the legal intervention of U.S. Rep. Michael J. Harrington (D-Mass.) and other petitioners, the Federal Power Commission (FPC) has denied a New England Power Company (NEPCO) rate increase request which would have hiked the customers' bills of its subsidiary, Massachusetts Electric, by 10-17 percent.

New England Power has requested the increase in order to provide financial compensation for the fact that its customers are using less electricity, due to the energy crisis and conservation efforts.

"At a time when Massachusetts residents are absorbing staggering rises in fuel costs, NEPCO is trying to get away with shyster tactics," Harrington said. "Because its customers are using less electricity than NEPCO had predicted, the company wants to raise its rates so that it will make the same amount of money it expected. NEPCO apparently feels that lean times for consumers shouldn't mean lean times for electric utilities."

Harrington said that the FPC decision only delays for six months to a year what may still be a favorable decision for NEPCO. "The Commission granted NEPCO permission to come back and re-file its rate request, and opponents of the rate increase will have to fight the increase again. Meanwhile, Massachusetts Electric has filed a similar rate increase request, based on a fall-off in consumption," he said, "with the state Department of Public Utilities, and I intend to legally intervene in that situation. In the meantime, at least, we have avoided that ould have been a 10-17 percent rise in consumer electric bills."

Allies of Harrington's in the intervention effort include the Rhode Island Consueers Council and a roup of NEPCO's municipal utility customers organized as the "NEPCO Customers Rate Committee."

The proposed rate hikes would affect the almost 700,000 customers of Massachusetts Electric, many of whom are Harrington's constituents, plus 27 communities which purchase electricity wholesale from New England Power. Nine of these communities--Danvers, Georgetown, Groveland, Ipswich, Marblehead, Merrimac, Middleton, and Peabody--are located in Harrington's district.

The other cities and towns affected include Ashburnham, Boylston, Groton, Hingham, Holden, Hudson, Hull, Littleton, Mansfield, North Attleboro, Paxton, Princeton, Shrewsbury, Sterling, Templeton, Wakefield, and West Boylston.

The new machine can make a dozen doughnuts a minute. Thayer considers himself "the doughnut man on a cold street corner."

Answer sought for month-end shortage

Predicting a "continuing cycly of end-of-the-month gas droughts," U.S. Rep. Michael J. Harrington (D-Mass.) called on Federal Energy Administrator Simon to implement new administrative procedures to end the problem of gasoline stations running out of their monthly allotments of fuel simultaneously.

The result of simultaneous closings, Harrington wrote Simon, "has been that my constituents have faced an added gasoline drought only indirectly attributable to the overall shortage..The Federal Energy Office should amend the Petroleum Allocation regulations to require that gas stations in any given area in the country receive their 30-day allotments of fuel at different points in the calendar month."

"If 25 percent of a given locality's gas stations," Harrington said, "were to receive their supply during the first week, another 25 percent during the next week, and so on, these stations would also run out of fuel at fairly staggered intervals. Consumers would then at least be assured that some stations in their communities would have full supplies, regardless of the part of the month."

In a statement, Harrington pointed out that Simon himself has endorsed the idea of neighboring stations staggering their hours during the 24-hour day, so that gasoline would be available at all hours. "I am asking that the same principle be applied immediately to correct this additional problem," Harrington concluded.

State gun control bill introduced

BOSTON (AP) — Sen. Jack H. Backman, D-Brookline, and Rep. Peter Harrington, D-Newton, announced the filing yesterday of strict gun control bills that would require the registration of all handguns and narrowly restrict their ownership.

One bill would allow only law enforcement officials, members of the armed forces, pistol club members, armed guards and licensed businessmen to own handguns.

Others would require registration of all handguns and call for identity cards to be issued for owners.

Five other bills would set up strict security regulations for transportation, ban advertising of handguns, and fund a publicity campaign for handgun safety.

Backman said similar bills he has filed in the past three years have been defeated by lobbyists from the National Rifle Association.

Increase to Sargent's budget may result in more taxes

BOSTON (AP) — The state Secretary of administration and finance has warned the legislature that any increases to Gov. Francis W. Sargent's proposed $2.79 billion budget for fiscal 1975 will require additional state taxes.

William I. Cowin told the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday that the legislature must withstand pressures from agencies that will inevitably seek more money than the governor has recommended.

Cowin said state financial surpluses are shrinking and that the state "has no capacity this year to pay for additional appropriations."

"We are spending more than we are making," Cowin said.

He said if more money is added to the budget "it will have to come from within" the proposed total appropriation, if new taxes are to be avoided. The secretary said "it's both an executive and legislative objective to avoid a tax increase."

Cowin outlined areas of major increases in the proposed budget: Various forms of local aid, welfare, higher education, children's services, the state share of state employes' group insurance, state police and programs for the elderly.

He said the state cannot expect revenue "windfalls" from any source.

Ways and Means Committee Vice Chairman Rep. Joseph D. Early, D-Worcester, told Cowin "it's inevitable that we're going into bankruptcy in the near future unless we do something to stop fixed items from growing."

Truckers' traffic picks up

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Trucks loaded with food and other goods began rolling back into New England yesterday even though some drivers in the southern part of the region said they would continue to observe the national strike.

Truck arrivals "are quickly getting back to normal," said Roger Pevear, manager of the New England Produce Center in Chelsea, Mass. "We're back to 80 or 90 per cent."

Last week, the produce conter, which supplies fruits and vegetables to many independent markets, restaurants and institutions in New England, reported that truck arrivals were off more than 50 per cent.

Pevear said it would be two or three days before inventories of food were back to normal, and during that time, "there may be some shortages in specific items, but they'll be short-lived."

For New England, the national strike has meant occasional shortages of Florida-grown fruits and vegetables, meat and dairy products.

On the Massachusetts Turnpike, a spokesman said yesterday that truck traffic was "picking up pretty good, not really normal, but getting there."

On Sunday, truckers who congregated at four meetings in Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts voted to continue their strike. Among their unsatisfied demands was a rollback of diesel fuel prices.

However, most of the truckers agreed to meet again early in the week to reassess the situation.

In New Hampshire and northern Maine, truckers voted during the weekend to put their rigs back on the road.

Report OK's Walpole prison head, but "not enough accomplished"

BOSTON (AP) - A report issued by the National Center for Dispute Settlement says Walpole state prison Supt. Douglas Vinzant has made some progress since his appointment last September, but "not nearly enough has been accomplished during his administration thus far." The center, affiliated with the American Arbitration Association, served as mediator after more than six months of negotiations between inmates, staff and administrators at the prison.

Negotiations should continue at Walpole, the report said, especially in the areas of bargaining training for inmates, a compliance mechanism for all agreements, a grievance procedure for inmates and staff and establishment of an ombudsman responsible to negotiating parties.

Inmates elected the National Prisoners Reform Association last July to serve as their bargaining agent in negotiations with Walpole administrators.

"Because NPRA has so successfully brought together inmates of differing racial, ethnic, minority as well as socio-economic reference points, it would be in the best interest of the institution to be supportive of their efforts," the report said.

It criticized Vinzant for "unilaterally" cancelling or postponing scheduled negotiating sessions and suggested that the superintendent should be more accessible to both inmates and correction officers.

The report faulted NPRA negotiators for "an unconscious acceleration of demands and a constant change in their priorities," confusing the prison administration "to the point of frustration, resistance and anger."

College cost up

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two Massachusetts colleges have announced tuition increases for the 1974-75 academic year.

Williams College said yesterday it will raise tuition from $2,800 to $3,000, room fees from $735 to $770 and board from $760 to $800.

Stonehill College said tuition would be raised $135, to $2,185.

Colleges told not to resort to marketing

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Colleges and universities faced with declining enrollments and increased competition among themselves should not resort to selling and marketing devices to gain more students, says a national education consultant.

Dennis Johnson, president of Johnson Associates of Oakbrook, Ill., told a New England regional meeting of the College Entrance Board here yesterday that such devices can "destroy and harm irreparably many segments of post-secondary education."

Institutions of higher education should learn to communicate better among themselves, students and potential students and should work toward redesigning programs for a broad spectrum of the population, he said.

College and university curricula should be based on "the demands of society in terms of employability and upward mobility," he said.

"For instance, there are far too many teachers versus the number of teaching jobs available," Johnson said. He said there is a need for doctors and nurses but already an adequate supply of lawyers in the country.

High school guidance counselors and higher education programs should concentrate on getting the facts out about job possibilities after graduation in specific fields, he said.

Enrollment is generally declining in colleges and universities because of a decreased birth rate, an increased number of institutions, higher costs and a questioning of the value of a college education, Johnson said.

Schools should avoid competing with each other for enrollment, he said.

"If colleges have to maintain enrollment or grow at the expense of another institution, we are destroying some of the pluralism that makes our academic system exciting," he said.

"There is an energy crisis," was Stewart Udall's thesis statement last Monday evening. We are depleting our natural sources of energy which are coal and petroleum. Means can and have to be utilized to conserve these resources until such time when other viable forms of energy are available. To prevent exacerbation of the crisis expedient actions must be employed by us which involve little time and effort. Perhaps the issue is better stated: We cringe and shudder at the thought of exerting our own energy. We raise our thermostats needlessly, drive cars where we could walk, and ride elevators where we could climb. Yes, we conserve our own energies but think nothing of conserving nature's energy sources.

The interior heating topic needs to be examined and elucidated. If the temperature of a room is kept around 75 degrees, a five degree reduction will not be detrimental to our health. After becoming accustomed to this cooler temperature and realizing that frostbite has not set in, we may find we actually possess more energy within ourselves.

A lowering of five degrees in room temperatures will result in a 20 percent decrease in heating bills. So, if all other arguments fail, encourage yourselves to think in pecuniary terms of what you will be saving.

It is ironic to observe people ardently lowering their thermostats to reduce the amount of energy they consume, then proceed to plug in a space heater. In order to save both energy and money, it is more propitious to invest in a warm sweater.

In one of the University's dormitories a few nights ago some rapscallion tampered with one of the elevators. The elevator moved continuously up and down unused all night. Since physical plant could not rectify the elevator immediately much energy was consumed wastefully. This sort of waste is not endemic to this particular dormitory.

Few will reprove me when I say that the weather has been chilly this past week. With the reduction of indoor temperatures we need to implement new ways of keeping warm. The most plausible means I have found is the utilization of our bodily energy. People come in from the cold weather outdoors, ride the elevator to their floor and turn up the heat to warm themselves. Picture this scene instead. It is cold outside; after entering the building walk up a cople flights of steps. This will warm you, then enter a chilled room to cool off. This will save both energy, and endless minutes of waiting for those who have legitimate need for an elevator.

Walking up and down steps will help ward off winter's excess fat so crash dieting will not be necessary when bathing suit season returns. While we are thinking of trimming our figures for those bathing suit observers, remember that walking is one of the better means of exercise, plus a means of transportation, and needless to say, a means of saving gas. By briskly walking, blood circulation increases and our bodies produce their own heat.

True, there is a crisis due to the draining of our natural sources of energy. This is not due to some presage inflicted upon us from above but rather from our own unforgiveable waste. I find it more propitious and pragmatic to look to ourselves for an immediately viable solution to the energy crisis. Instead of wasting nature's energy sources, try tapping personal energy sources.

Trucked up in D.C.

Would you consider truckers revolutionaries?

In the fall of 1969 a half million people marched on Washington to demand that the Vietnam War be ended, and that all the United States troops in Southeast Asia be brought home. A group of their leaders requested an audience with President Nixon. After all they were American citizens and were simply coming down to Washington to "petition" their government with grievances.

President Nixon would have none of that. At the time he said something like, "I will never be influenced by a small minority of activists. There is nothing that they have to say that I am willing to listen to under any circumstances." To escape the "locust" of the young, the active, and the hardened veterans of numberous peace marches, Nixon retreated to the inner sanctuary of his T.V. room, where he spent the day watching football games.

The next spring, many of these same people returned to Washington. Frustrated by a government that would not listen, they committed themselves to an activism in the streets. Occupying bridges, and tying up traffic, the peace marchers alienated the middle class commuter, the "every day" citizen, and the T.V. viewer throughout the community. These protesters, picked up en masse by John Mitchell's marauders played right into Nixon's hands. The peaceful demonstrations were painful reminders to middle America of a foreign policy that many couldn't understand. While many viewers (let us say in Kansas for example) suspected the loyalty of such people, there was nothing in their actions that they could condemn as unlawful. However, once these protesters "disrupted" daily life in Washington, the viewers saw "red". There was hate. There was a backlash.

Shortly after this pronounced "backlash", the anti-war movement, its morale at an all time low crumbled.

Some might blame its demise on the decrease in student activism, and the evolution of apathy. Perhaps. Yet there seems to be more than that involved; a sense of alienation, frustration, lack of hope, demoralization. Perhaps Nixon planned everything, threw "red" in front of their faces; baited them; and tormented them into such a final demise. We know now from Watergate documents that there were many subtle incitements coming out of the White House, to "charge up" the anti-war marchers; and subsequently manipulate coverage to produce a backlash by the middle class. The Nixon generation actually worked to divide this country. I really thought that the leaders of the peace movement would have been smarter than they were, rather than playing right into his hands.

What the Vietnam war did to the alienated pacifists, the energy crisis has done to the middle class citizens. Where once they were content to simply watch the Vietnam war go by as an unpopular but somewhat surrealistic T.V. show, now the present day realities have led to active frustrations. Such a pattern has been seen most clearly during the truckers strikes.

The truckers didn't like the price controls. Fuel prices were going up and they felt that they were being squeezed out of a decent living wage. They didn't like their fuel allocations; didn't feel they were getting enough fuel to do their jobs properly. The decided to strike. Yet what they did was more than a strike; much more. It will probably go down as being very similar to the retired soldiers marching on Washington during the depression, demanding pensions. Perhaps it will go even further back..to the Whiskey rebellion.

A rebellion. The truckers. Would you consider them revolutionaries? They actively used violence to stop "scab" truck traffic. People were killed. Every day life disrupted. Did Nixon dare call them subversives? Did he arrest their leaders for conspiracy? Will there ever be a trial of the "Teamsters Ten"? Don't wait for it.

Did Nixon retreat? There were no football games left, but surely he could have watched a basketball game or two; but did he? No way! Nixon met with the leaders. Said that he wouldn't bend to violence, but bend he did. He said he would not be compromised by blackmail - but he did compromise. Because of this, it looks like the truckers strike will end. Despite their use of violence, perhaps even in spite of it, there is something very bittersweet about the actions of the truckers these past few weeks. The violence was tragic, yet the reactions shown by the truckers; the frustration shown by these men was in no way unique. Now perhaps they can better understand such terms as "benign neglect". This time their southern region was in the fire. Next time they are driving their trucks and pass a student hitchiking, maybe they will be more prone to pick the student up, rather than run the individual down.

Next time I meet a trucker at a road side hamburger pit at four in the morning I will lift my hamburger in salute. Perhaps he will understand the sentiments behind the gesture. Maybe after the bitterness ends, and communication begins once again between different classes and age groups we will all see once again that we were played off against each other. Played off by a man who thrives on such division.

Policy preceeds talks

Recently a new housing policy was adopted by the staff of Northeast Area to combat racism. Unfortunately in the process of developing the policy the residents of the Quad were asked only to provide input at the final stages of discussion. They were not presented with the problem and asked to develop a solution; they were asked to comment on the proposal of the area administration. Receiving this type of "guidance" from the administration is reminiscent of junior high school.

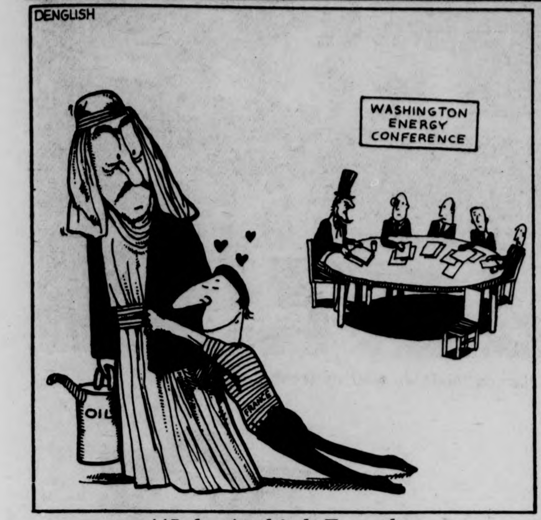
In recent years the Quad has become a more attractive living area because of coed dorms and major renovations. But at the same time it has retained an almost pure white character. In an effort to make the Quad more open to "Third World" students members of the staff formulated a policy this fall that would give those students preferential treatment for the next two semesters. One-third of all empty spaces would be set aside for "Third World" students. The committee that developed the plan had some student members but they were not representatives of the Quad at large or the area government. In fact the residents of the Quad were not consulted until the idea had been developed and was on the verge of implementation.

It is within the power of an area director to issue such policies. The amount and timing of student participation indicates a lack of concern for their ideas and hopes. Students were not asked to discuss the problem of institutional racism and propose solutions. Steve Dimock, area director, said that if this was done the discussion of solutions could continue until the end of the year. Mr. Dimock fails to realize that even though presenting the issue to students would have been time-consuming it would have been more democratic. Next even the input students were asked to give was a very feeble action. Input is most valuable at the initial stages of policy development; at that point it is easier to direct the development in a satisfactory manner. After the proposal had been written students were asked for their opinions. This is an exceptionally poor time to solicit ideas. First it is difficult to determine if people oppose the policy because: they are racist, opposed to others determining their living patterns, or take exception with parts of the plan. Second at such a late stage of development major changes are almost never made. Even the system used to collect feedback (through Heads of Residences) was not in the hands of students.

The area government would have been an excellent forum to develop a plan to decrease the institutional racism of the Quad. But the body was never consulted. Area representatives in most cases are elected and therefore in someway are the voice of students. They live in the Quad and presumably would be able to discuss the problem with their peers. The failure to present important issue to student governing does tackle important problems but at the area level their sole function seems to be allocating funds.

It may be the right of the staff and area director to implement such programs but they cannot hide that doing such is treating students a less than equal citizens. The job description for an assistant area director states that he-she shall "assist in setting University expectations, policies, and regulations; works closely with students and staff in all matters concerning development and implementation of policy." Certainly, the area directors office didn't work closely with students in the development and implementation of this policy.

In attempting to solve one problem quickly the area staff has seriously damaged student power. While they were solving our problem for us they were telling us that we could not or would not be allowed to determine our own living conditions. The issue of racism in the Quad could have been raised without presenting the policy.



"I don't think Frenchy has the right attitude."

New breed pre-meds

By NAT CLARK

If you ask the average entering Freshman what his major is, he will probably say, "Pre-Med". The University is chock full of Pre-Meds, as the coffee is "Chock-Full of Nuts", or could it be that the University and the coffee have something in common? No, Pre-Meds are not "nuts," or at least they shouldn't be. For years the typical picture of a Pre-Med was that of a student pouring over and over his books. His door was always closed and he was never "one of us." When I first came here, I heard the stories of the guy who got a cyst on his backside from sitting in a chair studying too much and of the two roommates, both Pre-Meds, who locked their books up at night and never but never discussed their work with each other. I've walked into offices to ask a question only to be hit with the line, "Oh, you must be Pre-Med."

Pre-med... another label

"Pre-Med" has become an epithet, another label. I'm tired of it, I'm tired of the image and the stories mostly because they are true. The world needs good Doctors, not readers; good people with compassion and warmth, not machines which provide merely facts.

The entire Pre-Med process, both here at the University and in the way in which Medical schools choose who to accept, must change or be changed. It is time that some consideration was given to the personalities of the people involved. If a student has always been a "grade grubber", fiercely competitive, not for knowledge sake but for status sake (status meaning "being better than the next guy"), who can expect him to be anything different in the future. Instead of amassing grades he will amass money instead. In truth, we are educating people in a way which fosters everything that is wrong with the A.M.A. and its principles. The time must come when a good student, who has a love for people and has done a lot of dealing with people in his college "experience", is sought after in much the same way that, solely to fulfill a quota, members of a minority group are recruited now. We don't need representation in medicine, we need quality and compassion.

This entire theory of a physician being a man of the people is nothing new or revolutionary. For years people have talked about "bedside manner" and the need to know and understand one's patients. Hippocrates, who wrote the oath that all doctors take, stated, "For where there is love of man, there is also love for the art. For some patients, though conscious that their condition is perilous, recover their health simply through the contentment with the goodness of the physician." We have all heard of cases of this happening, when a man is convinced by his doctor of a "will to live" and then recovers.

> "For where there is love of man, there is also love for the art."

So then, you say, as do I, why don't we pursue trying to find these types of people to be doctors. Why then do we put such a premium on close-minded, blinder-like attention to book ability? It is done because we do not question where our roads lead us. We seem incapable of seeing the cause-effect relationship between our country's plethora of computer-like doctors and the method by which we educate them. This all must change and must change soon.

There is a criminal need for doctors and yet the Medical schools refuse to accept more students. The Pre-Med Committee here refuses to deal with the issue of how to treat the student who is committed to people rather than simply to books. And the student refuses to acknowledge that good grades should be gotten, and large amounts of studying should be done, not just in order to get into Medical school but to do justice to the subjects which he or she studies. Yes, I am tired of this whole situation. I am a Pre-Med who is committed to people and has been for the last three years and my reality is very clear. I will probably never be allowed to enter the profession of my choice and of my ability.

Letters To The Editor

ICS vindicated at drinkery

To The Editor:

Reference to a letter to the editor dated Feb. 5, 1974 from the esteemed Irish Cultural Society of the 16th floor of John Adams Residence Hall regarding Irish Nite on Tuesday at the Chequers.

YOU ARE RIGHT! Although Irish and enjoyable, the group was decidedly not "authentic". Soo... in the interest of not repeating such B.S. (as they so succinctly put it), we have booked six (6, count them), "authentic" Irish bands for the next 6 Tuesday nites — every one of them straight from the old sod.

And, for additional absolution we will have a tub of suds waiting for each of the four signatories, Messrs. Honergan, Elliott, Reney, and Moriarty next Tuesday nite.

World change no game

To The Editor:

"You say you want a revolution"...Bob Parent in his Collegian commentary (2-11-74) seems to be daydreaming still. When he was in high school he wanted to be like the grownup college kids who were marching around, sitting in, protesting, and so on. Of course, this is understandable; its impossible to do these things in high school, one must wait until college age, when protesting is only natural. Unfortunately, it doesn't seem natural any more.

I, too, looked up to the college "radicals" when I was in high school, and couldn't wait to get into college and start protesting. Newsweek and Time made it clear that a college student of 1969 was a protestor; any randon student was surely opposed to the Vietnam War and all the garbage that went with it. Needless to say, there were a lot of expectations for a high school student. Well, I believe that being a student involves more (or less) than playing the role that society has defined for us as students, via Time, Newsweek, etc. One does not automatically become concerned with saving the world upon being cleared for registration. Much of the impact of the student demonstrations was due to the spontaneity and enthusiasm of it all. We can't artificially create enthusiasm, or deliberately set out to be spontaneous.

I guess my point is that Bob Parent's notion of changing the world is all too simplistic. (Step right up, get your ticket, become concerned! Save a tree! Picket a farm! You save all your coupons from your good deeds and turn them in for fabulous free gifts.) Please, I don't mean to belittle these activities — despite my apparent apathy I have engaged in a few of them, but I do find fault with the notion that one of these activities (picketing, striking, volunteering) taken together with some yoga and a glass of water will eliminate corporate control from our lives. If students are going to change the world, fine, but lets not make a game of it.

I am (along with some other students, I suspect) a bit confused; not too sure about how I feel except that Nixon is a (?) and Ford's no better. It's not exactly apathy. I believe there is a need for some student action, but I don't know what it is. However, we don't need a faded ghost from the past at our sides saying, "But it worked then! We can do it just like they did!" We need some fresh thoughts, ideas, and plans of action, something, anything spontaneous.

Fac-Sen; thank you

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Faculty Senate for a unique educational insight that I obtained while sitting in their meeting of Thursday last.

During the years 1969 through 1971, several students, myself included, worked very hard in trying to create a reliable and valid teacher evaluation that the faculty would be able to use in their personnel processes, in order to ensure that good teachers would be able to receive tenure and merit awards as well as good researchers. This effort involved many hours of work and student dollars, but we of the project thought that the effort was worth it; after all our education meant a lot. I guess that we were wrong.

The Faculty Senate in a 21 to 31 vote decided that student teacher evaluations should not be used in the personnel process. This was a vote on an amendment that SGA President Nick Apostola introduced into the proceedings. The faculty didn't even think to put it in themselves.

I would like to thank them for the insight that the faculty of this institution do not care about teaching: a realization that I have reluctantly accepted after five years.

Too many campus shuttles

To the Editor:

I am an irate student who is tired of hearing how great the UMass free bus system operates. I happen to be a poor unfortunate who lives in Brittany Manor Apartments. Unfortunate, because I am one of the many students in this area who finds it next to impossible to catch a ride into town or to campus using the UMass buses. Doing some research, I found out that these buses are very much obtainable by persons living in residential areas such as Puffton Village, University Park Apartments, Sunderland, and a host of other locations. Further playing detective, I learned about an archaic rule being used which disallows the UMass buses from extensively traveling on Route 116 south, which leads to Brittany Manor and Riverglade Apts. It seems as though someone is afraid our free system will take away business from other bus lines who travel the same route. As a result, UMass buses come to Brittany Manor only three times a day. This is a sad situation considering the excellent service I could be receiving if I lived in Southwest or Orchard Hill — mere fifteen minute walk to most classes. Buses for these routes arrive most frequently to give students a lift up the block and around the corner.

Something needs to be done. Instead of so many damn campus shuttle buses, there should be an effort made to get better service for those students who really need it. If you are one of the many students who will probably freeze while hitching to classes because of a lack of transportation, I urge you to write into the COLLEGIAN and voice your opinion. It's time for this vast and impersonal institution to care a bit more for its students — all of its students.

Police purloin privacy

To The Editor:

The other night an interesting event occurred that I think would be of interest to the UMass community. A friend committed the insidious crime of drinking to the point of intoxication. Upon reaching his dorm my friend fell three floors short of his assigned room and crashed out on the lounge floor. The counselor discovering this intruder, asleep in his lounge, immediately conferred with his assistant and they decided the only course of action would be to call the police and have this intruder removed! The campus police, our illustrious protectors, promptly arrived on the scene. My friend was quickly handcuffed before he could cause severe harm to the two armed policemen. A witness informed me he was wheeled out of the dorm on a dolly and stepped upon as he was in the way of the door. The campus police turned this criminal over to the Amherst Police who locked him in their friendly hotel.

I will not bother getting into police power and legal reasoning. The point I'd like to make is our right to privacy in our dorms. The police are not allowed in a dorm unless they inform the head of residence of their mission and see that the student is informed before they arrive. If there is trouble in your dorm don't call the police unless it is a severe emergency. Inform your head of residence or counselor (with the understanding that he or she will inform the head of residence). Involving the police unnecessarily can create complications and unnecessary problems.

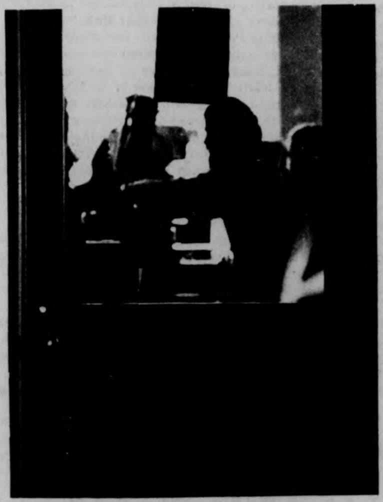
Peoples' Market: no shopping carts, Muzak, or displays

...packaged foods as well as fresh...



The People's Market...

What's in a supermarket? Frozen food and plastic bags all laid out in neatly patterned rows, each labelled for the thousand housewives who daily wield carts with crying kids through just one more tedious chore.

Peoples' Market is for people. It's not beautiful or neatly laid out, nor does it have a lot of frozen foods. In fact, there are no push-carts to play with because the Market is non-profit cooperative — too small to afford them.

Collegian photo editor Steve Ruggles captures the people of Peoples' Market at its first birthday celebration and opening night at the back of the Student Union on the first floor.

A note on grad school applications

Juniors in the College of Arts and Sciences who think that they might be interested in graduate study should begin preparing for the admissions process right away. The actual application process normally begins in the fall of the senior year, or one year prior to admission, but there are a number of steps prior to the formal admissions process.

The first and most obvious question to be resolved is whether the student wants to attend graduate school at all. According to Livesey and Robbins' Guide to American Graduate Schools, virtually any college graduate can gain admission to some graduate school somewhere in the section of the country he prefers." That all can, however, does not necessarily imply that all should.

A growing percentage of students find that a few years of work prior to entrance to graduate school (whether one works out of necessity or choice) focuses career plans, intellectual interests, and social commitments. Graduate students who have had this break from academic life are often more motivated, and may be more likely to know what they want from graduate study than the student whose contact with the workaday world has been limited.

Because a student has a relatively high grade point average, graduate school may seem an eventuality to him or her. Going to graduate school simple because undergraduate grades are high is an insufficient reason. People who have performed well in undergraduate school may not particularly like school not the prospect of two to five years additional study...especially since the Ph.D. is no longer a ticket to the job market to the extent it was fifteen to twenty years ago.

On the other hand, a mediocre g.p.a. (grade point average) should not automatically discourage a highly motivated student from graduate study. Students who conclude at the end of their sophomore year that they have "blown their chances" may have come to such a judgment prematurely, especially if their grades in their proposed area of study are exemplary.

Juniors should be aware, however, that grade point averages are still a strong determinant in one's admission to graduate school — high grades from this point onward certainly wouldn't hurt one's chances anywhere. For some students, raising the g.p.a. could make the difference between acceptance or rejection at the graduate school desired. For others, a high g.p.a. expands the range of choice.

Most schools place a high value on strong faculty recommendations. Don't wait until this fall to share some of your intellectual interests and goals with some professors. Most graduate schools require three letters of recommendation; a few require as many as five.

For a number of reasons, students have difficulty with this part of the application process. They do not know many professors and their professors do not know them or their work. Students realize too late that their relationships with faculty have been limited and unduly formal. They may have not worked with a professor for more than a semester.

Third World students and women often face a special set of problems when they need faculty advocates. Therefore, it is vital that students begin to think about who might be able to provide academic recommendations.

A large number of graduate schools require that the prospective applicant submit the results of entrance examinations such as the Graduate Record Examination or the Miller Analogies Test. It is the student's responsibility to know what tests are required by the school to which he or she intends to apply. This information is available in the CASIAC pre-graduate advising office, and from the graduate catalog of the school itself. Some students find that it is advisable to take such tests twice in order to get some indication of what the test consists of, and to reduce any anxiety they may have in the test situation.

Financial assistance is quite often a critical factor determining if one attends graduate school, and where one chooses to study. Juniors should be aware of the fact that applications for financial aid should be made early in the application process, and that the student is responsible for meeting established deadlines.

Students who are undecided about whether to attend graduate school, who have questions about specific graduate programs, or who would like some assistance in the graduate application process, may speak with Pat Rector, Pre-Graduate Adviser.

HELPS REDUCE HUNGRY MOMENTS.
These New York doctors discovered a food adjuvant called "MODEL-ETTS."
"Model-etts" does remarkable things. It helps you cut down your caloric intake by a natural automatic curbing of the appetite and of the desire for foods, resulting automatically in a reduced intake of food.
Before "Model-etts" was offered to you, it was tested clinically by the doctors on a large group of non-glandular overweight men and women.
The doctors carefully checked results, and here is what they found:
1. Weight losses of 6 to 20 pounds without any ill effects whatsoever.
2. 96% of the men and women who used "Model-etts" lost weight.
"Model-etts" is absolutely safe. It is a food adjuvant - not a drug.
So, start today to shed those unwanted pounds and inches. If your condition is glandular or organic, see your doctor. "Model-etts" may help you stay on the diet your doctor recommends. Ask him about it.
You can get a full month's supply of "Model-etts" for $3.00 on money back guarantee. In clinical tests, "Model-etts" was 96% successful. "Model-etts" may not be 100% successful in all cases, but you take no risk in trying "Model-etts" on our Money Back Guarantee.
Come to General Nutrition to get "MODEL-ETTS." The sooner you start, the sooner you may have the loss of weight you yearn for.

Sounds too good to be true, but it is true!
How Model-etts Curbs Your Appetite
In the opinion of the supervising physician, based on the average of weight losses in the clinical tests, his calculations showed that 1 Model-etts Wafer has the hunger satisfying capacity of 1 pound boiled potatoes or 4 eggs or 5 slices of white bread, yet it contains only 6 calories.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Cancer woman feels, responds emotionally, is not easily fooled except when she thinks she is in love — and she lives for love. Thus, the Cancer woman is on an emotional precipice, between knowing and feeling and taking the leap, the plunge, going into the whirlwind, stating this is life, it is my life and I feel it. She is fiercely loyal to family, is romantic but usually wants a ring on her finger and an assessment of property values.

ARIES (March 21- April 19): Concern with the occult, with mysteries, with financial status of one close to you — these are emphasized. You finish rather than begin association. You act in aggressive manner to clear away emotional debris. You want to understand complexities of individual who has impact on your life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lie low. Play waiting game. You are due for exciting, creative opportunity. But groundwork has to be prepared — you have to get lay of land. Leo, Aquarius could figure prominently. Legal type offers sound advice. Be receptive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Basic work details tend to dominate. Keep promises, fulfill obligations. If you give, you also will receive. One you care for makes gesture which proves a point. Display maturity. Don't expect emotional fireworks, but there will be warm fulfillment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pressure is relieved. You have additional freedom of thought, action. Chances for change and travel improve. Special relationship can be solidified. Member of opposite sex plays important role. Bring forth creative resources.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Check details; be thorough. Frank approach to situations, individuals is a necessity. Property values, expenditures and investments grab spotlight. You come down to earth and deal with practical matters. Get facts, figures on paper.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Movement, change, decisions based on new information —these are featured. Short trip, visit may also be on agenda. Nothing is apt to remain as originally planned. Know it and be flexible. Refuse to panic because relative speaks sharply.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on personal possessions, income potential. Family is involved and purchase of luxury item could be open for discussion. Utilize natural qualities, talent for diplomacy. Make intelligent concession.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid seeing situation in light of illusion. Instead, define terms. Get to root of matters. Pisces, Virgo individuals could be involved. Cycle is high and you can step forward with ideas, assertions. You will receive support from persons you hold in high regard.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What occurs could be surrounded in aura of mystery. Clandestine meeting might be featured. Check with one who is "behind the story." If you persist, answers will be obtained. Older individual, in position of authority, could pull strings in your favor.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Co-operate with Sagittarian. Some of your hopes, wishes may be fulfilled. Friends make known their feelings. Be receptive. Professional endeavors appear to be marked by success. Promotion, brighter money prospects and added responsibility are in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Co-operate in civic project. Make more people aware of your capabilities. Strike stance of independence, maturity and responsibility. There is room for you at more elevated position. Know it; do something about it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with publishing, philosophy and education. You can broaden horizons through correspondence, travel plans. Open lines of communication. You have right to live your own life.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are fun-loving, affectionate and have a tendency to try doing too much at once. Some accuse you of being a gossip. Others love to hear you relate anecdotes. If single, you probably will marry, with June and September your outstanding months of 1974. Married or single, you will be handling more responsibility, living a different life.

Skaters hopeful for world championship

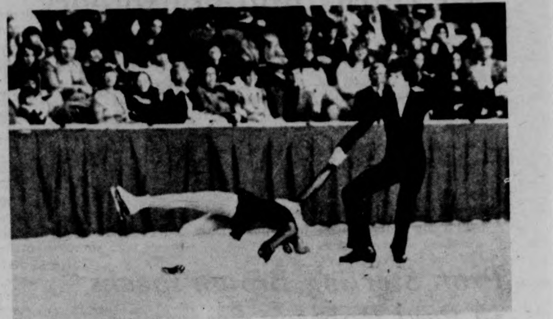
Melissa Militano and Johnny Johns, U.S. Pair Champions perform an overhead lift at National competition in Providence.

By KAREN CMAR

Gordon McKellen, the darling of the figure skating world since he was eight years old, won the men's championship of the United States Saturday afternoon. His silver trimmed, baby blue satin outfit shone under the mercury lights in the Providence Civic Center. The crowd at the 1974 National Skating competition was cheering for him all the way as he won the title for the second time. Terry Kubicka took second place with a dazzling free style program that included three triple jumps.

After a career of disappointments and second place last year, 17-year old Dorothy Hamill took the women's title. Janet Lynn, last year's winner has retired from amateur competition to join the Ice Follies. Dorothy doesn't have the ballet style of Peggy Fleming or the cuteness of Janet Lynn but she is a strong skater with a smooth pleasing style. Juli Marie McKinstry won second place with an interesting program and Kath Malmberg with spectacularly high jumps placed third.

The crowd at the Friday night senior ladies competition was enthusiastic. When Wendy Burge, who placed very low in the school figures, received low marks for a beautiful free style performance reminiscent of Peggy Fleming, the crowd went wild with boos and hisses. Twelve year old Priscilla Hill also captured the audience's heart. She is one of the youngest girls ever to make the senior ladies division and her graceful style and use of her arms have the quality of a future champion.



A death spiral performed by Tai Reina Babilonia and Randy Gardner who placed second in the pair competition.

Mellisa Militano, who won the pair competition last year with her brother Mark, returned with her fiance Johnny Johns to win the title again. Their performance was highlighted by a spectacular throw axle (where the man lifts the woman and throws her into a one and a half revolution jump). A young couple, Tai Reina Babilonia and Randy Gardner won second place with an unusually graceful and stylized program. Erika Susman and Thomas Huff took third.

Gordon McKellen, U.S. Mens Champion does a flying sit spin.

The Ice Dancing competition (which is similar to pair skating except there are no jumps, spins or lifts allowed) was particularly exciting this year. The event is usually rather dignified and even a bit stodgy. The Colleen O'Connor and Jim Millus first place couple did skate very conservatively but the Milliers, who were expected to win, skated a very unusual and romantic routine which brought them second place. The third place couple was the most surprising. Glen Patterson appeared in a tight fitting, one piece black outfit with Michelle Ford in a black skating dress with silver sequens covering the front and nothing covering the back. For music they had everything from Gershwin's Summertime to Turkey in the Straw. Slow blues was the main theme of the program in which she caressed his face and assumed some positions that made the audience gasp.

The competition was not without controversy. One of the most serious problems occurred when Charles Tickner fell three times and eventually stopped in the middle of his program. Tickner was in first place at the end of the school figures, ahead of Gordon McKellen. He claimed that particles of rubber from the entry area to the ice had lodged in his blade and this had caused his poor performance. The judges didn't believe it and forced him to finish his program from where he left off, rather than begin it again. His marks were very poor and he dropped to third and lost his place on the world team.

One of the highlights of the competition was the exhibition given by all the champions of the various events. The performance was hosted by Dick Button of ABC-TV Ann and Skip Millier, the second place dance team brought down the house with an incredibly beautiful dance number after which they were brought back for an encore. They were given a standing ovation and cries of "bring back the judges" echoed from the audience.

Gordon McKellen, Jr. was a real showman. He performed his exhibition number in a white satin outfit trimmed in silver. His show style comes from his parents Gordon Sr. and Leila, past champions, who have skated in the Ice Follies, Ice Capades, Holiday on Ice and Sonja Henie's Ice Revue. His confidence and technique comes from working with some of the best skating coaches in the country. After his exhibition program he was persuaded by Dick Button to attempt a triple axle (a three and a half revolution jump where the skater takes off forward and lands backward). The triple axle had never before been attempted at a public exhibition or in front of television cameras. McKellen did attempt it and almost landed it (he actually over-rotated it). It is rumored that he may try it at the World Championship.

The winners from the National competition will go to the World Championships in Munich, Germany in a couple of weeks. The prospects look good in the women's division. Karen Magnasun, last year's World Champion, and Janet Lynn who placed second, have both retired from amateur competition. That leaves only Christine Elath of East Germany, last year's bronze medalist, to oppose Dorothy Hamill who placed fourth. The competition will be tough in the men's division.

Dorothy Hamill won the Ladies championship.

It's a long way up

By KAREN CMAR

For four days young men and women came from all over the country to compete in the United States National Skating Championship. The competition is held alternately ir the East, the Midwest and on the West Coast. This year it was held in Rhode Island, in the Providence Civic Center.

The road up to the National competition is a long and hard one. Most competiters begin serious training at the age of six or seven. In order to qualify for competition, entrants must first pass certain figure tests which are very difficult and often take one to two years of daily practice. Those who have passed their fourth or fifth test qualify for the novice division, those who have passed their sixth or seventh test compete in the Junior division and those who have conquered the eighth (gold medal) test may enter the Senior competition. Pair teams and dance teams have different tests that include pair and dance moves instead of figures.

After passing the appropriate test, a competitor must enter a regional competition. The winners in the regionals then advance to the sectional contest (Eastern, Midwestern and Pacific Coast). The top three in the sectionals and the skaters who placed in the nationals the year before are eligible for the nationals.

Those who place first and second in the nationals become members of the team that goes to the World competition (held yearly) or the Olympics (every four years). If the U. S. team did well the year before in a particular contest, the skater in third place is also allowed to compete. There are no Novice or Junior divisions at the worlds, only Senior competitors may enter.

Baseball underway

By MIKE BROPHY

"Spring is just around the corner," said Dick Bergquist. Yesterday as his battery mates took to the floor of the cage to start their spring workouts.

Fifteen in all were on hand at the invitation of Bergquist who wants to give them the best chance possible before flooding the roster with also-rans. Eleven pitchers and four catchers, minus All-American prospect John Healy, were on hand and started throwing in hopes of repeating as one of the top teams in the country.

Last year the Minutemen finished sixteenth in overall ratings across the nation.

Two big question marks remain in the forming of a starting rotation. Will the arms of Craig Allegrezza and John Olson be ready? "It's early yet but I think that with great care taken both of them will be able to help us out a great deal this season," Bergquist said. Both seemed to be throwing with ease during yesterday's workout.

Allegrezza developed muscle problems early in the season last spring and was hurting for most of the schedule before undergoing surgery and receiving doctor's orders not to throw anything until yesterday.

"John Olson's troubles came up while pitching on the Cape during the summer but they seem to have passed on and he should be ready" said Bergquist.

There is no word yet as to whether John Healy can play as the medical services at UMass have not given him the clearance needed. "John is eager and his parents are 100 per cent behind us and him," commented Bergquist, "so now all we can do is wait."

Olympic head wants no "pro" collegians

By GEOFFREY MILLER

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee, said Monday that American college athletes may be ineligible for the Olympics if they compete as professionals in one sport and as amateurs in another.

He was referring to the new rule passed last month by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, allowing pros to retain amateur status in a particular sport.

The IOC executives have still not finished drafting their revised eligibility rule. But Killanin told a news conference: "Certainly the Olympic rules on professionalism of this kind are not likely to be changed in the future."

Rule 26 of the Olympic code says a competitor is eligible for the Olympics "if he does not receive, or has never recieved, any remuneration for participation in sport."

The IOC executives who wound up a three-day meeting at Olympic headquarters, expect to have their new eligibility rule ready in about two months. A draft will be sent to all IOC members, who will vote on it at Vienna next October.

He indicated Monday the new rule will be basically short, with additional by-laws to be implemented by the federations in their own way.

Women netters trampled by Springfield College

By LINDA MACKLER

The UMass women's basketball team disappointed its biggest crowd this season as Springfield College destroyed them 56-32 in NOPE gym last night.

Coach Jane Farr said, "We didn't play well. They completely out-hussled us. We had the same problem as we had in Keene; we were standing still." Springfield College took the lead on the scoreboard and on the floor in the first minute of the game. They had a well-disciplined defense and offense; whereas UMass could neither block points nor score them.

Only Cathy Huban and Jenny Edminster made any offensive showing. Cathy was high scorer with 10 points and Jenny shot 100 per cent from the foul line. Karen McAvoy of Springfield put in 17 points.

UMass passed like they were on a football field and this resulted in 24 turnovers. They looked sloppy and seemed unable to move the ball around Springfield's very effective defense. They committed unnecessary fouls. The team was obviously dissapointed with their performance and can only look forward to their next game to redeem themselves.

The junior varsity was also defeated last night, 31-28. Coach Ellen Greaves felt, "It was a tough one to lose. We started out cold and you can't spot a good team like Springfield College like that and expect to win."

UMass trailed at the end of the first half 16-8. They came back to tie up the score with 2:32 left in the third quarter when Sue McNamara was fouled and sank her free throw. With one second remaining in the third quarter, Cathy Dowd put the team ahead for the only time in the game with an outside shot. But Springfield came right back at the beginning of the second half and maintained the lead.

UMass made a good team effort in their comeback but unfortunately could not run their offensive plays to effect a victory.

The junior varsity team is going to Mt. Holyoke this Thursday night at 7:00 p.m. The varsity team will play next Sunday in Vermont.

team home and still win this one. For the Minutemen, this meet figures to be little more than comic relief. The Engineers, are a small, low scoring team and the quality of competition they present is almost club-level. Their average score, 120, is about 35 points lower than the UMass average.

Tom Dunn's original strategy saw nearly his entire team throwing cxmpulsories, but the loss of Whelan and Scuderi has changed that. The J.V. team will be playing the Lowell State Varsity at the same time, so no help will be forthcoming from those ranks. With as few as three men in each event, Dunn will just have to wait and see. If the Engineers come out scoring low, he'll order his squad to throw compulsories.

In weekend action the varsity was idle, but the J.V.'s played host to Dartmouth and lost by a margin, .35, (130.45-130.1), that over the past two weeks has become a UMass tradition. After losing the first three events, UMass came back and took vaulting scores of 8.0 from Dave White, 8.25 from Phil Aubrey, and 8.5 from Steve Marks. UMass also took the next two events, courtesy of Dartmouth's ineptitude...The meet provided a good chance to compare the Ivy and Eastern Leagues. The Dartmouth Varsity is currently second in the Ivy's, their opponents, the UMass J.V.'s are the backup squad to a team currently fourth in the Easterns.

Women skiers

By GALEN GOOD

Despite lack of snow up north the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference held its first meet Saturday at Mt. Tom in Holyoke.

UMass won the meet over runner-up Radcliffe by .3 seconds. Competition in the slalom came from six other schools: UNH, UConn, BU, Merrimack, Mt. Holyoke, and Wellesley.

Coach Mercy Wertz was pleased with the results after a somewhat limited training session at Berkshire East during intersession. With fifty-three participants, Betsy Hussey placed second, Helen MacConnel fourth, and Rachel Courtney fifth, leading the UMass contingent to victory.

This year five new racers have joined the team giving rise to hopes for a successful season. Snow permitting, a meet will take place next weekend at Temy Mountain in New Hampshire.

Broderick out

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League said Monday that goalie Ken Broderick was sent to the Bruins' farm team in the Western Hockey League, the San Diego Gulls.

A spokesman for the club said the move was made in order to give the 31-year-old Broderick regular work. He has been riding the bench while coach Bep Guidolin has been using Giles Gilbert and Ross Brooks in goal for the East Division leaders.

The spokesman said Broderick would stay with the Gulls unitl March 2, the final date for recalls by NHL teams.

Broderick's last appearance for the Bruins was Dec. 29 in Los Angeles, when Gilbert was struck on the head by a shot during the pre-game warmup and Broderick filled in. He lost 4-1.

Broderick played five games for the Bruins this season, winning two and tying one.

Conference confidence

By JOHN BOCK

Now almost everyone that passes through UMass hears about the plight of the Yankee Conference at one time or another. It has been listed by some noted periodicals as the perennial cellar dweller of the nation's seventeen major athletic conferences.

The reasons for this are many and varied and include monetary, academic and social problems as tangents from the same never-ending circle. Like it or not, many of the schools that participate against YanCon teams and would rather not mention it, have to admit that the conference represents the bulk of New England collegiate athletics. People don't mind identifying with the New England Region, but the Yankee Conference-never.

I spent the weekend in God's Country at the University of Maine in Orono, watching the Second Annual Yankee Conference Wrestling Tournament. Once again the wrestling boiled down to UMass, URI, and BU. The matches between contestants from these three schools were very good. The moves, for the most part, were well executed and there were some real nail biter contests that, when in overtime, highlighted the basics of wrestling - takedowns and escapes.

The University of Rhode Island, not long back from a twice around road trip to Pennsylvania and Maryland, showed awesome balance in putting nine out of ten wrestlers in the finals and crowning six champions. There was no doubt that they had benefited from the bouts they wrestled against Clarion State, Navy, Maryland and Montclair State. They were good on their feet, showed some mat savvy when they racked up more pins than any other team, and evidenced that they had learned a few "short-cuts" that give a slight advantage to the wrestler if the referee doesn't notice. They impressed me as a team.

UMass and Boston U had individuals that impressed me also. Cliff Blom, the only Champ for UMass, displayed good, solid, error-free wrestling - quickness on his feet, keeping the opponents head down in the mat for control and taking advantage of mistakes to put the man on his back. Steve Benson,-runner-up at 167, put on a show that highlighted a repitoire with physical power. Always agressive and using his prodigious strength to advantage, Benson moved into the finals with little problems. He was close to the champ until a mistake on his feet caused him to lose the takedown and the title.

Boston University's Tom Kryzak, 150 pound champ, displayed talents that can be summed up in one word - SMOOTH. What Kryzak lacked in strength he made up in putting his wrestling together and outmaneuvering his opponents. Many don't know that Kryzak gave Navy's Dan Muthler, the defending 142 pound NCAA champ his toughest bout, losing 6-5 in the last minute of the match.

The kind of wrestling I described can keep these particular individuals even with the best that the Big 8 and Big 10, the Pacific 8 and EIWA, can throw on a mat. These conferences are the breeding grounds of about 90 per cent of the NCAA Champs and some of our more successful Olympic wrestlers.

The NCAA Championship at Iowa State will beckon the ten New England Champions and their success will depend somewhat on their seeds. This year, I think that the New England :and more particular the Yankee Conference wrestlers) will continue to impress the rest of the nation. URI received votes for one of the positions on the Eastern Top Ten, making it the second year in a row that a Conference team was so honored (last year UMass was ranked tenth).

This should help at the NCAA. The other thing is that the wrestlers should go and display confidence that they aren't misfits, but men that have the skills and earned the right to go after the Championship just like all the other contestants. - They should support each other just like the other conferences do.

Bud Drinkers, can you figure this out?

Suppose Bud® came in 24-oz. bottles that cost 50¢ apiece. And suppose the 12-oz. bottles cost 25¢ each. A guy comes up to you carrying two boxes the same size. He tells you one box is full of 12-oz. bottles, the other is exactly half full of the 24-oz. bottles. One is worth more than the other. Which one?

Budweiser
Budweiser

ANSWER: Since both boxes are exactly the same size, the size or cost of the bottles makes little difference. The full box is worth more than the half-full box because it contains twice as much. (If you suppose each box holds 144 ounces, the full box would contain twelve 12-oz. bottles, and would cost $3.00. The half-full box would contain 72 ounces, or three 24-oz. bottles, and it would cost $1.50. Moral: Next time a guy comes up to you with two boxes the same size containing Budweiser®, make sure you pick the full box. Or you'll miss half the fun.

Attitude crucial as hoopers welcome BU

By STEVE DECOSTA

If, as UMass coach Jack Leaman said after the UConn game on Saturday, the toughest thing in basketball is to come back after an overtime loss, what is the situation after two such setbacks?

That is just the enigma that faces the Minutemen tonight as they host Boston University at 8 in the start of an extended home stand.

"Our attitude is excellent," remarked Leaman. "I was very pleased with our kids last night at practice. They held a team meeting prior to practice and went through some self-analysis and came out determined to work a little harder."

At this stage of a season, it is attitude that is most important. The basics have already been learned, and there is no time to rehash the things every player should know. What many games boil down to at this time of year is a team's mental attitude: who wants to win and how much they will put out to achieve their goal.

"Fatigue and minor injuries are hard to shake at this time of year," said Leaman. "You just have to evaluate yourself and get yourself ready to play."

And now the Minutemen have to get ready for BU, a team they beat convincingly in early January.

The Terriers are only 1-5 in the Yankee Conference and 7-10 overall, but the potential is there. BU won this year's Beanpot Tournament by defeating Boston College at Roberts Center.

But this BU team has undergone some personnel changes since the Minutemen last saw them, and they have been for the worse. Kerry Walker, a high-scoring guard, is scholastically ineligible, and Derek Reveron, a strong center, quit the team after their first encounter with UMass.

The Terriers still have some firepower left, mostly in the form of Ken Boyd. A 6'5 forward, Boyd is one of New England's better basketball players with a scoring average of 21.1.

The biggest problem for the Minutemen in their recent losses has been the lack of production by their bench. Therefore it comes as good news that Greg Duarte is back with the team and ready to play.

"He's ready to go," said Leaman. "A week off is going to hurt him in timing, conditioning, and execution, but he will be available for some important contributions."

Another possible problem lies in the knees of John Murphy. Injured in the UConn game, Murphy was forced to sit out several minutes of action in the first half, although he was able to return to action later in the game.

"Murphy has been bothered by bruised knees for some time now," explained Leaman. "It's a constant, nagging problem he has to play with."

"Most people expect the spectacular from Murphy," Leaman went on, "and they're disappointed when he isn't spectacular. But I think he's played very well and very steady. I think the reason we lost the two games last week was because we lost Murphy in important stretches in each game."

FURTHERMORE: The Minutemen have won all five games played in the Cage this season. If you care to go back, the last time UMass was beaten on their home court was on January 27, 1973 when they were bested by Syracuse, 70-67.

Al Skinner is now seventh on the list of UMass all-time career scoring leaders. His 24 points on Saturday gave him 1084 for his career, pushing him past Tim Foley of the class of '56. Sixth on the list and ripe for passing is Rodger Twitchell ('64) with 1151.

Skaters tangle with Huskies

By BILL BALLOU

The hockey team's bi-ennial trip to Storrs, Conn. is usually one of the easier games on the schedule, and always the least popular.

The Huskies, he-men all, play their games in an outdoor rink where no number of foot-warmers or pairs of long underwear can save some poor patch of skin from frostbite.

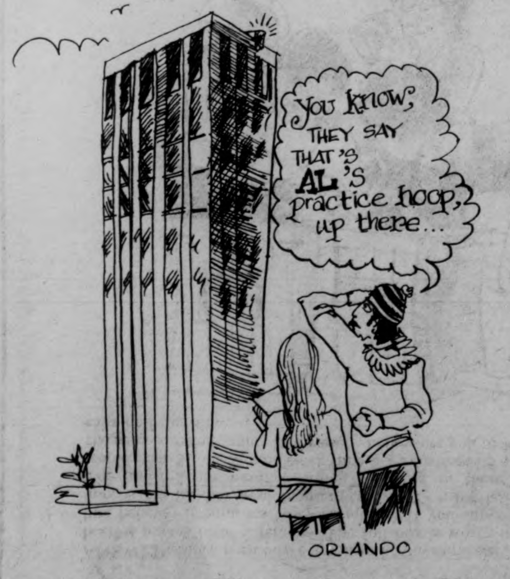
Things should be more miserable than usual, though, tonight. Surprisingly, Connecticut has a pretty good team. Good enough, in fact, to be rated higher than Umass in the latest Division II standings found in the Hockey Newsletter.

Since the Huskies can conceivably make the playoffs, this looms as a battle of survival for both teams. for that matter, the whole week is a survival test for UMass. After tonight's game, the Minutemen face their last two Divisional opponents before (hopefully) playoff time. It'll be Colby Friday afternoon and Bowdoin Saturday night and that's it.

Physically, UMass is so-so. Steve Nims returns from the knee injury sustained against BU, and that's bound to help up front, but Mark Sullivan still isn't ready and the news on Mike Ellis is that his shoulder injury will keep him out until the playoffs, at least.

Jack Canniff, who thought his defense played well at Yale, will keep the same pairings, skating Bill Mintiens in place of Ellis with Tim Howes and combining Dave Alesandroni with Brian Mulcahy.

INCIDENTALLY: It might be a good thing if UConn peppers the UMass net with shots. Standing around in cold can make a goalie tighten up. Chick Rheault played at UConn two years back and he's only too familiar with the delightful conditions...UMass won 6-1 at Orr Rink last year, 9-3 the year before in Storrs...



You know; THEY SAY THAT'S AL'S practice hoop, up there...

Hurt gymmen in light test vs. weak MIT

By WALT POWERS

Practice doesn't always make perfect. Just ask Gene Whelan or Steve Scuderi.

Friday afternoon Whelan was practicing his routines in the Boyden Auxiliary gymnasium and sprained his thumb. The next day Steve Scuderi was doing the same thing, and sprained his ankle. Scuderi's injury was the most severe, requiring x-rays, which fortunately proved to be negative.

Whelan should be fully recuperated for this weekends crucial bout with Navy, but Scuderi may be out of all-around competition for the season. With critical meets against Springfield and Navy in the next two weeks, Scuderi's injury concievably could spell the difference between a winning and losing season.

Both Whelan and Scuderi will miss tonights meet at M.I.T., but Tom Dunn could leave half his

Super Fantasy-Bowl

By WALT POWERS

(Editors note: Walt Powers, MDC Gymnastics writer, covered Super Bowl 8 for the "COLLEGIAN". The following report is reprinted from the January 5 issue of the "COLLEGIAN".)

Ron McBam sprawled in the dim, smokey light of the Blue Baron lounge in Houston's East side. At first his demeanor was like hundreds of other players I had interviewed during the past few days; courteous, to a point; talkative, but not revealing; brusque after the ten minute interview time was over. In the rauchy light of the bar, Ron McBam chugged down frosties, sucked in long drafts from his aluminum pipe and began to react like a normal human being.

Siezing my first opportunity for non-NFL monitored conversation, I pelted him with questions about eye formations, wing-tees and the thrill of playing in the Super Bowl. But McBam, whom Al DeRogatis would call a "human bowling ball" every time the fifth string running back entered the game, wanted no part of it.

"The NFL is a fake" he giggled "It's about as real as the meat in a concession hot dog". This last statement was pretty strong and I pressed for an elaboration.

"But surely," I pleaded, "any sport that is played by over 5,000 Collegians, can get Anita Bryant to sing the National anthem, and can give a fifty-year-old Mr. Normal "financial security" while running upfield on national TV, must be legitimate."

"Yeah, right!" he replied almost ethereally, "up to a point, in college it is. Some players don't even get paid. But football is a pretty wierd game. You put on weight to make you stronger. You run for miles to get faster. You plunge head first at the opposition and knock the bejabbers out of him. By their senior years, most football players are scarred, uselessly muscular human battering rams with brains like lime jello. The good ones are lucky, they get to sell their "Nominal Rights" to some pro "team". A few others exploit their reputations for financial gain, but almost all of them remain hopelessly deformed for the rest of their lives."

"Oh...come...on!" I was desperate now. "But the draft, those interviews with Howard Cosell, the battles for playoff position..." "Lotta crap. The draft? Sure it's real. The teams pick a bunch of famous names, offer them a lot of money for using the name, and gives him a job with the organization. Then they pull a bunch of derelicts out of prisons and mental hospitals, cover them with pads, and throw 'em on the field for two bucks an hour and all the dope they can shoot. When it's over, the real players are herded into padded cells, and the "names" come tromping into an antiseptic locker room and tell a dozen N.F.L.-approved broadcasters what a great thrill it was to catch that touchdown pass."

I clutched desperately to my last ace. How could I tell if this fifth string fullback was telling the truth? "If this great set-up of yours is so penetrating and pervasive," I screamed at him, then how come you never hear a bit about it?"

The "human bowling ball" hooked a long strike.

"The 'names' get paid for clamming up. Any time a sportswriter writes a column about it, he either gets promoted for creativity, or fired for insanity."

For UYA Volunteers: Poverty & Rising Costs - - "Action"

Caught in the cross-fire of high food prices, lack of gainful employment, no rent control legislation, and other problems, many of the poor and elderly of the city of Springfield face increased hardship as a result of the energy crisis. Providing a good excuse for landlords to raise the rents and to reduce the level of heating in order to keep down their heating overhead, the energy crisis has had a particularly negative impact on the people who rent private housing. Yet, the ramifications of the energy crisis are many. Wearing coats in their homes in attempts to keep warm; putting extra blankets on themselves at bedtime; and having increasing difficulty in putting food on the tables, people receiving social security and welfare have limited options for redress of their grievances. There is one organization that specializes in offering the kind of assistance that the victims of such avaricious business practices may seek: that is the City-Wide Public Housing Tenants Organization of Springfield. Working within this Organization are five University Year for ACTION Volunteers who are students from the University of Massachusetts campus at Amherst.

Candice Early and Thomas Bresnahan, UYA Phase III Volunteers, at work at Western Massachusetts Legal Services in Springfield.

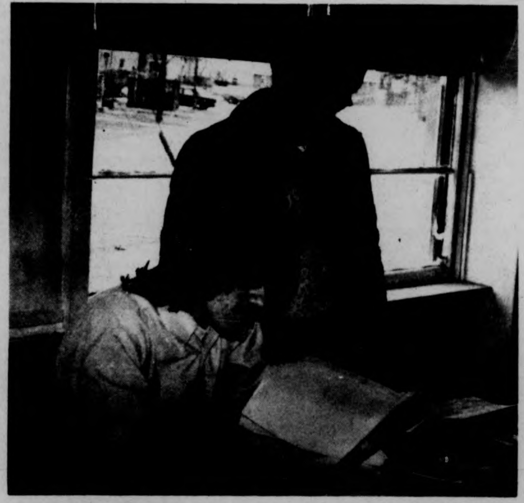
Although the Tenants' Organization is specifically designed to offer aid to the residents of public housing, the UYA Volunteers at City-Wide do not limit their services. With the advice and assistance they offer aggrieved tenants of both public and private housing, the UYA Volunteers of City-Wide consider themselves to be "carrying out the liberalized mandate of the state of Massachusetts" which accrues increased support for tenants and their grievances.

The University Year for ACTION Volunteers at City-Wide include Patrick Callahan, Sharon Callahan, George Maldonado, Cindy Spearing and Steve Comolli who are active in filing complaints on behalf of tenants and advising them of their legal rights as tenants vis-a-vis questionable practices on the part of the landlords and the City Housing Authority.

In keeping with their intent to help the tenant, the UYA Volunteers have been instrumental in the construction of a grievance procedure where any differences between the tenant(s) and the Housing Authority can be taken before a Grievance Hearing Panel. The panel consisting of seven members — 3 tenants, 3 housing authority representatives and 1 impartial party — is empowered to make binding decisions. An attempt to solve the problems without going to court, the grievance procedure offers tenants added protection in situations where eviction is likely to occur and also offers an alternative to the costly and time consuming process of taking grievances to the housing court.

Effective at the end of January 1974, the grievance procedure will permit tenants to have a greater voice and increased participation with regards to the management of public housing.

Represented by the City-Wide Public Housing Tenants' Organization, the tenants of public housing in Springfield entered into negotiations with the Board of Commissioners for Public Housing for a new lease between the tenants and the Director of the Housing Authority. Having lasted over six months negotiations were facilitated by the UYA Volunteers who acted on behalf of the tenants in an advisory capacity.



Steve Comolli and David Smith, UYA Volunteers at City-Wide Public Housing Tenants' Organization, discuss strategies for tenant objectives.

The UYA Volunteers have further assisted Springfield tenants by developing proposals for several social service projects. In June of 1973, following the submission of a proposal by City-Wide Public Housing Tenants Organization, the Department of Community Affairs in Boston approved a planned parenthood project in Springfield. It was designed not only to offer medical services, but to give educational advice on health-related concerns. The impoverished state of many of the tenants had forced them to forego medical treatment. The project was most valuable in its uncovering and treating of health problems, including some malignant tumors and infections.

In October of 1973, a proposal for a day care center was approved by the Department of Community Action which made it possible to construct the "Springfield Day Nursery."

The UYA Volunteers have made their assistance available to the elderly also. In response to the assaults on elderly citizens in the vicinities of their own neighborhoods, the UYA Volunteers conducted a survey of a percentage of the elderly about cases of abuse and lack of security and presented their findings to the mayor of Springfield. The efforts of the UYA Volunteers and others helped secure city funds which provided for additional security in the neighborhoods of the elderly citizens of Springfield.

The Volunteers spend much of their time organizing tenants and collecting pertinent housing data to be distributed to the tenants. Such energies have resulted in the publication of newsletters, pamphlets about new legislative enactments that are related to people renting housing, and booklets that provide resource data on how to organize, "Who's Who" in housing.

The value of the work of the UYA Volunteers can be measured not only by their aid to the tenants, but

UYA Initiates Phase IV Recruitment

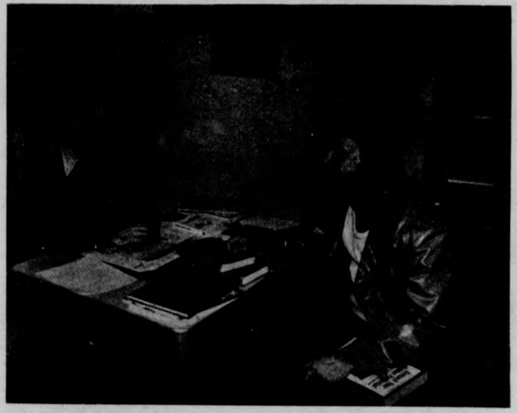
University Year for ACTION has begun its recruitment drive for Volunteers who will contribute their services in the communities of the Western Massachusetts area. This year, UYA will recruit between 70 - 100 Volunteers for positions in the areas of legal services, mental health, education, housing, environmental protection and social services.

A national volunteer service program, University Year for ACTION offers students an opportunity to receive up to a full-year's academic credit for field experience education. To date, UYA has recruited and placed over 275 students (in Phases I - V) from the five college area who have worked in various capacities in such places as Northampton State Hospital, Channel 57, Worcester Juvenile Court, Neighborhood Youth Corps, City-Wide Public Housing Tenants' Organization, Urban League, Department of Environmental Engineering, and other community agencies. Currently, there are 27 agencies among which a Volunteer may choose to be placed.

All UYA Volunteers are afforded on-the-job training by the agency personnel in addition to the field related course-work and field assistance offered by the UMass faculty and staff of the UYA office. Work in an agency provides the Volunteer the opportunity to combine the theory of academic with actual practice through experiental education.

Volunteers are eligible for: VISTA Medical Insurance which covers medical care and emergency dental care; an optional life insurance policy for $10,000, and a weekly stipend for the duration of the Volunteer's service, depending upon whether the Volunteer chooses to work full or part time, or on or off campus.

The first meeting for Phase VI recruitment will be held on Tuesday, February 19th. All interested persons are welcome. For additional information call 545-1381.



Tony DiGilio and Danny Hobart, UYA Volunteers at Neighborhood Youth Corps in Springfield, develop lesson plans.

William Glazer and Paul Freitas are two UYA Phase V Volunteers who work at Northampton State Hospital.

Action Appoints New Director For New England Region

Vinette E. Jones, formerly head of ACTION Volunteer Recruitment in the northeastern United States, has been appointed to the position of ACTION Regional Director for New England.

Within the capacity of her new position in ACTION — the voluntary service agency which administers domestic and international federal volunteer programs — Ms. Jones will direct the operation of all ACTION domestic volunteer programs in Region I.

A native of Red Bank, New Jersey, Ms. Jones is a graduate of Bowie State College in Bowie, Maryland. She received a master's degree in education from George Washington University in Washington, D.C. in 1959.

Ms. Jones first began working with ACTION in 1966 following an eleven-year teaching career in the Baltimore and Sunderland, Maryland public schools. Initially, she was a member of the VISTA recruitment staff in Washington. To date, she has worked with ACTION in the capacities of program assistant, chief of recruitment, chief of professional services, and regional recruitment director which have taken her to Chicago, the Great Lakes Region and Boston.

On January 1, 1974, Ms. Jones assumed her new dual responsibilities for domestic program operations, and recruitment and communications efforts. She is based in the Region I headquarters located in Boston at the John W. McCormack Federal Building.

in the fact, that they are doing much groundwork which is recorded that can be of invaluable assistance to tenants groups anywhere.

The most current and successful effort of the Volunteers has resulted in rent rebates for the tenants. The rebates followed the tenants' investigation of the "Brook Amendment" (Chapter 1114), the state version of the federal law, after they were notified by the Volunteers of its existence. The amendment specifies that rents should not exceed 25 per cent of the income of public housing tenants. Pressure from the public housing tenants of Springfield, forced the Springfield public officials and state representatives to give an explanation of the bill and to pass it through the House, Ways and Means Committee. The result was that money was appropriated to go to the Department of Community Action that would be returned to tenants who paid over 25 per cent of their incomes. The rebates are retroactive until February 15, 1972.

Undoubtedly, the activity of the UYA Volunteers at City-Wide Public Housing Tenants Organization has placed them in the cross fire which tenants, for many years, have had to confront unaided. Indeed, according to one UYA Volunteer, this is exactly the reason she chose City-Wide as the agency in which to work: "It puts you right on the line between the poor people and the state government, and that's where the ACTION is!"

Dr. Marie V. Wood Named Acting Director of AEP

Dr. Marie V. Wood has recently been named Acting Director of ACTION Education Programs following Mr. Jerry Brady's departure for a position in the Office of Policy and Program Development.

An educator, Dr. Wood served six years as Assistant to the President of Hampton Institute prior to her joining ACTION in 1970. Dr. Wood has held various other positions in higher education and the U.S. Congress. She was a faculty member at Howard University for nine years; a Research Associate and Legislative Aid to the late New York Representative, Adam Clayton Powell; and Director of the Experimental College of the Virgin Islands from 1961-1964. A holder of a Ph.D. in Economic History from American University, Dr. Wood has also worked as a member of the faculty of Delaware State College in Dover.

As a part of the Domestic Operations staff, Dr. Wood will be directly involved with the administration of the University Year for ACTION program.

Changing tires, changing an image

By BILL GONET

It now appears that one of the few remaining strongholds of male exclusivity, the service station, is being infiltrated by liberated and mechnically-inclined women. Equally at home behind the wheel of a tow truck as she is under the grease rack, Ms. Lee Nicoloff is one of the key personnel at the Plaza Shell station on route 9.

Disenchanted with the choice of conventional part-time jobs usually open to women, Lee said that "an interest in learning about car mechanics and the challenge of working in a field supposedly closed to women" prompted her to seek a job as a gas station attendant. Originally hired merely to pump gas and check oil, Lee now performs service calls with the station wrecker, greases cars, and adjusts fan belts.

She acquired this mechanical competency on her own by watching mechanics during lulls in the gas pump traffic. In fact, some of her first encounter with sexist conceptions of male superiority involved a few mechanics who were reluctant to reveal to her the big mysteries that lay under the hood. With a little help from her friends, however, "the big mystique surrounding mechanics has been cleared up."

Despite her proven competency, though, a lot of male customers still persist in carrying on their little charades. Amusingly, Lee recalled her encounters with male drivers who get out of the car to show her where the dip stick was. Some even double-checked her oil readings, braved dripping grease, water, and sludge, as they made sure that she greased their car correctly.

"Equally as irritating," Lee said, "are women who insist on having a male employee attend to some mickey mouse repair job like fixing a flat instead of asking me to do it."

One of Lee's main gripes, however, has nothing to do with sexist attitudes. "A lot of customers," she said, "take out their frustration on the inconveniences and problems resulting from the gas shortage on the attendant. They should have a little empathy with our situation; they should realize that the solution to this problem would be reached by angry letters directed at congressmen and oil company big-whigs, rather than angry grimaces directed at gas station attendants."

Lee concluded with the following summary of her impressions about working at the Plaza Shell station. "I enjoy being an example of female competence in a field erroneously thought to be the exclusive province of men. However, I'd be much happier if my presence at the gas pump stirred less controversy. That would be an indication to me that sexist misconceptions about male and female roles were disappearing."

Inmates "go to school"

By MICKIE HALL

The University Without Walls prison project is a program of higher education designed for inmates who are "lifers" or "long termers". The program offers inmates who have completed or almost completed existing in-prison college courses an opportunity to complete a B.A. degree.

"Dr. Johnnetta Cole, anthropology professor with the Afro-American studies department, has got to be given most of the credit for starting this project at Norfolk Prison," according to Steven Bengis, the prison project coordinator.

Dr. Cole realized that the "long termers", who are not eligible for existing pre-release programs, had no way to earn a B.A. degree after completing in-prison college courses.

Nine inmates are presently involved in the UWW prison project at Norfolk. These men are all in their twenties. Two of the students, Gregory Saunders, coordinator for UWW at Norfolk, and Insan Sauti, were responsible for making the project a reality because of their enthusiasm.

The inmates are taught by seven UMass students and faculty members. Dr. Johnnetta Cole, Steven Bengis, Dr. Dalton Jones (psychology professor), Jackie Stanton (UWW faculty and staff member), and Dr. Robert Cole (economics professor) are just a few of them.

The project centers around classroom work, individualized study, and credit, while UMass assists with financial aid. The university covers tuition and fees for the nine inmates and also pays for half their books and supplies.

"The enthusiasm of the inmates is the most rewarding part of this program", said Bengis. "They are anxious to learn as much as they can from anyone who is willing to spend the time to teach them."

Solzhenitsyn arrested

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet police muscled into a Moscow apartment Tuesday and arrested Nobel Prize author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the dissident writer's wife reported.

She said that Solzhenitsyn was confronted by seven "rough" men just inside the door of her apartment. A counselor from the state prosecutors' office named Sverev showed a document authorizing use of force to take him into custody, she added.

"I won't go," she said Solzhenitsyn told them. "I have explained why. I won't go unless you take me by force."

Mrs. Alexander Solzhenitsyn talked by phone to a Boston College professor at his Wayland home yesterday. Page 14.

UMass Prof. Lasloz Tikos, who will publish a literary biography of the Russian author this year, comments on the arrest. Page 13.

The mother of Natalya Svetlova, the novelist's wife, said the police then dragged him off. Mrs. Solzhenitsyn said the prosecutor's office advised her four hours later that Solzhenitsyn was under arrest.

Since publication in the West of his new book on the Soviet labor camp system, "Gulag Archipelago," Solzhenitsyn has been attacked in the press, criticized on radio and television and charicatured in posters as an enemy of "everything the Soviet Union holds dear."

Solzhenitsyn has twice refused to honor summonses to appear for questioning. "I refuse to acknowledge the legality of your summons and will not come for an interrogation to any state organ," he said in a statement Monday.

Tuesday's action could be the first step toward a trial for "anti-Soviet slander." Or he could be released soon in hopes his detention would serve as a warning to stop making statements to Western newsmen.

The maximum sentence for anti-Soviet slander is seven years in a labor camp and five additional years in Siberian exile. If he is to be tried, the author could be held for investigation for up to nine months.

There was no official confirmation of the arrest.

A labor camp victim under Stalin, later rehabilitated, Solzhenitsyn based his latest book on his own experience and conversations with fellow inmates in the Stalinist camps.

Solzhenitsyn, rated in the West as Russia's greatest living writer, has been expelled from the Soviet Writers' Union on grounds that he presents a gloomy, critical picture of Soviet life. He has been denied all the normal writer's privileges, includeing a residence permit for Moscow. But his wife has her apartment there and he usually stays with her.

Irene Boch

Smiling for dollars

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Staff

Irene Boch sits smiling behind a row of iron bars. She is not being incarcerated for misuse of funds; she is there to give you money. Irene is a cashier for the Student Union check cashing department which may be the only place where you get more for a dime service charge than ten cents.

Irene is an oldtimer. She's been in the money-lending business here for four years. On an average eight-hour day, she smiles at more than 400 student and faculty customers.

It's Friday, payday, and the "lunch-hour pile up" is filling the corridor near the check-cashing windows.

"Good Morning!" John Bena scatters ten pennies and a check on the counter.

"Wrong date, you're one day ahead of yourself."

"Sorry, I asked someone and he lied to me."

The first and second line amounts match. John's been a good boy — no bad checks. So he clutches a wad of 25 singles in his hand and patters off in the 15-degree New England weather.

"Beautiful football weather." Irene is a fall sports fan, and she sees the greats and the near-greats of UMass sports through the bank bars. Imagine slipping Tim Berra a twenty.

Sometimes the students who come to Irene want more than money: they want advice. What to get mother for Christmas? A sweater? A book? For some at least, Irene takes the worry out of problems such as these.

But most UMies cash checks for specific reasons: groceries, movies, etc. "I'd like to cash a check, please."

"Do you have your telephone number, campus address? Good girl!"

"Thanks, I just need a cup of coffee!"

Energy conferees split over policy

By SPENCER DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 13-nation Washington energy conference searched yesterday for a compromise common energy policy for the major consuming countries.

A deepening split within the nine-nation European Economic Community cast a cloud over the meeting, which began Monday and was to end late Tuesday.

The key question of a continuing energy action group to prepare for further meetings with the less developed nations and the oil-producing countries plagued the final hours.

As the ministers meet, the Middle East continues to boil, and a solution to the energy crisis may require more of just what is lacking — time. An Associated Press analysis, Page 10.

The United States and most of the EEC favored the preparatory group, which France opposed.

American and German officials would not rule out the possibility that the meeting could spill over to a third day.

French diplomatic sources, however, said they expected a communique would be issued at the end of the conference as scheduled, but indicated they might not sign the joint statement if it contained provisions for the coordinating group.

The United States waited for the Europeans, who met in secret caucus to pull their separate positions together.

ACTION reps to recruit here

By JOANN DOMINICK

ACTION programs offers individuals a chance to make positive and effective change, in the United States and 68 overseas countries. Representatives of ACTION will be on campus Feb. 19-21, seeking applicants for summer and fall programs.

New England Regional Representative, Todd Baumgardt, said the recruiting drive last November was extremely successful.

During the three days they received 97 applications. "Due to personal interviews we had to prolong our stay an extra day. UMass is number one in the region for applicants," Baumgardt said.

Russ Staples, New England Agriculture Representative, said he was "especially pleased" by the response from the agricultural school.

Many countries request these individuals. Agriculture students are practically guaranteed admission to the Peace Corps. In some cases they can write the ticket for where they want to go.

Continuing, he said, "Many countries are now requesting individuals with associate degrees in agriculture. Overall in the last eight months there has been a 400 per cent increase in the request for agriculture students.

Most ACTION programs require at least a B.A. degree and that applicants be at least twenty. The exceptions are farming experience, advanced construction or mechanical skills.

Volunteers skills are needed in the areas of computer science, engineering and geology.

Further requests are in medical and health related fields. Needed are medical laboratory technicians, nurses and public health educators to mention a few.

Baumgardt said people may not realize that ACTION is involved in alternative education forms. Another is special education, i.e., mentally retarded, handicapped, and child care centers.

Staples continued, "Another area, many people probably aren't aware of is the field of music. Some volunteers have helped organize national symphonies and train musicians. A recent example is in Costa Rica."

According to both representatives, the ACTION program is expanding under its new director, Mike Balzono.

"Balzono has expanded VISTA and other domestic programs," Staples explained. Also six new countries have been added to the Peace Corps. More than other directors, he has expressed interest in the domestic area.

ACTION programs offer many advantages during services such as excellent medical and insurance plans," he said.

Staples said that after-service benefits are a readjustment allowance, the job experience gained. Some graduate schools offer credit for ACTION service.

Noting that many individuals may feel idealistic about service, both representatives agreed ACTION needs people with a realistic attitude.

Concerning VISTA, Baumgardt stated, "Most volunteers are community liasons. As a result things move slowly. They don't change overnight. Patience is an important virtue. If you find say, two potential community leaders you realize that work will continue after you leave. The community will have become independent and self-reliant."

In the Peace Corps countries Staples said there may be a feeling of frustrations at times. He said life may be paced much slower; there is little privacy. Yet it really is a rewarding experience, he says.

"You may effect attitudes, such as not accepting the fact that poverty is the only way of life. Parents may realize their children can have a better standard of living," said Staples.

In applying for service it is important that people realize they must adjust to the culture of the nation where they work.

"A major example of cultural differences is the position of women. Many nations do not agree with equality of the sexes. In Muslim nations, this is particularly true, though some changes are beginning to occur," said Staples.

Representatives will be on campus Thursday in front of the Campus Center Bookstore to handout applications.

They ask that applications be filled out before interviews so more time can be spent answering questions about ACTION.

Applicants and personal interviews can be made at the Placement Office in Berkshire House. Appointments should be made as soon as possible.

Ya know, there isn't much point of clearing off the steps to the Union a week and a half after the last snow fall, maybe we should wait till June and see if it removes itself. (Staff Photo-Steve Smith)

Media used for the deaf

By CINDY ROGERS

Visual Media is becoming an important part of the education for the Deaf.

The Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf, NRMCD, at the School of Education, has been conducting research, experiments, demonstrations and presentations concerned with applications of media for the education of the deaf.

This is one of four US centers established in 1966 by the Bureau of Education for Handicapped services, with allocation of federal funds. The project was started so that deaf children would have a fair chance in pursuing a good education and careers through visual media education. The Northeast center services 12 northeastern states including the District of Columbia and Virginia.

The NRMCD is made up of a staff of 20 people, specialists in the education of the deaf and media technology. The staff is headed by Raymond Wyman, who was director of audio-visual technology at the University before the project began.

Wyman feels the project has been successful in that "it has done what it was set out to do." The NRMCD's main concern now is not what the project will continue to do, but how it will end.

The 6th sense gets a society

By JAN ALEXANDER

The division of continuing education is establishing a psychical society on campus.

Continuing Education program developer Norm Vercoe said that the motivating force behind organizing such a society came from various ESP classes offered by Continuing Education.

"People would take a class like 'Exploration in ESP' where they would learn about psychical experiences, faith healing, telepathy, meditation, and other aspects of ESP", Vercoe said. "When the course ended, people would express the desire to continue sharing knowledge on the subject."

Claudette Kiley, the class instructor, and a psychic since her early teens, decided to establish a society for anyone interested in the field of parapsychology.

There will be a membership fee, but Vercoe hopes that through the establishment of a scholarship fund, that money will not be a determent to joining the society.

The purposes of this new and as yet unnamed society would be numerous. "Members would share personal experiences, and the society as a whole would work to bring in nationally known speakers", Vescoe said. "As a matter of fact, Continuing Education is sponsoring a top psychic named Harold Sherman from Mountain View, Arkansas, who will speak on March 21st."

Members would also learn about new developments in the psychic field, as well as learn how-to techniques of ESP and meditation. The society would also suggest new psychical courses for the Continuing Education program, and hold parapsychology workshops and seminars. A newsletter would be published, and a subscriber membership fee set at $5.00

Another possible purpose to the group would be faith healing. Vescoe related the occurance of a "miracle" when faith healing cured a daughter of Claudette Kiley of a disease in her tibia bone.

"A group of people with psychic powers got together and through praying and meditating before surgery, managed to heal the girl and actually eliminate the need for surgery. It was quite miraculous," Vescoe said.

But, Vescoe stressed that the society would not be connected to religion. "Although it may be discovered in the future that many of the ancient religious figures were actually psychics, we ourselves do not try to tie religion or witchcraft into our beliefs."

Anyone wishing more information about the society can go to 315 Hills North, or call 545-0554.

Sterling Brown speaks in Paul Robeson series

Prof. Sterling Brown, Distinguished Professor of English at Howard University, Washington D.C. will be the fourth speaker in the Paul Robeson, Sr. Lecture Series presented by the Institute for Pan African Culture.

Brown will be speaking tonight at eight o'clock in SBA 120, and tomorrow at one o'clock he will give a poetry workshop at the Malcolm X Center in Southwest.

Prof. Brown, a Phi Beta Kappa and recipient of a Guggenheim fellowship, was granted an honorary degree from the University of Massachusetts in 1971. A graduate of Williams College and Harvard Univ., Brown, who draws much of his materials from the rural south, has authored several important literary masterpieces, among these are "The Negro Caravan" and "Southern Road".

Keeping the 'Wall' standing

By BILL MURPHY

For the majority of UMies, a bouncer at a bar is a symbol of sanity and order in a less than sane environment. He's the guy who checks your I.D., throws out rowdies, and bulges through his T-shirt. But what of the person behind the tough-guy image? How does he view his responsibilities and relation to the publec?

John Rutledge is a senior at UMass. He is a transfer student from Nassau Community College, which is near his home of Massapequa, L.I. He's a P.E. major, and hopes to go on to graduate school with the hope of coaching at the college level someday. John "OJ" Rutledge is also a BlueWall bouncer.

"I'm not big (6 ft, 180 lbs) and I don't pretend to be overpowering, but I do have a job to do and I try to see that it gets done," he said. "When you've got a place the size of the Blue Wall or the Hatch filled on a weekend night with people getting drunk you've got to try to be their civil mind ... you've got to appeal to their common sense in a calm and peaceful manner; that's the way the supervisors want it and that's the way we want it."

To get a job as a bouncer in the Blue Wall or the Hatch, you're usually recommended by someone working there, then an interview is set up and you're screened.

"When I came to UMass in my junior year I had already worked in a few bars back home, so I had my eye out for any openings up here," Rutledge said. "Then, with the drinking age dropping to 18, there was a need for more bouncers, so I applied at the Blue Wall, went through the usual process and was picked. However, I'd like to stress the fact that coaches don't get anyone jobs here, you get the job through your own merits ... I know plenty of people who've been rejected."

The Blue Wall and the Hatch are run so that bouncers and bartenders are responsible to floor supervisors and bar supervisors, who in turn are subject to Dortt Kinder and Grace Benatte, the heads of Food and Liquor Service for the Campus Center.

"I can't emphasize how great the people over us are," Rutledge said. "They understand the job and its problems, they're extremely open with us, and are responsible for the successful running of the bars."

Someone must be doing something right, because for the number of people the Blue Wall and Hatch serve, the number of incidents which occur is very low.

"The main attitude we all take in this job is prevention and I feel this is why there is so little trouble. In other bars I've worked in, if you break the rules in any way you're out immediately ... we try to allow some leeway here. I feel we get more respect and cooperation by asking a person to do something, thereby preventing a bad situation rather than picking him up and throwing him out," Rutledge said.

When problems do occur at either of the bars they are usually at the door. "Students, staff and faculty,," Rutledge said, have got to realize that these places are clubs with club licenses subject to the laws of the State. We must have proof of age to protect ourselves and the people who come in.

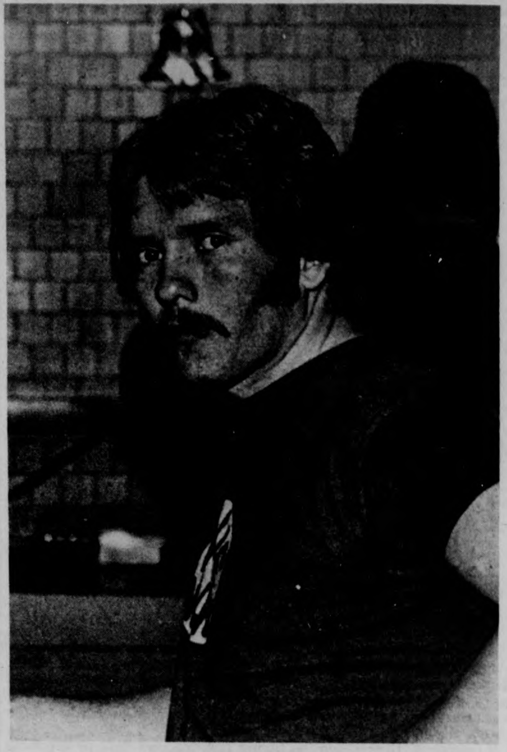
Last year with the legal age decrease, we had more problems because everyone assumed we would know they were 18. It's not so bad this year. If that minority would just cooperate with I.D.s, etc., it would be much easier.

I've been called every swear word in the book for just doing my job. I'd rather lose a few selfish people who won't cooperate, than lose the licenses and spoil it for all."

The bars are not perfect. Changes could be made in the crowded conditions, size of the dance floor, etc., but the biggest improvement would involve the people who patronize the Blue Wall and the Hatch.

"I really like the bars as a place to work and as a place to enjoy myself," Rutledge said. "You go to the Pub and if you don't know the fraternity songs, you're out. Here, all types get together — from the kids in dungarees to ties and conventions ... these bars are for everyone."

"I've learned a lot about this campus and met many great people while working here," he said. "I feel that's what life is all about — meeting people. After all, everyone's got something to offer, even a bouncer."



John Rutledge

The center will be terminated this August when the allocations of Federal funds runs out. Similar research in media for the deaf will probably continue at other universities through bids for federal grants.

The biggest problem will be for the NRMCD's staff members who are presently seeking other jobs. Hardest hit will be the doctoral students who are presently working on projects that may have to end when the grant gives out.

The center's experimentation has resulted in the origination of television phones and the extensive use of overhead projectors for individual and communication use in the classrooms of the deaf. Plastic transparencies which have specific educational purposes are prepared by graphic artists in the center.

In order that these visual aids fulfill the needs of the deaf child, the staff goes directly to the classrooms for suggestions as well as experimentation of the materials. Teachers of the deaf are able to call the center toll free, if problems with equipment arise. These materials are readily available and are distributed at no cost to the classrooms in the Northeast area.

Two years after the NRMCD was started, the U.S. Bureau for the Education of the Handicapped alloted funds for the training of media specialists. Forty-five UMass students, including 8 deaf students are now being trained at the School of Education.

Unlike the NRMCD, the Media specialists program, that is funded separately, will continue to exist.

Old frat back

By BOB BEYER

After an absence of four years, the University's oldest fraternity returned to campus this past Sunday.

QTV, the only Latin Fraternity left in the country and one of the oldest in the nation, was reborn at special ceremonies held at the Lord Jeffery Inn.

In 1869, just six years after the founding of Massachusetts Agricultural College, students formed the first Chapter of QTV in South College, which was then a dormitory.

In 1917, the fraternity purchased the house owned by Captain Fearing on the corner of Fearing and North Pleasant St. The large white structure, furnished with beautiful oak paneling, had been used by Captain Fearing to hide slaves on their way to Canada during the Civil War.

In the 1960's the house was torn down because it was considered to be a potential fire hazard, and the current brick building was constructed, which will house the 48 new brothers.

The current membership, which comes from the local Phi Sigma Chapter, is committed to the QTC tradition of strong academic, social and athletic leadership on the campus.

The new members hold important positions in many campus activities. Students interested in meeting the new brothers of QTV are invited to visit them at 358 No. Pleasant St.

KIDNAPED GIRL'S FIANCE IN HOSPITAL– Steven Weed, 26-year-old fiance of abducted Patricia Hearst, is pictured in Cowell Hospital on the University of California campus in Berkeley, where he is recuperating from injuries sustained during the kidnaping of Miss Hearst.

Hearst kidnappers state demands

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The kidnapers of heiress Patricia Hearst demanded on Tuesday that her parents provide millions of dollars in food for California's needy in exchange for their daughter's life. The demand was accompanied by what the kidnapers said was a tape recording of the coed's voice.

Randolph A. Hearst said the family took the recording as proof his daughter was safe and said he would try to comply with the demands.

"Mom and Dad, I'm okay," said the voice on the tape sent to Berkeley radio station KPFA. "These people have been very honest with me...they are perfectly willing to die for what they do...I want to get out of here, but the only way is if you do what they say and do it quickly."

The kidnapers broke a five-day silence to issue their demand that the Hearst family supply $70 worth of food for every needy Californian over a four-week period beginning next Monday.

The Symbionese Liberation Army, which has claimed responsibility for kidnaping the 19-year-old college sophomore on Feb. 4, said in the letter she was abducted "for crimes her mother and father have committed against the American people and the people of the world."

Her father is president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner and chairman of the Hearst Corp. Her mother, Catherine, is a regent of the University of California.

In the tape sent to KPFA, a man who identified himself as a black said he was "quite willing to carry out execution of your daughter to save the starving and exploitations of thousands of men and women of all races."

The first communication from the kidnapers came in a letter last Thursday, also sent to KPFA.

"Mom and Dad, I'm okay," said the slow, deliberate voice of Miss Hearst. "I think you can really tell I'm not terrified or anything. These people have been very honest with me..they are perfectly willing to die for what they do...I want to get out of here but the only way is if you do what they say, and do it quickly.

"It's really up to you to make sure those people can't jeopardise my life by charging in and doing stupid things. I'm not being tried for crimes I'm not responsible for. I'm here because I'm a member of a ruling class family."

The letter said that if the demands for food for every person on welfare or probation and every aged person in the state were not met, "We will assume there is no basis for negatiation and we will no longer maintain good health for the prisoner of war."

The first letter to KPFA said that the terrorist group was holding Miss Hearst in "protective custody."

Miss Hearst was dragged kicking and screaming from her Berkeley apartment eight days ago in a barrage of bullets, and nothing was heard from her kidnapers until last Thursday. That letter promised further communications, but there was only silence until Tuesday morning.

The kidnapers promised to keep Miss Hearst alive and well-cared for as long as no attempts were made to rescue her — or to harm any members of their organization.

Oakland police describe the SLA as a multiracial organization of at least 25 persons, primarily students of both sexes in their 20s.

Study reports

Campaign financing already begun

by DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Almost a year before the next general election, candidates for federal offices and supporting committees had more than 124 million in hand to pay for their campaigns, a new study shows.

Some of the money reported on hand at the close of 1973 represents leftover business from 1972 elections, but most of it is in pools looking forward to future elections as far away as 1978.

The largest single reserve reported was the more than $3.6 million still held by President Nixon's re-election campaign committee.

The figures released Tuesday by the Center for Public Financing of Elections were compiled from a study of official candidate reports required by federal law. This is the first year the new reporting requirements were in force well in advance of a major election year.

Sen. George McGovern, who was the Democratic presidential contender in 1972 and who faces re-election in the Senate this year, reported $469,442 remaining in his presidential fund.

The next highest individual holdings in this category belong to Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., who doesn't run for the Senate again until 1976 but who has registered with the General Accounting Office as a presidential hopeful with $365,676 in his campaign chest.

Another newly registered presidential contender is Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., who reported $46,981 to the GAO.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Henry Jackson, D-Wash., considered leading presidential prospects for 1976, did not report any money in either presidential or senatorial categories. However, both last ran for election in 1970 before the more stringent reporting requirements of the new law went into effect.

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, who ran for president as American party candidate in 1968 and sought the Democartic nomination in 1972, reported a war chest remaining of $103,751.

The survey also found that $21.6 million was raised by all candidates during the final third of 1973 and $18 million was spent - after the Senate passed a bill setting contribution and expenditure limits and tightening reporting requirements. The bill is pending in the House.

Republican party committees reported $2,845,342 cash at year's end.

Arab nations to hold summit

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Arab nations will hold a summit Wednesday in Algeria to discuss disengagement of the Syrian and Israeli armies, the Algerian Embassy in Paris and official sources in Cairo said Tuesday.

The meeting comes in a week of important oil developments - more nationalization of American companies in Libya, and an Arab oil meeting Thursday to discuss the petroleum embargo imposed on the United States.

Meanwhile, diplomats and oil industry sources in the Mideast said Libya, which opposes lifting the embargo on the United States, will nationalize all other foreign oil holdings possibly within a year.

Saudi Arabia, the largest Mideast oil producer, also is expected to demand soon that four American companies give up their shares in the Arabian American Oil Co. - Aramco - the Christian Science Monitor reported.

Middle East diplomats consider Syrian-Israeli military disengagement a necessary step before there can be any Arab-Israeli peace talks on territorial issues or a modification of the oil embargo on the United States.

The offical Algerian news agency said the participants in the Algiers disengagement talks will include Syria and Egypt, the principal combatants against Israeli in last October's war. Egyptian and Israeli armies are being separated on the Suez Canal front.

Other countries represented at the Algiers conference will be Algieria and Saudi Arabia, the news agency said. The head of state of Kuwai also might attend, said a spokesman for the Algerian Embassy in Paris.

Iraq, one of the msst vociferous Arab opponents of U.S. Middle East policies since the Arab-Israeli war last October, will boycott the Arab oil meeting on Thursday, Baghdad radio said.

"Iraq will not take part in the Tripoli conference because it is designed exclusively for discussing the possibility of lifting the anti-U.S. embargo," the broadcast said.

Arab oil ministers gather in Tripoli on Thursday. Iraq cut off oil to the United States last fall, but was the only Arab country that refused to cut back the amount of oil going to Western Europe and Japan. Iraq has said the embargo against the United States was not enough to "punish" Washington for its support of Israel during last October's Arab-israeli war.

Iraq has since been campaigning for a total nationalization of American oil companies operating in the Arab world and for a withdrawal of Arab deposits from U.S. banks.

Iraq produces 2.1 million barrels of oil a day, and plans to increase that to 3.5 million barrels by 1975, Petroleum Minister Saadoun Hammadi said.

President Moammar Khadafy of Libya ordered 51 per cent takeover of all foreign oil holdings in his country last September. On Monday the government nationalized the other 49 percent of the California Asiatic Co., owned by Standard Oil of California; the American Overseas Petroleum Co., owned by California Asiatic and Texaco; and the Libyan-American Oil Co., owned by Atlantic Richfield.

The nationalized properties produced only 124,000 barrels of crude oil a day, or about 5 per cent of Libya's total daily productions.

Chinese youth seen uniting

By PHIL BROWN
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) - The red star of China's young revolutionaries may be rising once again.

But it apprently isn't shooting to the heights of the 1966-1969 cultural revolution, when youthful Red Guards smashed deviations from Mao Tse-tung's thinking.

The indication that there may be an effort to restore young Chinese to an important role in the political plans of Peking's leaders came in the official newspaper People's Daily.

The paper warned against repressing the "revolutionary ardor" of young people who criticize the late Lin Piao and Confucius.

Confucius was a philosopher whose works helped shape Chin's development for centuries. Lin Piao, once the designated heir of Mao, was branded a traitor. He died, allegedly in a plane crash.

The People's Daily article, seen in Tokyo, said a number of young Chinese had come into leadership positions in the cultural revolution and the movement ot criticize Lin. It told older officials not to look down on them because of their lack of experience.

"How intelligent were you in your 20s?" the newspaper asked China's older officials. There is no shortcut to experience, the newspaper said, so the best solution is to allow young officials to learn by joining in the revolutionary struggle.

People's Daily also is putting heavy stress on the idea that the working class - the master class under Communist doctrine - is not a bunch of stupid clods.

A recent People's Daily article mentioned a group formed at a Shanghai printing and dyeing factory to criticize Lin and Confucius. Of 19 members, only two had gone as far as high school, the article said. After some initial trouble with Confucius' classical Chinese, they were able to analyze the old philosopher's counter-revolutionary works and raise their own cultural level at the same time, it added.

One reason for the campaign, People's Daily said, was that such enemies of Peking as the Soviet Union and the Taiwan government of Chiang Kai-shek have been promoting respect for Confucius, and anything the enemy did called for criticism.

The energy crisis

FEO Considers Oil Price Cut

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Energy Office is considering beating Congress to the punch by rolling back the price of domestic crude oil now exempt from price controls, sources say.

The rollback proposal is a real possibility although no final decision has been made, the sources said.

It would be achieved by setting an administrative price ceiling on control-free domestic crude, probably at 50 per cent higher then the controlled price of $5.25 a barrel.

Even if the rollback is ordered, it would have a minimal impact on the price of gasoline — one or two cents at the most, the sources said.

But the move would cut into oil company profits and might quiet some of the criticism that domestic oil prices have moved too high.

Nixon to assess states' plans

By JEFFREY MILLS

President Nixon will assess the results of various state mandatory and voluntary allocation plans before recommending any changes in federal gas rationing policy, the White House said yesterday.

"The President favors voluntary actions, doing what each state believes is necessary," Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren said.

When asked about gasoline rationing, Warren told a news briefing that Nixon "is well aware of the situation at gas stations," including long lines in many areas.

But Warren said, "the President will not say to a governor you should or should not do this or that."

Warren said Nixon will hold his weekly meeting with federal energy chief William E. Simon today to get reports on the gasoline and over-all energy situation.

Asked if rationing would be a decision made by Nixon or by Simon, Warren said, "rationing would be a presidential decision."

No wait in billings

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tired of waiting an hour or more in gasoline station lines? If you can't find the gasoline, move to Billings, Mont. where there aren't any long waits.

An Associated Press sampling of 92 major cities throughout the country shows that there are 52 of them where gasoline lines are essentially nonexistent. But if you live in New York, Chicago or Tucson, Ariz., you're likely to wait an hour or more before getting to the pump.

The cities in the sampling were given one of four ratings based on the approximate length of time it takes to get through each city's average gasoline line.

A long line was one lasting an hour or more. A medium line was under an hour but more than half an hour. Short: less than 15 minutes. The fourth category: no lines. The results reflect those from a similar AP survey shich examined gasoline shortages region by region.

Both surveys show that the Eastern section of the country is the hardest hit by gasoline shortages. In the East, the Northeast is the hardest hit. The eastern part of the South also seems severe, but the rest of the region is in essentially good shape.

The Midwest is generally trouble-free, with the Chicago area a major exception. The Southwest has no major problems. In the West there are fairly long lines around major cities such as Los Angeles and San Francisco and Oregon continues to have troubles. The less populated states report little or no troubles, with the exception of Arizona.

Arizona is having roubles because a decrease in gasoline allocations which bumps up against an increase of 10 per cent in population over the past year.

Rationing looks good on 2nd day

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lines at service stations in Massachusetts were generally longer today than Monday, dealers reported, as the Bay State went into its second day of a voluntary rationing plan. But the serious shortages and mile-long lines that tied up traffic around New England a week ago appeared to have subsided somewhat.

Many Massachusetts station owners said the longer lines today were because it is the day for drivers with even-numbered plates to fill up. Some of those drivers have not been able to get gas since Friday or Saturday.

Monday Massachusetts adopted the so-called Oregon plan, which calls for cars with even-numbered plates to go to the pumps on even-numbered dates and those with odd-numbered plates on odd dates.

Maurice Langelier, executive director of the Massachusetts Association of service Station Dealers, said lines have been reduced by at least 50 per cent since the state adopted the voluntary plan.

"It, the plan, is not utopia," Langelier said, "but it's helping. It won't eliminate the shortage, though. We're still very short on gas. But the motoring public has accepted it."

A Sunoco dealer in Springfield said he noticed a big improvement Monday, but today "it's the same long lines."

Fred Binns, an Exxon dealer in Methuen, closed his station at 10 a.m. today because he ran out of gas. "The lines were a lot longer," he said. "I pumped all day yesterday, but today I ran out at 10 because there were so many cars."

John Fory, owner of a station in North Andover, said his lines were about six or seven cars long Monday, and between 25-30 cars long today. "Yesterday I pumped gas until 2 p.m.; today I had to shut down at 9 a.m.," Fory said.

All station owners reported that citizen cooperation with the plan was excellent.

A check of stations in six New England states Monday showed that many were operating longer hours with shorter lines after receiving their February allocations.

State clergy, officials think they deserve extra fuel

BOSTON (AP) - Clergymen, divorced fathers, an alcoholic, antique dealers, legislators and state officials: They all want exemptions from Massachusetts' voluntary gasoline rationing.

"People who never bought gas every day before suddenly are very upset if they don't have special privileges," says John Neely, an assistant in the state Consumer Affairs Department.

The department is having its toughest time with legislators and other state officials, described by Neely as "about the most obnoxious people we've had to deal with. They claim they should be able to buy gasoline anytime, anywhere."

Other requests for special privileges have come from divorced fathers saying they want to visit their chillren and an alcoholic who wants to be sure he can get to an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

Under the two-day-old modified Oregon plan, the only people who can buy gas whenever they need it are salesmen with proper identification. Others buy on alternate days dependong on whether their license plate numbers are odd or even.

"In spite of repeated complaints by state officials and agencies," Neely said, "there is nothing in our regulations which should lead a service station owner to believe he should give priority to any state vehicle.

"In order for this system to work it has to be simple."

The state owns 6,500 vehicles, 2,000 of which are passenger cars. Neely said as far as the consumer office knows, state officials who drive these cars are conforming to the rationing system, or should be.

No one really knows how much gasoline these state vehicles use, a spokesman in the Management Bureau of the Department of Administration and Finance said.

Rationing plan working OK

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The voluntary gasoline rationing system appeared to be working in Massachusetts yesterday, the second day of its two-week trial period, but lines at gas pumps were longer throughout the state.

Service station dealers said the lines were generally longer than they had been Monday because it was the day for drivers with even-numbered license plates to full up. Some of those drivers had not been able to get gas since last Friday or Saturday.

Massachusetts this week adopted the so-called Oregon plan which calls for cars with even-numbered plates to get gas on even-numbered dates and those with odd-numbered plates on odd dates.

Bay State citizens seemed to be cooperating with the voluntary plan, dealers said. Very few cars with odd-numbered plates were showing up at the pumps yesterday.

But a dealer in New Bedford said he lost a steady customer yesterday when he refused to sell the customer gas because he had the wrong numbered plate for the day. "He said I should total up the bill and close the account," Frank Murray said. "He said he wouldn't be coming here any more."

Many station owners said they closed earlier yesterday because the high volume of business used up their fuel earlier.

The ALA Auto Club said its survey indicated "a high degree of success in implementing the program in Massachusetts." The ALA said its poll showed there was a slightly greater degree of participation in the rationing plan in the greater Boston area than in the rest of the state.

Maurice A. Gamache of Moe's Muffler and Brake Shop in New Bedford said the rationing system "had stopped the parade." He said his lines were much shorter this week than last.

A Sunoco dealer in Springfield said he noticed a great improvement Monday, but Tuesday "it was the same old lines."

In Lawrence, Fred Binns said he was forced to close his station at 10 a.m. Tuesday because "the lines were a lot longer, and I just ran out of gas." A station in nearby North Andover reported lines of six or seven cars Monday, but lines of up to 30 cars yesterday.

Around New England

Trucks rolling again

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Trucks were rolling throughout New England yesterday, following the vote of the last remaining strikers in the southern part of the region to end their strike.

Truckers in Southeastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island voted Monday to end the holdout and "try the new government proposals," a spokesman said.

In Waterbury, Conn., more independent truckers voted to put their rigs back on the road.

New Hampshire's 1,000 independent truckers joined their colleagues in Massachusetts and Rhode Island yesterday and ended their strike, in a vote at Suncook, N.H.

Officials at the New England Produce Center, which supplies fruits and vegetables to small markets and restaurants throughout the region, said trucks were beginning to arrive at the normal pace.

Nixon plan hit

BOSTON -Massachusetts Transportation Secretary Alan Altshuler has criticized President Nixon's new transportation program for basing federal aid to urban areas on population rather than local public contributions.

The MBTA commuter service in the Boston area would get about $15 million more each year in federal subsidies under Nixon's plan. This would be in addition to the expected $80 million to $90 million for capital improvements.

But a fairer formula would take into consideration how much state and local governments are taxing themselves to operate commuter lines, he said.

Under the proposed formula the Boston area would get about 2 per cent of the total national allocation for subsidies, since it has about 2 per cent of the nation's urbanized population.

State health policy

BOSTON - The legislature's Social Welfare Committee was urged yesterday to approve the creation of a Health systems Regulation Administration to replace several agencies.

Donald Sheril, undersecretary of human services, said such an agency would "permit, for the first time, the development of a coherent health policy for the commonwealth."

Crooked cops

QUINCY - Trials of two Braintree policemen charged with breaking and entering and possession of burglar tools will resume March 7 in Quincy District Court.

Samuel J. Tripolone, 28, and Paul W. Campbell, 31, have been released on $100 personal recognizance following their arraignment Monday. Both pleaded innocent.

Sarg man on MassPort?

BOSTON - Gov. Francis W. Sargent proposed yesterday that the secretary of transportation and construction take the next vacant seat on the Board of the Massachusetts Port Authority.

The proposal was in his message accompanying his bill to reorganize the state's transportation and construction agencies, refined to meet last year's legislative objections.

Time lacking in oil crisis solution

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

Much of what is proposed to meet the oil consuming nations' crisis would take a lot of time, and time is a scarcer commodity than oil itself as things shape up in the Middle East for a new round of dangerous instability.

U.S. proposals for consumer-national cooperation, exploration for new energy sources, new technologies, prospective American self-sufficiency by 1980 and so forth all involve time, but there is reason to worry about what will happen in the interim in the highly volatile Middle East.

Generalized statements of common purpose in today's situation can sound like trying to ward off disaster by tribal rites and incantation, because even as the consumer nations participate cautiously in U.S.-sponsored conferences, the oil producer area is developing a new set of tensions.

—Two producer nations now fattening on high prices, Arab Iraq and non-Arab Iran, have been trading military blows in a newly revived border dispute.

—Arab Iraq has old territorial claims against Arab Kuwait and only a couple of years ago attempted an invasion that was thwarted by the British. Now the British presence is gone from the Persian Gulf there is a yawning and potentially perilous vacuum there. Hereditary anti-Communist rulers of the Saudi Arabian peninsula worriedly eye the intentions of an Iraq heavily armed by the Soviet Union.

—Syria's leaders drag their feet, resisting Egyptian pressure for military disengagement with Israel. The Syrian regime has reason to worry about adverse political impact at home. Neighbor Iran is quarreling with Syria just because the Syrians accepted the cease-fire.

—Instead of disengagement, there has been new fighting on the Syrian front.

—Egypt's President Anwar Sadat, evidently anxious to turn his attention to his nation's economy, has been collaborating with both Washington and Moscow in seeking some sort of area stability. He has been reported urging the Arab oil rulers to relax their anti-U.S. embargo.

—Libya's strong man president, Moammar Khadafy, is infuriated by Sadat. He has been clamoring for revolutionary risings of "the masses" against rulers of Egypt, Tunisia and anywhere else where they might be deemed guilty of impeding Arab unity. He timed a new oil nationalization gesture against the United States to coincide with the consumer meeting and preceded a planned meeting of Arab producer nations this week.

—The hereditary rulers of Saudi Arabia and the sheikdoms in the east have no insurance they will be spared Khadafy's pan-Arab wrath would they show any signs of listening to proposals to ease the oil embargo.

All this boiling ferment takes place in an area where countries not much removed from feudalism pile up billions of dollars of exchange reserves because of the steep rise in oil prices.

Meanwhile, advanced nations run up enormous trade deficits. Industrialized economies have not had time to adjust to the sudden jolt of the oil price rise. The international monetary system may be subjected to severe strains.

Too young for transplant

Baby must wait

ENFIELD, Conn. (AP) - Doctors say five-month-old Terry Bouffard must hang on to life 19 more months before they can attempt to save her.

Terry's liver never developed properly and a transplantis her only hope. But surgeons say they must wait at least until she is 2 years old to operate.

"They told us we should just take her home and watch her die," said Mrs. Alfred Bouffard, recalling doctors' advice after Terry was born with a yellowish skin. Initially diagnosed as jaundice, her condition got worse and exploratory surgery last December turned up the damaged liver.

"I just don't believe that she's going to die," said the 37-year old mother. Mrs. Bouffard had three miscarriages before giving birth to Terry, her first child.

"I told the doctor that it just wasn't right. And he said, "No it isn't."

Physicians at New York's Sloan-Kottering Institute for Cancer Research say a liver transplant might rescue Terry, but she's too young.

Meanwhile her condition requires constant attention and the bills are piling up for her debt-ridden parents.

Terry's father, who ran a local second hand shop, sold its contents for $150 in an effort to pay off some of the $7,000 in debts created in part by Terry's condition. His attempts to find work as a cook have been unsuccessful.

"We have a human being here we want to have a chance to survive," said Bouffard. "We're just trying to buy her time. We're trying to keep her alive until the transplant."

The president of the New England Bank and Trust Co., William Napolitano, is helping Bouffard find work and get state aid to pay Terry's hospital bills.

The bank and the Journal Inquirer have established a trust fund for donations.

According to Napolitano, Bouffard's debts are mounting so fast he incurrs $5 in debts for every dollar he earns.

Evaders are heroes

By PAUL PUTES

The question of amnesty for draft evaders has been an extremely controversial topic for the past few years. Not too long ago it was widely discussed by scholars, students, the administration, the Congress and the American people at large. Unfortunately, with the rise of the political, economic, and social crisis the question of amnesty has been put aside. Consequently, all the young men who are considered draft evaders have also been put aside by their country. The crumbling Nixon administration and all the moral shabbiness displayed since its inception will never forgive these individuals. On the other hand, the real question is not whether we can forgive the draft dodgers, but whether they can forgive us. The American government forced these people to choose between honor, and simple human decency. We the people, shamefully ordered innocent people to risk their lives and slaughter other human beings simply to influence and soothe the pride of the American government, which would not admit the stupendous mistake of getting involved in Vietnam at all. The people who saw through this charade, and refused to cooperate in the mass slaughter, were labeled "draft dodgers" and "cowards".

In truth, the draft evaders are the heroes of the war, not the people who napalmed, bombed, murdered, and died in the name of American arrogance and false pride. It takes true moral courage to stand out against the majority, to give up family, home, and country for a particularly supreme good - humanity and decency. We condemn those Germans who slavishly obeyed the Nazis on the grounds that they had no choice - well, some of our brothers had more courage. They saw that they did have a choice, and they chose exile and condemnation rather than violate the laws of God and morality.

Perhaps all who refused to fight did not do so from the highest and noblest of motives, undoubtedly some people simply did not wish to rish their lives. But why on earth should they have risked their lives for such petty objectives as were involved in this war? Any single human life is worth far more than the corrupt and undemocratic government of South Vietnam, which has ruthlessly suppressed its minorities and has never held a fair and open election.

We the people owe all these young men a tremendous debt of gratitude for opening our eyes to the appalling blunder the United States made in entering that dreadful war. Instead of condemning them to exile and prison, let us share their courage and clarity of vision. A general amnesty is the least we can do to repay our debt to those who saw far sooner and far more clearly than the rest of us, the moral wrongness of this war.

Let us remember the lesson these people have taught us; that when the laws of government violate human decency, then the truly courageous man will disobey the government in order to uphold the higher good. For the man who is willing to climb the steps of logic, inevitably will reach the doors of truth. The truth is, these people have experienced "peace with honor".

"You still here? '

Joyce Kosofsky

A timeless system

Wouldn't it be nice to walk into a classroom that didn't have a clock? I mean, wouldn't it be great to have classes that weren't dependant upon becoming totally relevant in a fifty minute time span? Or at least aware of the fact that it had to become relevant in that fifty minute time span.

I have a few classes that meet in rooms that really aren't classrooms. The one really nice thing about them is that thre aren't any clocks constantly ticking away to remind you just how much longer you have to stay in the room. You actually get into the class itself. Not the time period spent there.

What happens if class runs four minutes early? Or three minutes late? People starts to panic because the numbers on the wall contradict what's going on in the classroom.

UMass should get rid of its clocks in the classroom. Without being constantly reminded of the time, a real discussion can take place. I mean, how can you start a relevant conversation on existentialism or revolution knowing that the bell is going to ring in three minutes? What do you do then? Wait until the next class period? By then all the spontaneity of thought has lost its magic and by then your point is no longer relevant.

Get rid of timepieces on the classroom walls and you'll get rid of a lot of classroom pressure. Take the exam period for example. Always watching the time adds pressure. You say to yourself, "I've got to finish the question by such and such a time." You watch the clock instead of concentrating on the exam. You study for the time alloted for the exam instead of the exam itself.

Clocks are a waste of time in the classroom. How many times have you sat in a class where the lecture really ended six minutes early and the professor started rambling on just to retain the status quo? How many times have you sat in a class with your coat on because the bell rang and the professor hasn't finished his last three sentences?

Clocks in the classroom make classes seem like a fifty yard dash to me. The bell rings and the class is off. It runs on or drags through until RRRRRRRRing, the bell makes that moise again and the class is over. (Whether it really is or isn't) Turn on, turn off. Unless your brain is like a light bulb, I don't think this is too easy.

Unfortunately we can't abolish time. Clocks may be a necessity to some people. Why can't there be a few in the hallways instead of inside every classroom. For the people who have to know what time it is, the hall clocks can serve that purpose. For the people who don't need a clock in the classroom, think of some of the pressure it would relieve on them. And think of the energy we could save if only a few clocks were on the walls.

Joyce Kosofsky is a Collegian Columnist.

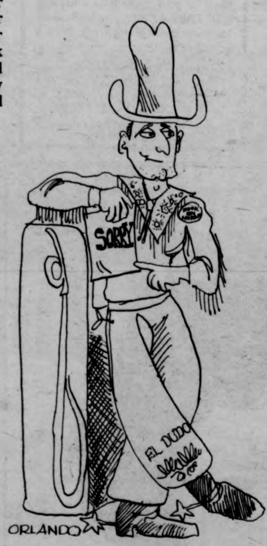
Tanks, but no tanks

This has been a tough winter for all Americans. The energy crisis has taken a drastic toll on our lifestyles. Gone are some of the most basic essentials, without which we would be reduced to the level of our Neanderthal forebears. For how can we possibly call ourselves civilized without our electric eyebrow pluckers, our cordless Tidy-Bowl cleaners, or even our juiced up vibrators. Think of the horror that this means. We'll have to do everything manually from now on. Can our hands and wrists take it?

Another drastic toll the crisis has taken has been our American personality. Some of us have changed overnight, trying to turn the crisis into a quick buck. A good example of this is how our gas station people are degenerating. Why just last week I pulled into my friendly neighborhood pump, Ernie's Fillin' Station. Ernie's a real good friend of mine and I've been doing business with him for years.

"Fill-er-up there Ernie! Ole buddy, ole pal!'! I shouted in eager friendliness.

"Whooaahh deahh!! Slow down deah pardner! Slow down," Ernie called out in a thick Texan drawl. Moreover, Ernie had on this ridiculous ten gallon hat and was chewing a huge wad of tobacco. On his bandana he had a "Hook em Horns" button and he generally looked as if he had been poundin his horse all morning. Now I was horrified at this, for Ernie had never been west of Poughkeepsie N.Y. in his life but he now looks like something the Lone Ranger and Tonto ate for breakfast.



"Y'all come back now, hea'h"

"It's me Ernie, don't you remember me. I've been coming round these parts for four years. Remember last summer when I was the only one to come away with the whole set of Carl Yastrzemski autographed eggholders and soy sauce ladles that you were giving away. Remember?

"Pardner" he said, "My recollection is mighty thin round these times. Reckon Ah caint remembah givin way anything to no city fellers tho. Remines me of what my grandpappy Lucas McCain Paso once said: "There's oil in dem dar hills". You know they named a town aftah him — Yassuh L. Paso."

"What are you talking about you crazy old cadger. The only oil your grandfather ever saw was in his hair" I was really getting worried that the gas shortage had gone to ole Ernie's head now that he didn't have to give things away to attract customers, and that now he could pick and choose who bought what and for how much.

"Come on Ernie, fill er up, I need these wheels. How else could I get from my dorm to V-lot. You don't expect me to thumb down there do you?" I asked plaintively.

"Waal now sort er remines me what my great grandpappy Sam Houston Astrodome once said."

"Whats that."

"You all grease my wheel and I'll grease yo'se. Yassuh that jes what our great Preseedent Nixon jes said: "We'll help those that helps theirselves." An Ah sure aim t'help mahself to whatever Ah kin get." he slowly drawled.

"Look Ernie....."

"Thats Sheriff Ernie to you son."

"Look Sheriff Ernie, I see that green flag flying, with that lone star on it. And I demand my God given right as an American to fill up my tank and bomb right out of here. I want some of that Tiger in my tank."

With this Ernie began to fondle his diamond covered lapel and scratch his head. "Waal son, Ah've always believed in givin a man a chance, specially if he was a Texan. Seein as though yo' not a Texan but jes a dumb UMie, Ah'll do ya a favor anyway. Ah'll let ya have three gallons of the Hah Test at ma cheap cheap price of 93 cents

Despite the fact that I was getting the super ripoff, I needed my gas. "OK! OK! Ernie, its agreed."

"Fine" he said, "Jes bring yo machine back fo its gas appointment a week from Thursday at 4:00 a.m. and Ah'll see what Ah can do."

"Ernie that reminds me of what the illustrious Curly Howard once was known to have said: "Oils well that ends well, but in this case tanks but no tanks!

Oh! The pain of it all!

USSR outdoes itself

The following article was written by Lazlos Tikos a professor of Slavic Studies at UMass. Professor Tikos has recently completed a book, SOLZHENITSYN, A CRITICAL APPRAISAL. He escaped from Hungary in 1956.

By LAZLOS TIKOS

The highest authorities have finally "overstepped the limits" of no return by arresting Alexander Isayevich Solzhenitsyn. Having done this, they obviously have previously calculated the risks involved, especially the international uproar that this arrest will trigger.

If this arrest is preferable to the international polemics against the Soviet Union which will surely follow, then obviously the Soviet political leadership (which authorized the arrest) considers the arrest and scandal the lesser evil. What is it that Solzhenitsyn has done, and why is he considered so dangerous?

His latest book The Gulag Archipelago (the Archipelago of the State Labor Camps) was published in December, 1973, and is one of the most outspoken critical surveys of Soviet history up to 1956. Almost 700 pages long, the book is a very personal biography, written in the form of an historical essay. It contains besides data from Solzhenitsyn's own life, stories from the lives of all those hundred and hundreds of prisoners, whom Solzhenitsyn encountered and listened to during the years of his imprisonment. If Solzhenitsyn were not a Russian, but an Englishman or an American, this sort of book would become a bestseller, since it combines the personal confessions of a famous person, with a private investigation of the history of times in which he lived. Solzhenitsyn's misfortune is to have been born in the Russia of the Soviet period, which prohibits, not by written law, but rather by well-entrenched habit, that sort of exercise. If anyone can cite his personal life experiences, and give his own evaluation of history, the Soviets seem to say, then the many taboos upon which Soviet society rests would be soon demolished. Since the existence of the ruling political elite is dependent upon the observance of these taboos, Solzhenitsun's book has been declared to be extremely dangerous.

Historical parallels also exist, as the present Soviet leadership of Brezhnev knows very well. That sort of inquiry into the nation's past in other Communist countries, notably in Hungary in 1956 and in Czechoslovakia in 1968, had led to the ultimate toppling of the political leadership and to the dissolution of the existing political order. By implication, Solzhenitsyn's book is feared by the present Soviet leadership for the same sort of reasons. The book is dangerous, furthermore, because Solzhenitsyn does not only present the historical facts, kept secret from the general Soviet public, but also he shows the consequences and makes recommendations for action. He compares the inhumanities committed under the Stalin regime to those committed in Hitler Germany. He also observes that in postwar West Germany more than 86,000 people were put on trial for their participation in Nazi crimes, while in the Soviet Union, only 10 officials were arrested and sentenced at secret trials for their crimes of the Stalin era. Solzhenitsyn, who is a mathematician by profession, calculated simply that given the differences in the population figures between West Germany and the Soviet Union, the appropriate Soviet figure should have been in the vicinity of a quarter of a million trials! The demand for a trial of these Stalinist criminals became the most dangerous demand made by Solzhenitsyn, and obviously the immediate cause of his arrest.

Trying to avoid confrontation on these very dangerous political grounds, the Soviet leadership may want to incarcerate him on technical grounds — i.e., accuse him of violation of the Soviet copyright laws. Enacted in the summer of 1973, with the undeclared purpose of fighting the outflow of dissident literature from the Soviet Union to the West, the Soviet copyright law declares everything written in the Soviet Union to be state property, and as such is subject to state censorship and permission to publish the work abroad. The Gulag Archipelago however was published by Solzhenitsyn a few days before the law went into effect; therefore, technically, he is not guilty of violating it.

What is going to happen to Solzhenitsyn. Right now, of course, the question cannot be answered, but only speculated on. His trial, especially an open trial, seems very unlikely, because of his militant nature, and also because of the explosive nature of the possible charges. Protracted imprisonment seems unlikely, too, because during this period the Solzhenitsyn issue would certainly be a constant source of aggravation in the Western world for the Soviets, and for the Western Communist parties as well. Many recent Russian emigres feel that Solzhenitsyn will be expelled from the Soviet Union, as Trotsky was in 1929. One can only wish, for Solzhenitsyn's sake, that this is the course the Soviet Politburo has charted for the Nobel Prize winning writer.

Solzhenitsyn's arrest and eventual trail is perhaps the greatest political confrontation in the Soviet Union since the Stalinist trials of the 1930's; and the outcome of this process is certainly going to affect the future not only of the Soviet Union, but of the rest of the world. Our protest can help not only Solzhenitsyn, but also our own future. What can we do? We must protest in every possible way. Write letters to the Soviet Embassy in Washington, write to our Congressmen, and demand action from them through every governmental and diplomatic channel.

Letters To The Editor

This is not 1930

To the Editor:

Your letter from Wally Clark, et al in Monday's COLLEGIAN was distressing. I am proud of my Irish heritage; you apparently, are interested in using yours only as a wedge for sick, and not-very-subtle, satire. In admittedly mildly amusing efforts, you have released a frontal attack on the sensitivities and needs of the Third World.

The particular character of our society has created a historical reality of institutional and organizational racism. Universities are slowly beginning to accept the challenge of dealing with these status quo injustices. In Southwest, and other segments of this University community, people have tried to break down institutional racism, and to reverse a system that forces Third World people, because of the numbers factor alone, to lose. In the process, with discomfort at times, we have attempted to come to grips with our own personal racism. Sometimes our responses have been inadequate; many times we have failed.

Think of what you are saying, please. Irish people in this country no longer face a situation that is even remotely parallel to that which you are satirizing. This is not 1930; I have NEVER seen a 'No Irish need apply' sign. Brother, you are white — you blend better.

With your letter, I realize that Irish backlash racism has carried through to a new generation. With deep concern for you, I send my regrets. Louise Day Hicks would be most pleased with you.

Abortion threatened

To the Editor:

We would like to inform the academic community of the threats to women's right to choose in the matter of abortion. Anti-abortion groups are rallying in a well-financed, well-organized campaign to overturn the Supreme Court ruling of January, 1973. According to the Constitutional Defense Project (3 Joy Street, No. 15, Boston, Ma..s. 02108):

> The top priority of the anti-abortionists is the passage of the Hogan Amendment (which would ban all abortions by declaring the fetus a legal person from the moment of conception) and other amendments which would effectively cripple the Supreme Court ruling.
> In addition, they have sought to effect swift action on legislation favorable to them by subverting the normal routines of Congress and attempting through discharge petitions and last minute riders to avoid balanced committee review processes and rush bills through when there is barely a quorum on the floor. In this way they have already attached a "conscience clause" to the Public Health Service Extension of 1973 and have prohibited federally funded legal services personnel from becoming involved in litigation to implement the Supreme Court abortion ruling.
> On Friday, November 30, 1973, the United States Senate passed an anti-abortion rider to Title 19 of the Social Security Act which would prohibit the use of Medicaid funds for abortions of any sort and for any reason. This would not only ban Medicaid payment for a woman whose life was endangered by her pregnancy, but could also be construed as applying to the use of intra-uterine devices and morning-after medications.
> A similar fate may await the Family Services and Population Research Act (domestic family planning bill) which provides funding for most of the federally supported birth control clinics. An amendment has already been filed which would disallow the use of any federal monies to support programs which include abortion, abortion counseling and referral, and-or abortifacient drugs or articles. Since virtually all family planning programs offer IUD's, this could effectively cut off support for every birth control clinic in the country.
> The "right-to-lifers" have also succeeded in scheduling February hearings on the Constitutional Amendments which would make abortion illegal even in cases of rape or danger to maternal health. These constitutional amendments include: THE HOGAN AMENDMENT, which would ban all abortions (and possibly affect the use of IUD's and morning-after medication); THE BUCKLEY AMENDMENT, which would ban all abortions from the time of implantation (5-7 days post conception); THE WHITEHURST AMENDMENT, which would turn the question back to the states and giveilocal legislatures the right to ban all abortions.

It is crucial that those of us sympathetic to the recent pro-abortion Supreme Court ruling immediately make our voices heard to our legislators. The anti-abortion groups are generating huge amounts of campaign mail and a comparable amount of pro-abortion sentiment must be expressed if our current laws supporting women's rights are to be maintained. Please write to Senators Kennedy and Brooke (c-o US Senate, Washington, DC) and to your congressman as well. Persons interested in contributing time or financial help to this effort should contact Pam Lowry at 617-232-6889, or Carolyn Schneider at 617-969-1980, or write to Constitutional Defense Project.

No bright side to gas crunch

We need more buses to Belchertown.

Perhaps the gas shortage and gas rationing will end all traffic congestion in Amherst.

Perhaps there will be no more parking hassles on campus because of lack of cars and Amherst Towing Inc. will lose a hell of a lot of business.

Other than the two things stated above I can't think of anything else on the bright side of the gas shortage in Amherst.

However, as I rode the Belchertown Road (BR) bus from Rolling Green Apartments to campus this morning with my own and someone else's books in my lap, with one elbow in my face and one person standing on my toes, I thought of one more problem: we need more buses.

Last semester the BR bus was crowded on occasion, mainly at peak traveling times such as on your way to your 9:05 and on your way home from your 3:35. At any other time you could ride with a whole seat to yourself and sometimes even two seats to yourself.

This semester the gas stations along the BR route tell the new story. Some don't have any gas, others are open only an hour or two a day and others give gas by appointment only.

People can't drive to school anymore.

The result is gross overcrowding of buses. And not only at peak traveling times but all of the time.

Last Tuesday the 7:25 a.m. BR bus had to bypass the last two stops on the way to campus because there simply was not enough room for anymore passengers. The 11:10 p.m. BR bus heading off campus that same day had standing room only. The crowding problem exists throughout each day.

The Orchard Hill, Campus Shuttle and Southwest buses are rarely overcrowded. There is no increase of passengers on these buses because of the gas shortage; those who use them seldom drive their cars to class anyway since the majority live on campus.

Those buses traveling 3-6 miles or more off campus, however, cannot handle the increased number of passengers.

Oftentimes buses spend more time at stops unloading and loading up again than they do on the road between stops.

We need more buses and we need buses more often on the off campus routes.

Dr. William P. Goss, professor of engineering here at the University and the man who worked out the first federal grant for the Student Senate Transit Service is now working in conjunction with the service on a request to the federal government for a grant for more buses.

For awhile though we will still be riding the same crowded buses together. Let's try to do a few thing to make our bus riding more comfortable and hassle free.

Unless it's dark don't ask your bus driver to make unscheduled stops. It just means wasting gas and time. While taking over 150 bus rides I observed that those people who ask the driver to stop at unscheduled stops are usually those who are overweight and need the walk anyway and the same ones who complain when the bus is not precisely on time.

When the bus driver tells you that there is no more room on the bus don't stand with one foot on the bus and one foot on the ground insisting that he let you on. (I have seen a number of people doing this.)

When the bus driver asks you to move to the back of the bus don't pretend that you are hard of hearing.

Don't smoke on the bus.

If you only want to take the bus a few blocks, why not walk instead?

Don't bitch at the bus driver for being two minutes late by your watch. Be thankful that with the gas shortage you can get where you're going. And for free even.

Honest Abe who?

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The 165th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth passed practically unnoticed Tuesday - even in the state where he was born.

The day is not a federal holiday and observance varied from state to state. About the only people who paid much attention were politicians and school children.

Kentucky - where the nation's 16th president was born on Feb. 12, 1809 - didn't make much of the day. The state legislature took the day off, but state employes had to work. Banks also were open.

State workers used to get the day off, but the practice was eliminated in 1970 by the then-Gov. Louie B. Nunn who said there were just too many holidays and some of them had to go.

Residents of Hodgenville, where Lincoln was born in a log cabin, celebrated last weekend, but planned no observances on Tuesday.

Lincoln got a little better treatment in Illinois, where he practiced law for many years before his election to the presidency in 1860.

The American Legion sponsored a morning car caravan to Lincoln's tomb and Republicans in Springfield held a Lincoln luncheon, one of several such gatherings around the country. A Chicago civic group used to place a wreath on the statue of the president in Lincoln Park, but the practice was abandoned several years ago. Vandals kept tearing up the wreaths and throwing them around the park.

In New York City, the Chamber of Commerce and industry said only 28 per cent of the 216 metropolitan-area companies that it polled planned to close Tuesday.

Among the companies staying open was Lincoln Logs, a toy maker.

The Solzhenitsyn case

Wife tells of arrest

WAYLAND, Mass. (AP) - Mrs. Alexander Solzhenitsyn, wife of the Soviet novelist arrested in Moscow on Tuesday, told a Boston College professor in a "very agitated but nevertheless very quiet way" of the incident in a telephone conversation a few hours later.

"Mrs. Solzhenitsyn said eight men came and broke the lock on the door when they took her husband from the apartment on Gorky Street," said visiting lecturer Yuri Glazov, who previously taught at Moscow University and was associated with the National Academy of Sciences in the Soviet Union.

The men who took the Nobel Prize author "behaved extremely rudely to Mrs. Solzhenitsyn and to her husband and they pushed her away from him," Glazov said.

Glazov placed the call to Mrs. Solzhenitsyn on Tuesday afternoon when news reports of the incident were printed and broadcast.

"At that time she did not know if it was a detention or an arrest," Glazov said of the novelist's wife. "But a few hours after he was taken it became more and more clear that it was an arrest."

Mrs. Solzhenitsyn was told four hours later that her husband had been arrested. No official announcement or reason for the arrest was issued, but Solzhenitsyn has twice refused to honor summonses to appear at the state prosecutor's office for questioning.

Glazov said he did not discuss the possibility with Mrs. Solzhenitsyn that her husband might be in danger of physical abuse or harm, but "I do not think that she has ruled out consideration of this."

She said she hoped that protests from Western intellectuals would help her husband, Glazov said.

The telephone call, disconnected and replaced by Glazov, lasted about five or six minutes, and Glazov said he did not question Mrs. Solzhenitsyn extensively.

"She has three children - 6 months, 2 years and 3 years I believe - and she was very upset," Glazov said.

The leader of the arrest party was described to Glazov by Mrs. Solzhenitsyn as "an older counselor of jurisprudence and an investigator of especially important affairs."

Solzhenitsyn has been criticized in the Soviet Union as an enemy of the country's philosophy since publication in the West of his new book, "Gulag Archipelago," which concerns the Soviet labor camp system. He has been expelled from the Soviet Writers' Union.

More from Wounded Knee

The opening arguments in the cases of Dennis Banks and Russell Means who face up to 180 years in jail for alleged "crimes" committed during the liberation of Wounded Knee, So. Dak, began in St. Paul today.

While Banks was giving his own opening statement, R. D. Hurd, the government prosecutor, interrupted him. Hurd objected to Banks mentioning the brutal murder of an Indian in Gordon, Neb., as having no relevance to the case. Banks contended that the history of events leading up to his being asked by the residents of Pine Ridge Reservation to come there and help them was important for a fair trial.

At that point his lawyers, Mark Lane, Ken Tilson, and Bill Kunstler, also attempted to argue Banks point. Judge Nichol, the presiding federal judge, threw all three lawyers out of the courtroom. Banks then charged the judge with three charges of contempt for depriving him of counsel.

People do not begin Transcendental Meditation because:

(1) They thing it's a religion — T.M. is a very simple, effortless, mechanical technique. It doesn't necessitate adopting any particular faith, belief or philosophy and yet it conflicts with none.
(2) They think meditation means withdrawing from life — Practice for 15-20 minutes twice a day, this technique is a preparation for dynamic activity. Over half a million people — students, businessmen, doctors, artists, athletes ... gain benefits daily from this simple practice.
(3) They think the organization is a rip-off — SIMS is a non-profit educational organization, and the course fee for learning T.M. is used solely to offer to as many people as possible throughout the world an opportunity to gain greater happiness and enjoyment in their lives. For all those interested, course fees are being raised March 1st.

No immediate tenure changes, provost asserts

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

Tenure plans — one of the touchiest subjects for the more than 1,200 faculty members on campus — are being reviewed, but no major changes are in sight, according to Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern.

During an informal interview last week the vice chancellor and Provost said department heads have been asked to prepare five year forecasts of their faculty hiring and tenure needs for presentation to his office February 1.

Gluckstern said the idea is to get departments to plan permanent faculty positions with an eye towards future budget levelling off.

The tenure system and the reasons why it is being reviewed both at UMass and at other universities are complicated, but of vital importance to faculty because their jobs are affected, and ultimately UMies themselves since faculty size and ability affects educational quality.

"Academic tenure" describes an employment agreement between a professor and any university where he teaches. Usually only senior members of a department who have been at the institution at least seven years have such a written agreement.

The deal, which must be approved by the UMass Trustees for each faculty member individually, says that the faculty member will never be fired from his job unless he is grossly incompetent, immoral or otherwise unacceptable.

The main reason for the deal, which is to assure faculty the right of free speech and action as professors — "academic freedom" — so that if they hold unpopular beliefs that may embarrass the University, they cannot be fired.

Normally a University grants academic tenure to a professor seven years after he comes to the institution, after a review process that includes his fellow faculty members the head of his department, the College Dean and Provost.

Older colleges and universities try to maintain a ratio of tenured to non-tenured faculty of about 1:1, although they resist setting of "quotas", or arbitrary numbers of each class, because sometimes a department may have more than half of its members who outstanding and deserve the life-time positions that a tenure contract provides.

But there is a disadvantage to having too many faculty members on tenure:

—If a promising young professor enters a department, and there are already too many tenured professors, he may be forced to leave the University after seven years because he can't be guaranteed a position.

—If a field of study, because of national shifts in importance, becomes obsolete, then the University is stuck with professors who have lifetime jobs but are no longer needed. Unless they can be used in other departments teaching new subjects, they become so much dead weight, taking a salary but inhibiting the hiring of new blood.

—Tenured faculty members usually earn higher salaries then non-tenured, junior professors. As the number of tenured faculty increases, so does the cost of faculty salaries as a whole. And in a time when Governor Francis Sargent has recommended a modest cut in the UMass budget, the campus can't afford new expenses above an allowable 10 per cent cost-of-living increase each year.

In the last 10 years UMass has grown from an agricultural college with 3,000 students to a University of 25,000 which is gaining a national reputation in several departments like education, ecominics, and chemistry.

Most faculty members at UMass are young. Many have reached or are about to reach their seventh year as professors, and therefore have been, or are about to be granted tenure.

Because of the rapid granting of tenure in recent years, the percentage of faculty with life-long contracts is up to over 80 per cent.

And that figure, which worries the trustees and frustrates Whitmore, is the reason for the current tenure review program. President Robert Wood, acting with a mandate from the Trustees wants the granting of tenure to be slowed, but not stopped so that the percentage will level off, and perhaps drop by attrition.

Why? Because without such a levelling off, UMass-Amherst is in danger of getting wedded to a permanent faculty for years to come, a condition the administration sees as disastorious to continued vitality of study programs.

Unfortunately, any tenure discussions don't sit well with young, untenured professors. In fact, the tenure issue alone was one of the chief rallying points for last November's unsuccessful bid by union organizers to become collective bargaining agents for the faculty.

The union implied in its organizing activities that Whitmore was planning a freeze on tenure appointments, or even imposition of a "quota system" to limit the number of tenure contracts let out in the years ahead.

Ironically, the whole problem came to a head because UMass grew so fast, adding 100 faculty members a year for several years in the late sixties and early seventies — that retirements didn't keep the tenure-non-tenure ration down.

And now as growth is stopped gradually, there aren't enough senior positions to go around.

Its a condition that nobody wanted to forsee, and no one predicted would come so soon. But like the parking and tsransportaion system implemented last spring, it has to come sometime, like it or not.

Demos meet

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee will hold its February meeting Thursday in the Town room of the Town Hall at 8:00. Following a brief business meeting, the committee will hear from another in its current series of 1974 candidates or potential candidates for state office.

No parking

Effective Monday, Feb. 25, parking in all University parking lots between the hours of 7 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Friday, will be limited to vehicles registered in the University parking system. Valid registration will be evidenced by either a lot decal or a temporary permit. Unregistered cars will no longer be permitted to park in the peripheral lots.

Also effective Monday, temporary permits will no longer be valid following the expiration date shown on the temporary. All persons who have expired temporaries, and who have not received permanent decals, should contact the Parking Office as soon as possible.

And, on a temporary experimental basis, all vehicles registered in the University parking system, as evidenced by a permanent decal or a valid temporary, will be permitted to park in their assigned lot or any of the three peripheral lots (11, 12, 13). If experience shows that this experiment does not overload the peripheral lots, this degree of mobility for registered vehicles will be made permanent.

This experiment is being tried in an effort to encourage carpools.

New course still open

The University of Massachusetts, how it operates and how it might be reformed, will be one of the topics of a three credit course being offered this semester by the STUDENT CENTER FOR EDUCATION RESEARCH.

It's not too late to enroll in the seminar which meets on Thursday evenings between 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. This Thursday the class will tour the library and subsequent sessions will meet with guest speakers from a variety of fields including investigative journalism, public interest research, computer sciences, questionairre construction, etc. Students participating in the seminar will engage in collective research so as to produce publishable and usable reports about specific aspects of the university.

For enrollment information and the location of this Thursday's meeting, contact the Center office in room 166 Campus Center or phone 545-2892 between the hours of 1 and 4:30.

Tourists!

General tours of the Library will be offered this semester on Wednesday afternoons, staring from the entrance lobby at 2:30 p.m. All University employees and students are welcome.

Hatch concert series begins

The Campus Center Food Service Department is sponsoring a Thursday night concert series in the Student Union Hatch. It is an attempt on their part to raise the quality of entertainment on campus specifically within the Campus Center (i.e. Bluewall, Hatch, IOC).

The admission charge of one dollar, they say, is as low as one could expect to charge students for the national acts and local bands whose talents were excluded under their current entertainment budget. The series starts Thursday with the much acclaimed Tracy Nelson and the Mother Earth Band. The Campus Center Food Service Department are hoping for a good crowd which will support the concert and clear the way for future attractions which include: Clean Living, John Hammond, The Fabulous Rhinestones, Dave Van Ronk, Fat, Mighty Joe Young, and Good Friend Coyote.

Need a sitter?

The Student Affairs Office, 229 Whitmore, recently started a babysitters notebook to match up UMass students seeking babysitting positions with members of the community seeking someone on a regular or irregular basis.

A UMass student looking for such a position should come to the office and fill out a general information form and also check the list of those who need a babysitter.

Area residents can stop in to look through the red notebook, call the office at 545-2300, or send a card with such information as name,address, phone number, a description of the position including the desired days and times, and whether or not transportation can be provided, to: Babysitters, Student Affairs Office, 229 Whitmore.

There is presenlty a long list of babysitters and the office is trying to improve the list of those seeking babysitters.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The Leo man can be prideful and boisterous. He gets to heart of matters, makes fantastic claims and puts on a whale of a show. He makes a great uncle, a worrisome lover and is a person who spends more than he should where the opposite sex enters picture. This is the man who smiles and is advance man for what always seems to be the greatest attraction; he is the man who will go all out to please but often finds that he is pleasing someone who couldn't care less — he is the man who loves and is loved but doesn't always know who is loving or envying him. He is a puzzle and, very often, mainly to himself.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money and friends will not mix. Know difference between loyalty and foolishness. Find out what costs are and do something about it. Be creative rather than impulsive. New love could be on horizon. Young person looks up to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid excess speed — traffic accident involves you if you insist on throwing caution to winds. Be careful around electricity, sharp objects. You can have fine time now if you know difference between being daring and sticking out your chin.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Expand. Break barriers of restriction. Sagittarian figures prominently. If you are keeping secret, be prepared for cat to escape the bag. Your ship is coming in, but in way which could be different than anticipated.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money and effort blend and you could, for once, get credit for past efforts. Specify bill of goods. Refuse to be talked into or out of situations. Your best approach is one which emphasizes frankness, thoroughness and a reverence for truth. Act accordingly.

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22): Petty annoyances could seem to multiply. Key is to maintain balance, poise — and not to retaliate. Changes you seek will occur. Aggressive individual will trip himself — or herself. Gemini, Virgo could figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What appears insignificant could seem to "grow." Means understand that some persons who toss away lines may merely be probing, testing. Relatives, neighbors make thier mark. It may be necessary to fight for freedom.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on spending and limit. You may be taking plunge without being aware of "temperature." Pisces, Virgo persons might be in picture. Check costs. Get accounting. Try to fathom long-range effects. Value — or lack of it — will become evident.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Opposition is active and vocal. If you expect to have things your own way, you probably are mistaken. Key now is to judge, evaluate. Capricorn, Cancer persons could figure prominently. No one will give you something for nothing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Many now seem to take it as duty to tell you what be patient and don't lose sense of humor. Finish what you start. Find better means of communication, distribution. Aries, Libra are likely to be involved.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends disagree. Emotions take over — those around you act on impulse. Key now is not to compound errors. New approach is necessary. Individual who stimulates may not be in agreement with what you do. Be open. Clash of ideas is healthy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can be optimistic despite some fiery actions, reactions from older individuals who refuse to be confused by facts You ultimately will be vindicated. Another Aquarian will open doors for you. Follow through on "inner beliefs."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Use individual style in writing, speaking — communicate in way that imprints, leaves mark. You obtain fast response. In past you may have been kept waiting. But now call or message comes through quickly. Know it and be ready to counterpunch.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are stubborn but a person who adheres to principles.

With winning attitude

Swimmers tackle Tufts

The University of Massachusetts mens' swim team sports a record of three wins and four losses going into the last three weeks of the regular season. Looking at that record, you may not think it is very impressive. However, if you take a second look at the scores — the fact that they could very easily be 5-2, — and the way they compiled that record, you have to admit it is something to talk about.

In the past three weeks the Minutemen have managed to break three long-standing varsity records as well as almost breaking three more. Just last week against MIT Ben Crooker set a new record in the 1000 yards freestyle with a time of 11:03.3. Dave Boucher broke his own mark in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:22.9. Interestingly enough, both of them are freshmen. The other record was set by a fairly young combination of talent. Freshman Duncan Loomis, sophomores Joe Hebert and Ron Boucher and finally veteran co-captain Dick Blaisdell managed to break the seven-year old 400 yard freestyle relay record with a winning time of 3:27.7. And it seems that three marks may be established before the year is through.

Why the sudden change from past seasons? There appear to be several major reasons. Heading this list would have to be the addition of some fine young talent as well as the talented coaching of coaches Abraham Melamed and Larry Lammert (replacing Joe Rogers who is on sick leave). As one enters the Boyden Pool during a workout one can sense the feeling of seriousness and dedication that goes into the team's accomplishments, because few teams work harder on this campus than this year's swim team.

They start at 7 a.m. for about an hour of swimming and then dry exercises and then again in the afternoon for about three hours of the same thing. As Coach Melamed, himself an All-American in the butterfly from Western Liberty College in West Virginia, put it, "I've never worked so many yards in workout, but in the end, it's going to make them better swimmers.

In talking with co-captain George Kwiecien yesterday, he said that the feeling on the team is that five of the last six meets can be victories (perennial champ UConn is admittedly too strong for the Minutemen this year). However, it would be wise to point out that swimming, like track, is a sport of upsets and backfired strategy and that anything can happen.

Still, the attitude on the team is a positive one, and it's made of the belief that the harder it works, the more breaks it will make for itself, and eventually regain the status and recognition that it once had on this campus. Today comes another opportunity to prove itself to the students. The Minutemen face a well-balanced Tufts team at the Boyden Pool at 4 p.m.

Rutigliano resigns

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Sam Rutigliano, an assistant coach with the New England Patriots of the Nation Football League since 1971, resigned Tuesday after 18 years as a football coach.

"I regret very much that I must make this particular move at this time," he said in a statement released by the Patriots. "I have nothing but the greatest respect and admiration for head coach Chuck Fairbanks and the entire Patriots organization."

A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., he graduated from Tulsa where he played end on the football team. After serving as head coach at three different high schools, Rutigliano joined the staff at the University of Connecticut in 1964 and later coached at Maryland and Denver.

JV hoopsters yawn past Rockwood Prep

By STEVE SARACENO

No. 56 stopped at the right of the key and popped. Good. Thunderous standing ovation. The black-shirted peewees, thanks to the basket by the four-foot sparkplug, go ahead, 6-4.

It was the most exciting thing to happen all night.

In an excruciatingly boring game, highlighted only by the halftime show of mini-players, the UMass JV's romped over Rockwood Academy at the Cage for the second time this year.

Final score: 69-47. Last time they won by 44.

Arnie Johnson and Billy Santos, the Orr and Esposito of the subvarsity, once again were top guns with 16 and 12 points respectively. Johnson also vacuumed in 14 rebounds.

For slightly improved Rockwood, Joe Wilson garnered 15 points, John Dean 14, and Dick Hargraves 12. Dean hit the boards for 13 Rockwood rebounds.

UMass led from the start, and aside from the speculation that the visitors' Dean may be the John Dean, the game was perfect therapy for an insomniac.

While fans were wondering whatever happened to Rockwood's bald player, Arnie Johnson was making the rest of the Academy players' hair fall out, what with his tentacles stuffing every other preppie shot and all. And Santos made what hair was left turn grey, as his roundball wizardry gave dribbling new and greater stature.

Dave Tewhill, Glenn Cooper, Mike Healy, and Gary Kapinos added to UMass' ho-hum butchering of Rockwood with 30 points all told. And Glenn Taylor opened a few sleepy eyes with his five assists, topping even the playmaker Santos.

The Minutemen shot decent from the field and foul line (50 per cent and 63 per cent), but Rockwood lost again due to their laughable floor percentage. Thirty-four per cent (giggle). Wilson (their high scorer) managed to miss 12 out of sixteen shots.

The Dick Button Show

For Dick Button it was nothing new. He had been here many times before, both as competitor and broadcaster with ABC's Wide World of Sports.

And so, I guess, it was fitting that he served as MC for the parade of Champions that followed the final competition in the sparkling Civic Center where Marvin's Gang had featured basketball as the Number One THING In the City.

Well, it took a cute 17-year-old high school student to put Marvin in his place back in the North End and for four days the Center beamed with TV lights and many, many skaters in quest of a dream reached by so few.

Dorothy Hamill may not be Peggy Flemming or Janet Lynn ... but she is the Senior Women's National Figure Skating champion and she deserves it. For she skated her heart out.

This was, however, a year that saw the men skaters perform better than the women skaters. The caliber of John McKellen, Jr.'s showmanship was unsurpassed during the four day period as he was called out for three encores during the parade of new champions that lasted until nearly 11:30 Saturday night.

It was, in fact, McKellen that brought the crowd to its feet three times and drew applause when nearly landing a triple lutz jump ... a feet performed in Nationals competition once in twelve years, and that done earlier in the same day by Terry Kubicka of the Arctic Blades Figure Skating Club from Los Angeles.

And dethroned queens, too, could be seen among the spectators watching the show early during the week. Janet Lynn was there along with countless others, as they reflected on the past. Janet Lynn is soon to be appearing at the Boston Garden as the Ice Follies invide the Hub city while the Bruins are on the road.

Charles Tickner, who placed third in the senior men's finals, pulled one of the most outrageous stunts of the entire show when, in his final freestyle performance, he fell twice and then proceeded to leave the ice without first reporting to the referee's table. He had claimed that something was wrong with his blades and, after great delay ... returned to the ice to complete his program.

I mean, really now ... everyone else in the competition was under the same pressure and either produced or did not place. Tickner did not produce yet came back to finish third, earning a bronze medal. Is this right? I think not. Sure the guy is good as he later proved in the final show, but...

The pairs competition went just about as expected with Melissa Militano and her partner Johnny Johns gaining the berth on the World Team that will compete in Munich early next month. Their routine was done with great precision and crowd pleasing stunts and lifts that left many a mouth hanging in awe. The surprise of the night, though, was Tai Babilonia, a thirteen year-old black girl and her 15 year-old partner Randy Gardner who placed second. Many one arm lifts highlighted their program from start to finish.

Lastly, the people of Providence the the Providence Skating Club deserve great credit for putting on such an exhibition. Having talked with many who have seen an uncountable number of Nationals, I found them saying that this was one of the best organized up till now. And that is a compliment to Providence!

Tonelli wins UConn slalom

Snowless winter slows skiers

By MDC STAFF

In a disastrous no-snow winter, the UMass varsity ski team got in as much practice as possible on the artificial white stuff while their cross-town rivals spent three weeks in France on real snow. The difference in training showed up at Round Top Mountain in Plymouth Union, Vermont in the UConn Slalom on Saturday and also in the AIC G.S. on Sunday. These races, the fifth and sixth in a season with four races already postponed because of a lack of natural snow, were held on extremely thin cover where skiers, after the first 20, were literally shredding their skis on rocks. The nine colleges in the division, all hungry for racing, fielded 92 racers while Brown skied a guest team.

Saturday's slalom started well with Steve Tonelli three seconds ahead of Bob Morrow of Northeastern in the first run and he widened this margin to nearly five seconds in the second run to in the race by the almost unheard of margin of 4.56 seconds. Mark Brown and Dave Babbott of Amherst copped 3rd and 4th places while UConn took 5th and 6th, BC took 7th then UMass' Dick McWade, who was second to Tonelli in his first run, had trouble in his second and finished 8th. Jim Hawkins, in his first year at UMass, was fourth in his first run but also had trouble in his second run and finished 9th. Had either Dave Ferris or Dave Rutter had a good second run, UMass would have finished first instead of fourth. Since each team skis six men, the best four to count, UMass lacked a good fourth. The order of finish was Amherst first with a total team time of 436.35, UConn second with 450.46, Northeastern third with 452.47, UMass fourth with 452.54. Other colleges in the order of finish were: B.C., B.U., Tufts, AIC, Bentley and Brown. Slalom is always a tricky event with many who don't finish and this race was no exception. Giant slalom, on the other hand, is a much faster race, but most racers manage to stand up and finish because the turns are long carving ones rather than the quick neat turns of slalom.

The UMass team decided to play catch-up ball by going "all out" and this proved to be disastrous to every skier except co-captain Kurt Syer, who did not ski on Saturday.

In his first run, Steve Tonelli lost his line and fell badly, reinjuring his knee which he had torn up in a seven college ski scrimage at Berkshire East two weeks previously. X-rays disclosed that he had been skiing and racing with a bone chip in his knee for two weeks. Doctors say that after a week's rest, he will be ready to ski again. In his first run, Bob Chodos straddled a gate and was out of it. Kurt Syer put two good runs together to finish 6th with 154.4 seconds. Jim Hawkins had trouble in his first run, but ended with a two run time of 160.2. Dick McWade had trouble in both runs and ended with 189.9 seconds. Co-Captain Dave Rutter, nearly always reliable, had two solid runs but the communications failed in his second run and the officials had no time on him. On his third try at about 4:30 in flat light, too soon after his second run, he fell and finished with a two run time of 200.0 seconds. Without a good fourth man, UMass finished seventh overall. Amherst was first with a team time of 620.1, Tufts was second with 645.3, B.U. was third with 661.5. Other teams in the order of finish were Northeastern, Bentley, UConn, UMass, AIC and B.C.

UMass squads crunch canines

Terriers tamed, 77-6

By STEVE DeCOSTA
MDC Basketball Writer

It is a difficult thing to say that a basketball team did not play well when they beat their opponents by 17 points.

But the Minutemen did not play well last night even though they beat YanCon foe Boston University 77-60 at the Cage.

"You have to expect this after two tough losses in a row," remarked UMass coach Jack Leaman. But even Leaman couldn't have expected what transpired on the court.

The Minutemen turned the ball over a total of 22 times in the game, including 16 in the second half. But BU was not without mistakes of their own as they managed to amass 21 giveaways.

Leaman substituted freely in an effort to find a combination that would click, but most of his efforts were to no avail. The Minutemen were lethargic for most of the night, playing well at times, but inevitably falling into periods when they seemed to be sleepwalking.

It was only the total ineptitude of the Terriers that allowed for the final margin of 17. Their failure to attack the boards was exemplified in the UMass rebound margin of 16. And it seemed that half the Terriers' shots missed both glass and iron and only 36 percent of their field goal attempts found their way through the twine.

But, as Leaman said, "We played well in spots to break the game open. I thought (Jim) Burke, (Rick) Pitino, and (Bill) Endicott played well in the guard spots," he added.

Indeed it was Endicott who led the team in scoring with 18 points. Pitino added 13 as he hit on six of eight shots from the field. Burke saw only twelve minutes of action but interrupted what little offense the Terriers could muster with several key steals.

Al Skinner managed 14 points for the winners, but more importantly, he held BU's Kenny Boyd to 13. Boyd came into the game with an average of 21.1 and was leading the conference in scoring.

Another plus for the minutemen was the play of Steve Mayfield. Shaky in recent games, the freshman regained his composure as he played solid defense, blocked two shots, and chipped in with ten points of his own.

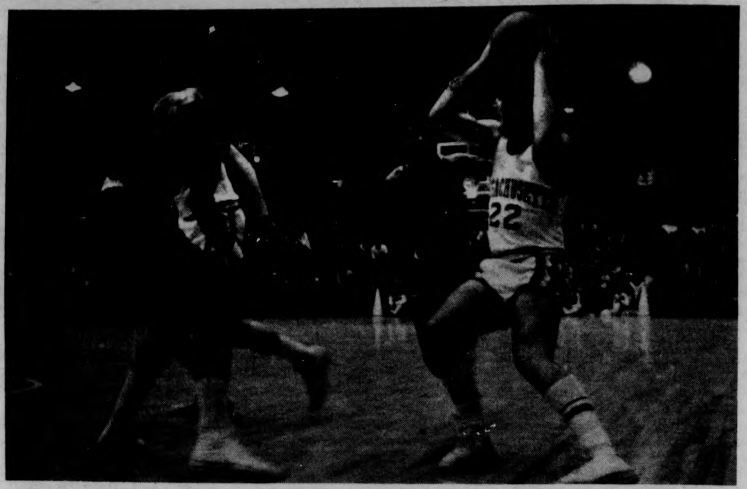
Neil Burns was the high scorer for the terriers with 16 points and Walt Chesley added 13.

The game was played before a disappointing crowd of only 3200 at the Cage. It was the first time in recent memory that the Minutemen failed to draw a capacity crowd in their home court.

Despite the ineptitude, Leaman called the contest "an important Yankee Conference game to get out of the way." Looking ahead, there are several more conference games coming up that could be a bit tougher to get through unscathed.

URI comes to the Cage Saturday night with hopes of the Conference crown dancing in their heads. The Rans are presently 6-3 and an upset over UMass would put them within one game of the top.

But before the Minutemen can worry about URI, they have to get by Springfield Thursday night at the Cage. Game time for that one is 8 o'clock.



THE LIGHT AT THE END OF THE BU TUNNEL is John Murphy, and Rick Pitino (22) is the man who's trying to find him. Pitino wound up with 13 points and a very important eight assists. (Staff Photo-Dan Smith)

Rheault makes Huskies bowl, 7-1

By BILL BALLOU
MDC Staff Hockey Writer

You couldn't call it pretty, but the 7-1 win for UMass over Connecticut last night certainly meant a lot.

The victory assures the Minutemen a .500-plus record in Division Two and if they can manage wins this weekend over Colby and Bowdoin they'll almost certainly get a good playoff seed.

Despite the one-sided score the game wasn't. The Huskies actually outshot UMass 41-39 and only some fine goaltending by Chick Rheault, especially when the UMies were killing penalties, allowed the game to break open.

Mike Merchant and Steve Nims, just back from a knee injury, led the UMass attack with two goals each, and Robbie Quinlan, Jim Lyons, and Jim Lynch had one each to round out the scoring.

The Minutemen wasted little time in breaking out on top. After a raft of fine scoring chances that were thwarted by UConn goalie Lou Parker, the UMies managed to dribble one past him.

At 9:14 Dave Alesandroni took a wrist shot from the left wing boards that was deflected by Merchant in the slot about fifteen feet in front of Parker. The puck rolled slowly into the lefthand corner and the Minutemen led.

Then, at the 14:56 mark Jim Lynch swatted a bouncing puck past Parker for a 2-0 lead. The Minutemen had a power play, their third of the period and Connecticut just couldn't get the puck out of their zone. Mike Merchant had a couple of swipes at it before it rolled to Lynch and he just lifted it past Parker's stick side.

UMass broke it open in the second period with a three-goal barrage, despite being shorthanded most of the time.

Merchant got his second of the night on a delightful play at the 1:17 mark. He cut across the UConn defense and zipped a thirty-foot wrist shot past Parker for the goal.

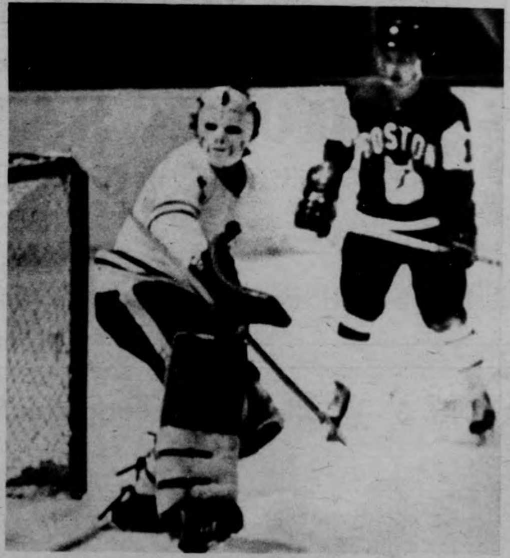
And at 15:06 Lyons matched Merchant's effort by banging home a rebound off a Merchant shot into a virtually vacant cage.

Finally, at 17:20, Brian Mulcahy fired a shot from the left point that Nims tipped past Parker and the Minutemen had given themselves an insurmountable lead, considering the way Rheault was playing.

Connecticut broke Rheault's shutout at the 6:24 mark of the third period when Ray Ferry converted a partial breakaway on a Huskies power play, and when the Minutemen were forced to ill 1:11 of a two-man disadvantage things began to look a bit scary.

But they survived that and at 11:46 Robbie Quinlan scored his first goal as a forward to put UMass back in front by five. Quinlan's was a spectacular unassisted effort and shortly thereafter Steve Nims did the same to lock the scoring up at 7-1.

The win gives UMass an eight-and-five record in Division Two and greatly enhances their playoff hopes. They stand at eight-and-nine overall while Connecticut slips to thirteen-and-seven.



HE HAD BETTER LUCK THIS TIME--Chick Rheault whirls in desperation at the B.U. debacle. Last night against the UConn Huskies his 40 saves told the story of the game. (Staff photo-Al Chapman)

Bruins are lucky dealers

By BILL BALLOU

Thought the Schmautz for Oddleifson and O'Donnell trade was a bad one, did you? So did most of New England, save Harry Sinden, and so did I. The loss of Fred O'Donnell falls into the "who cares?" category, but Chris Oddleifson was, with Al Sims, the outstanding rookie on this Bruins team.

Bobby Schmautz has a year and a half of impressive statistics behind him at Vancouver, but you've got to wonder about the five years in age the B's are giving up. Probably the fact that there's an expansion draft this season and Boston doesn't need any extra bodies around, as well as the amount of money the Bruins were paying Andre Savard to watch Oddleifson play contributed to the deal.

The Bruins have had a remarkably good record trade-wise, though, since "THE TRADE" in May of 1967, so first impressions may not be entirely accurate in this case. Just take a look at the major dealings Milt Schmidt and Sinden have made since that time:

MAY, 1967 -- Bruins received Phil Esposito, Fred Stanfield, and Ken Hodge from Chicago for Jack Norris, Pit Martin, and Gilles Marotte. With Stanfield gone for Gilles Gilbert, it gives the B's three all-stars off that trade. The Hawks traded Marotte for Bill White, so they ended up with two in Martin and White. A blockbuster trade that Boston got the best end of.

MAY, 1967 -- Boston got Eddie Shack from Toronto in return for Murray Oliver. Shack did nothing and was later traded to Los Angeles with Ross Lonsberry for Ken Turlik (that's right) and the Kings' first round draft picks in 1971 and 1973, who turned out to be Ron Jones and Andre Savard. If Savard becomes a star then the Bruins win again, if not it's a nothing deal.

MAY, 1969 -- Bruins traded Barry Gibbs and Tommy Williams to Minnesota for a draft choice, which turned out to be Don Tannahill, and Fred O'Donnell. Bruins appear to lose, just by a hair, on this one. Gibbs has become a good defenseman, although chances are he would have been lost in an expansion draft anyway.

DECEMBER, 1969 -- Bruins traded Jim Harrison to Toronto for Wayne Carleton. Both are now in the WHA playing for teams that claim they are the best players in the league. Neither team did much for themselves.

JANUARY, 1971 -- The Bruins, in a three-way deal with Toronto and Philadelphia, gave up Rick MacLeish and Danny Schock to the Flyers for Mike Walton of Toronto. After 2½ up-and-down seasons in Boston Walton jumped to the WHA, where he's been a disappointment. MacLeish scored 50 goals and 100 points with Philly last season, while Schock is on his way to becoming a name known only to AHL public address announcers. But oh, Rick MacLeish would have looked good in black and gold. The B's were taken on this one.

NOVEMBER, 1971 -- Bruins traded away Ivan Boldirev to Oakland for Chris Oddleifson. Boldirev has never blossomed, Oddleifson gives signs he may, but now is gone for Schmautz. Boston gets the edge here.

FEBRUARY, 1972 -- Boston traded Rick Smith, Bob Stewart, and Reg Leach to California for Carol Vadnais and Don O'Donoghue. Smith, a good young player, has jumped, Leach still hasn't come close to matching his potential, and Stewert looks like he's headed for a lifetime of mediocrity. Vadnais, of course has become one of the best defensemen in hockey. O'Donoghue jumped to the WHA and NHL fans are glad for it. Chalk up a steal for Boston.

RECENT TRADES--Late last season the B's traded what eventually came to be Eddie Johnston to Toronto for Jacques Plante, supposed playoff insurance. Plante was nothing of the sort, Johnston is helping the Leafs. They also traded Ace Bailey and Murray Wing to Detroit for Gary Doak. A "so-what" deal involving equally mediocre players, except for Wing who's super mediocre.

And so far this season, aside from the Schmautz trade, Boston has given up Nick Beverly and gotten Darryl Edestrand, a steal from Pittsburgh, and they've literally "given up" Don Awrey to St. Louis, receiving Jake Rathwell (the immortal) and a No. 2 draft choice in return. Awrey's an all-star now, but was pushed out of Boston plans by Al Sims. He probably would have gone in the expansion draft.

The Bruins have acquired, through trades, Phil Esposito, Ken Hodge, Gilles Gilbert, and Carol Vadnais (John Bucyk too, if you want to go back to 1957). The only duping they've received was in the Rick MacLeish deal.

So, if their latest move looks weak at first glance, give it a few more glances. If it goes true to form, it'll work out.

Solzhenitsyn deported

By ROON LEWALD
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP) - Banished from his own country, the Soviet Nobel Prize author Alexander Solzhenitsyn arrived Wednesday in West Germany. He apparently will begin a life in exile in the West.

The last Soviet citizen of equal prominence to be forcibly deported was Leon Trotsky, who was thrust across the Turkish border in 1929 after losing a power struggle with Josef Stalin.

Regarded in the West as the greatest living Russian author, Solzhenitsyn arrived in West Germany aboard a Soviet jetliner that landed at Frankfurt airport in late afternoon. Newsmen were barred from approaching the plane which taxied to a far station on the tarmac.

A fellow passenger reported that as Solzhenitsyn stepped off the ramp he was met by a woman who handed him a single red rose.

Solzhenitsyn was arrested in Moscow Tuesday by police who muscled their way past his wife into her apartment and dragged the 55-year-old author away, Mrs. Solzhenitsyn and her mother reported.

The Soviet news agency Tass announced in Moscow that the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the country's parliament, had stripped the author of his citizenship "for performing systematically actions that are incompatible with being a citizen of the U.S.S.R. and detrimental to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

It added he was exiled Wednesday and that his family will be allowed to join him "when they deem it necessary."

His wife, Natalya Svetlova, waited nervously at home for a call from her husband.

The Tass announcement was the first official word on Solzhenitsyn since his arrest 27 hours earlier.

Solzhenitsyn's arrest and expulsion from the Soviet Union climaxed a campaign of criticism and abuse in the Soviet press, radio and television following publication in the West of his latest book, "Gulag Archipelago," two months ago.

The book, an account of the Stalinist concentration camp system, under which Solzhenitsyn had spent eight years as a prisoner, traced the origins of camp terror to Vladimir I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state and revered by the nation's present leaders.

The West German government aanounced that it had been informed in advance by the Kremlin that Solzhenitsyn would be coming to Germany, and spokesman Ruediger von Wechmar said the country was prepared to accept him.

In Zurich, Solzhenitsyn's Swiss lawyer, Fritz Heeb, told a newsman he expected the author to settle in a north European country. "I do not think that Solzhenitsyn will stay in West Germany or come to Switzerland," Heeb said. The lawyer planned to fly to Germany on Thursday to meet with Solzhenitsyn.

Solzhenitsyn left the airport by car for the Eifel Mountain country home of German author Heinrich Boll, another Nobel Prize winner and president of the International P.E.N. Club. As president of the club, whose initials stand for poets, essayists and novelists, Boll had met Solzhenitsyn on two visits to Moscow.

Solzhenitsyn was greeted by Boll in the walled courtyard of the farm house at Langenbroich, 18 miles southwest of Bonn.

The German author told interviewers that Solzhenitsyn would soon make public statements but for the present had to take the safety of his family, which was still in the Soviet Union, into consideration.

At about the same time Solzhenitsyn arrived in Germany, dissident novelist Vladimir Maximov disclosed in Moscow that he had received permission to make a year-long visit to France. This aroused speculation that he too would be exiled abroad.

Maximov said he was told last Friday that he and his wife would get the visas which they had applied for last October and which had earlier been refused.

Senate acts on outside funding, campus recruiters

By MIKE TETREAULT

Last night, a meeting of the full Student Senate rejected a move from the Budget Committee which would have forced Social Action Student Groups to find outside funding. These student organizations would have had to look for funding outside of traditional Student Government appropriations by setting arbitrary limits on how much money could be allocated. No social-oriented group could have, for example, received 100 per cent of their budgets for more than two years.

In a bid to generate more interest in student government the Senate approved an extension of the deadline for filing nomination papers, to fill the approximately forty vacant senate seats, till noon Tuesday.

They gave their nod to a motion sponsored by Student Senate Speaker David Booker and Senate President Nick Apostola. The action would force on-campus recruiters to debate corporate and personnel policy upon request of a petition signed by at least one hundred students or faculty. Recruiters would have to respond in writing two weeks before they are allowed to use campus facilities.

The Senate returned an amendment on judiciary policy to committee. The amendment which would have appointed an Office of Affirmative Action was returned to the Governmental Affairs Committee. Its clause on racial and sexual discrimination met with opposition, not planned on, from civil libitarian concerns among some of the senators.

In other moves the Senate approved:

—the appointments of Martin J. Miller as Chairperson of Academic Affairs, Jack Margossian as Chairperson of the Finance Committee, and Peter Birnbaum to the Budget Committee.

—the creation of an assistant Treasurer to expedite the present workload of Treasurer Paul Hamel.

—an agreement to no further appropriations from the Student Senate account till March 6, 1974.

—a change in the Senate by-laws which would cut down to twice the number of times a student organization could apply for a budget request. Also, all budgets rejected by a two-thirds vote in committee would have to appeal to the Executive Committee, thus relieving the full Senate of valuable time.

Saying "I love you" through the years

By MICHEAL E. C. GERY

"For this was Seynt Valentyne's day.
When every foul cometh ther to choose his mate."

In the 14th century, Chaucer wrote about the popular belief that February 14 was a special day in a bird's love life. Since then men and women have applied that belief to themselves.

But a February 14th celebration was not originally for the birds. The Romans had feasts for Pan and Juno in mid-February during which it was customary to hold lotteries where young men randomly chose young women with whom they might celebrate.

The annual love-lotteries were eventually altered by the Christian clergy, who regarded the practice as lewd, such that the names of saints were substituted for the names of women. One was urged to emulate his chosen saint throughout the year.

As time went on, the custom took a more carnal course. The poet Lydgate in the 14th centurv wrote that on this day men "chose theyr choyse by grete affeccioun."

By the 1600's the Scots had resumed the lottery. "Billets" were chosen and partners were established. It was noted that "the valentines give balls and treats to their mistresses, wear their billets several days upon their bosoms or sleeves, and this little sport often ends in love."

St. Valentine himself had nothing to do with these sports. He was a Roman priest who refused to deny Christianity. He was jailed, and on February 14 he was beheaded.

Legend has it that the martyred priest left a note for the jailer's daughter, whom he had befriended, saying "from your Valentine."

How Bishop Valentine's doomsday became associated with chance lovers might be explained by some confusion experienced by the love-crazed, mid-winter merrymakers. It seems that the Norman word "galantin", meaning a gallant lover of the fair sex, came to be pronounced "valantin," since "v" and "g" were frequently interchangeable in popular speech.

When sending missives became a commercial enterprise, comic and vulgar valentines were cheap. The Chicago Post Office once prohibited 25,000 vulgar valentines from the U.S. mailbag. The post office in Loveland, Colorado deals in high volume during the week of Valentine's Day.

Thus a celebration as enjoyable as one when pronouncements of love are made has been sustained throughout the ages. It is an English custom for men to wear a bachelor-button on Valentine's Day; if the flower lives through the day, he marries his current sweetheart; it it dies, he goes on the make.

The custom of saying "I love you" on February 14 is still alive. But does it have any effect? Shakespeare's King Theseus wondered the same thing: "St. Valentine is past;—Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?"

Triples: double the trouble

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

Many UMies complain about having problems with their roommate, and when one has to cope with two roommates, these problems are doubled.

There are thirty "legal" triples in the UMass dorms: four each in Emerson, Melville, James and Thoreau Houses in Southwest, and fourteen in Johnson House in the Northeast Area. These rooms are "legal", for they provide the minimum requirement of six square feet per person, as opposed to the "illegal" triples, which are supposed to have only two occupants, and do not meet the requirements previously mentioned.

Concern over the social problems which usually accompany occupancy in a triple has prompted action by the Northeast and Central Area Business Office. Joan Moore, Business Manager, and Bill Taylor, an Environmental Specialist, went to Johnson to talk with some of the students in the triples, and to determine whether or not it would be advisable to have Physical Plant employees knock down the adjoining walls of four of the triples and converting them into six doubles. Ms. Moore referred to the problem of the "third person complex".

"When three people are placed together, two of them inevitably become better friends and one is left out." Although the kids we talked to didn't feel that they had experienced any problems, all of them knew of other people who had."

Triplin' along

Ms. Moore included the proposal about triple-conversion in the preliminary budget for fiscal year '75; however, she doesn't know whether or not it will achieve realization.

"The budget's presently up in the air and out of our hands," said Ms. Moore. "We also recommended that if there must be triples, the students to be placed in them should be informed beforehand, and advised of the problems that they should expect to encounter."

Richard Havens, who lives in one of the Johnson triples, had to deal with these problems last semester. Each person in Havens' room had a different personality.

"We each went our own way," Havens said. "It didn't work out."

He also complained of the size of the room.

"They say that we have enough room, but they're only considering "survival space" — with three people in the room, your desks, bureaus, and beds alone take up 60 square feet. You also need living space!

Havens has written letters to the Housing Office and attended Student Senate meetings in an effort to let his feelings be known.

"I hate triples!!!" Havens exclaimed.

Bobbie Oliver, on the contrary, does not share Havens' contempt for triples. In fact, she requested to be placed in her triple in Johnson.

"I'm in a different situation, than most people. Things have worked out for us. We have enough room here, but I've also lived in a triple in Emerson, and they're very small."

Freshmen and transfer students are placed in triples in the beginning of the semester because the University must overcommit itself, accepting more students than it has housing for, counting on a certain percentage of students to withdraw before the end of the semester, eventually eliminating the need for triples, according to Floyd Martin, Assistant Area Director of Southwest.

"It's my understanding that triples exist in Southwest only where people want to be in triples," said Martin. "The intention is not to make them permanent triples. After things stabilize, those who want to, can change rooms."

The number of students that are admitted to UMass is based on the amount of money that the Board of Trustees allots to the University, according to Bruce Cochrane, Director of Housing. Cochrane repeatedly emphasized that the University does not like to place students in triples.

According to Rich Picciuca, Johnson House Head of Residence said, however, that there is a University regulation that an area can't take space away that makes money. He feels that this rule is contradictory.

"It only works for one semester," Picciuca said. "In the spring, when we usually don't place students in triples because of the smaller number of students in the dorm, they're not making the money either."

Picciuca has been working to get triples abolished since he came to UMass in 1971.

"The administration has listened to me," said Picciuca, "although it never quite seemed as if a final decision was made."

Bromery approves faculty promotions

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Promotions for 72 UMass faculty members have been approved by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. The promotions, which raised in rank 11 instructors to assistant professors, 30 assistant professors to associate professors and 31 associate professors to professors, were effective as of Feb. 3.

In order to be considered for promotion, a faculty member must be recommended to the dean of his school by his department head or by the chairperson of his departmental or school personnel committee.

The faculty members of each department and college or school determine the structure of their personnel committee and elect its members. Personnel committees are subject to change during September but at no other time during the academic year.

Each recommendation must include the following: 1) The faculty member's up-to-date biographical sketch. 2) A complete list of his publications. 3) At least two outside letters of evaluation. 4) A memorandum from the department head or personnel committee chairperson giving detailed reasons for originating or supporting the recommendation. This should include detailed appraisal of the teaching ability of the faculty member. 5) A similar memorandum from the chairperson of the personnel committee.

Recommendations for tenure should follow the same guidelines.

After receiving his departmental recommendations, the dean of each school should consult with the personnel committee of his school and then submit a memorandum to the Provost summarizing his recommendations as well as those of his personnel committee.

Recommendations are submitted annually.

According to a memorandum from the Provost's office the "normal" (not maximum) periods of time to be spent in the several ranks would be: Instructors — three to six years (or until acquisition of the doctorate), Assistant professors — six to seven years, associate professors — at least six years.

It is the right of each faculty member to discuss his situation with respect to salary and promotion with his department head, his academic dean, the Provost, the Chancellor, the President of the University or the Committee on Faculty and Educational Policy of the Board of Trustees.

The raise in salary a faculty member receives along with his promotion depends on a number of things including his background and the number of people that are in his field (If there are many he will get less pay than if there are few.)

The announced minimum standard salaries for different ranks according to the American Association of University Professors' Annual Survey of Academic Salary and fringe benefits for the academic year 1973-74 are as follows: professor, $14,462; associate professor, $12,396; assistant professor, $9,297; instructor, $6,611.

The maximum salary for each is never a set amount due to the fact that the cost of living and other factors may vary the top range.

Fierce snow-fighting erupts in Southwest

By SHERMAN BOYSON
MDC Staff Writer

Sales of Ben-Gay will probably be pretty high in the Southwest Munchies today, as a lot of arms start hurting in the aftermath of a rooftop snowball fight last night.

The rooftops of Cance, Pierpont, and Moore Houses, and the surrounding courtyards erupted into battlefields as approximately 150 students declared war on anyone within striking distance of the snowballs.

Although everyone and his brother tried to take credit for starting the battle, most persons agreed that a few kids on the top of Moore House started it when they ambushed returning students from the nearby dining commons. The few on the roof soon became many. Then, Pierpont and Cance roofs quickly followed with armies of their own, and warfare began.

This wan't your average snowball fight. Size alone separated it from the backyard fights one is used to. About seventy students manned the roofs, while eighty more were stationed on the ground.

The residents in Washington and Adams Towers had the safest positions, as their lounge windows provided them with a ringside view and the comfort of protection.

Military strategy was used throughout the battle. One roof would stockpile ammunition, and then charge another roof en masse. Meanwhile, the troops on the ground were using trees and walls to protect them as they fired upon their enemies on the roofs.

The ground forces had the disadvantage in firing ability. One could get a lot more force behind a snowball when you were throwing it in a downward thrust compared to an upward one.

The ground forces however, had the advantage of unlimited ammunition. The roof troops found their supply of snow quickly diminishing. Cance solved the problem by having snow shipped from below.

A police car stopped in the horseshoe parking lot on the side of Moore, and suggested to the rooftop warriors that they should vacate their positions. Most of the students on Moore complied with the request, but the other two dorms maintained their posts.

A police officer came to the roof of Moore, but by then all the troops were located on top of the other two dorms. The officer tried yelling at the students to get them to leave, but his only reply was an occasional snowball at his feet.

Eventually the police were able to have the fighting moved from the roofs to the ground. No arrests were made.

Pierpont's lobby became the main battlefield, while others battled students in their rooms. Wastebaskets of snow provided the floors with the necessary ammunition.

Some damage was reported from the dorms in the battle area. Moore House reported only minor damage, with some snow in the building and some screens pushed in from the force of the snowballs. Washington Lower Head of Residence Carol Radzik said "One window is definitely broken, and I've heard that there may be a few others." Pierpont Head of Residence Sandi Blount reported "no damage, except for a few wet rugs in the lobby." The Cance Head of Residence was unavailability for comment, but observers reported seeing about three broken windows in the building.

Student judiciary: it's there for you

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

Maybe you aren't one of those people who has had the experience of being busted, for various reasons, on this campus.

Then again, may you are.

Maybe you don't know about the Student Judiciary Court system at UMass.

Maybe you should.

According to Jim Pappas, Student Attorney General at UMass., the benefits of this court system are far from being reaped. He complains that most people don't even know the system exists.

The biggest advantage, Pappas said, is the idea that the University Judiciary is recognized by the Board of Trustees.

"What people don't realize, is that they can bring their minor cases to our court, and avoid bringing them to the District Court of Northampton," Pappas said.

Basic cases handled by the court include shoplifting, disturbing the peace, and breaking windows on campus.

"There would be a larger variety of cases if people realized just what things can be brought to court", explained Pappas. As an example, Pappas cited dorm problems that can't be handled solely by heads-of-residence. He also stressed the idea that anyone is welcome to consult advocates on matters of legal counsel; they don't necessarily have to have a court case.

The Student Judiciary Couut is run in basically the same manner as any other court system. Pappas stressed the idea that while the student court isn't as formal as a regular court, it can be as powerful.

Each semester, a body of judges and advocates is formed. They are responsible for hearing cases, and aiding either the prosecution or the defense.

The courtroom procedure begins with a pre-trial motion, if necessary. At this time, the prosecution has a chance to drop charges. The reading of the charge follows, and the defendant states his-her plea (i.e. innocent, guilty, no lo).

Next, the prosecution and defense "take the stand," respectively. Cross-examining of the witnesses or defendent follows. A summation period the ensues, enabling the prosecution and defense to re-emphasize the obvious points of their cases.

The final step is the decision of the judges. There are three on each case. The defendent then has five days to submit an appeal, if he disagrees with the decision of the court.

In the near future, the court will be handling shop-lifting cases and cases disputing book loans.

The unseen observers

By CAROL SCHIEB
MDC Staff

Have you ever had the feeling that you were being watched, turned around, and no one was there? The School of Education provides a special room for lots of watching and prevents people from becoming paranoid at the same time.

Although unknown to many, this room exists in Mark's Meadow Elementary School, a part of the School of Ed. The Observation Corridor as defined by Michael Greenebaum, Principal of Mark's Meadow, is "an area in which people can observe a classroom without themselves being observed."

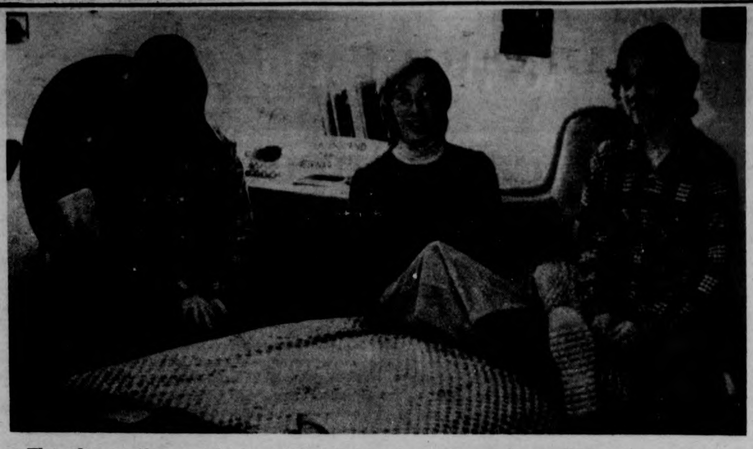
The Observation Corridor was built fourteen years ago as a part of Mark's Meadow School, for observational purposes. To those being observed, the corridor is disguised as looking like ordinary mirrors that line the upper wall of one side of the classroom.

Those observing find it quite different in that one can gaze down upon a whole classroom very easily through the slightly tinted glass windows. Upon its construction a sound system was installed. At that time, classrooms were still traditional, so it was possible to follow the conversation from activity to activity.

Although the sound system still works, it might not be considered as useful because of the open classrooms. The voices are clear yet many activities are going on at one time creating a constant flow of conversation.

The corridor has many uses. The School of Ed. uses it in preparing students for their teaching programs by advising them to use the observation corridor before and during their experience in the classroom. Other groups have found it useful such as Classroom Development courses and those people involved in the seminars and activities that occurred during the Marathon which was held at the end of January.

Mark's Meadow uses the corridor for similar purposes. The teachers find it useful in observing the children and student teachers. Parents use it in ways that are personally helpful and rewarding.



The observation corridor at Mark's Meadow Elementary School is a unique approach to helping student teachers improve their methods.

Outside groups use it frequently and find it especially ideal for informal discussions.

The children in the classrooms are aware that the corridor exists but have gotten used to visitors and aren't always conscious of being observed. They are allowed to go up and use it with projects they are preparing.

Jim Nields, a third grader, walked through while I was visiting and briefly stopped to point out a friend. He was very open in inviting me down to observe his classroom. He is obviously well adjusted to the activities that are continuously occurring there.

The Observation Corridor is open to anyone between the hours of 8:45 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., five days a week. No advance appointments are necessary for individuals. Greenebaum requests, however, that advance notice when large groups wish to observe or want a guided tour.

A new revival: Hieroglyphics

By E. PATRICK McQUAID

Dr. David van Blerkom does not teach your average foreign language class. His course deals with a dialect that has remained buried in libraries almost as long as it has been buried under the sand: Hieroglyphics.

No, the above inscription was not unearthed in the men's wash room of the Campus Center. It is itself the Egyptian word of Hieroglyphics which translated reads as "Writings of the Gods".

Dr. van Blerkom, who holds a Ph.D in Astronomy, has always retained an interest in Egyptianology since his boyhood. In 1968, while a graduate student, he and a colleague began their studies out of mutual interest. They had no institution to which they could turn, only a few books just about as old as the Hieroglyphics themselves.

Last year he conducted his first class in Hieroglyphics at the Project Ten office. Attendence was above his expectations and by student request he is teaching this semester, again at the Project Ten Program.

Hieroglyphics is not the simple picture-writing it is thought to be. "It is," says Dr. van Blerkom, "really a language; with rules to follow and everything! You wouldn't think that they had rules to follow like: 'i before e except after c', but they did."

The language itself embodies two basic methods of communicating to the reader. One is called Ideogram; which is illustrating the main content of what is to be read. The second, Rebus, or Phonogram, involves abstract words that cannot be drawn. Dr. van Blerkom used the term "belief" as an example.

Although not an Egyptian word, it might be thought of, in our terminology, as drawing the animal "bee" and adding the plant "leaf" aside it. The modern reader would interpret it as "belief".

"The Egyptians," continued he, "were very conservative, and they used all forms of the word, making it quite difficult to understand (for modern scholars)".

"In that case," asked a student, "how reliable is Egyptian History?"

Dr. van Blerkom replied that the Hieroglyphics were chisled on walls and took much time and care. "If a reigning Pharoah was beaten in battle, he certainly wouldn't shower glory on his enemies by spelling it out on his palace walls.

"Consider if a historian wrote the history of America based entirely on what he found written on public walls; you'd get quite a different idea about us!"

Most of the class are Arts or Science majors who have taken the course out of interest. It is, as one student put it, "A change from Chemistry, Math, and other 'hard core' subjects".

Students are expected to be capable of translating simple phrases and sentences after an adequate time of study and eventually tackling some Egyptian poems such as can be found in the famous Book of the Dead, an ancient manuscript.

Amusingly, the first sentence that the class learned translated literally as, "The beer is in the house".

Pianist Houstoun performs

By DAVID SOKOL

Classical pianist Michael Houstoun performed the first of two concerts yesterday evening at Bowker Auditorium as part of the Fine Arts Council's concert series.

At age 21, Houstoun is already the recipient of many prizes and awards and is currently touring America as a prizewinner in the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition. Playing with the style and sophistication of one much older, New Zealand's Mr. Houstoun awed the half-filled auditorium with his dynamic command of the piano.

Mr. Houstoun chose a varied selection of material including a magnificent performance of Prokofieff's Sonata number 7 in B flat major and Chopin's Sonata number 3 in B minor.

Tonight, Houstoun will be performing a somewhat different program featuring Bach's English Suite number 4 in F major and selected works by Rachmaninoff and Chopin. He will repeat his interpretations of Chopin's Sonata number 3 and Liszt's Mephisto Waltz. Bravo.

Parking and transport council set up

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD

Due to protest against the parking situation around UMass the Board of Trustees has instructed Chancellor Bromery to set up a committee called the Parking and Transportation Council. This council has been charged with analysing the parking and transportation situation around UMass and making recomendations for improving it.

The council is made up of representatives from many different groups on campus including students, faculty, and union local 1776.

According to chairperson Alan Gross the university has already accepted their recomendation to stop towing in cases where cars are parked in the wrong parking lots.

Hearst can't meet kidnapper's demands

By SUSAN SWARD
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Newspaper magnate Randolph A. Hearst said Wednesday he could not possibly meet the demand of his daughter's kidnapers for a multimillion dollar food giveway.

But he sought to assure his daughter and her abductors by vowing to do "everything in my power" to set up some kind of food distribution program. To 19-year-old Patricia Hearst, he said: "Hang in there, honey!"

Hearst first told reporters that it was impossible to meet the kidnapers' demand-estimated by state officials to cost as much as $400 million - and said he would make a counter proposal within two days. Later, however, he appeared again outside his Hillsborough home to say that he would try to meet their demands — but on a modified scale.

I am going to do everything I can to comply with their demand, and if that's not enough, I can't help it. I've done everything I can do," he said.

"Obviously, I don't see how I can meet a $400 million program, but I just want these people to know...I'm going to do everything in my power to set up the type of program they're talking about."

Hearst said it was too soon to say how such a distribution system would be set up. He said work was being done on the project but declined to discuss details.

The newspaper executive told newsmen at a late afternoon meeting that he had listened to a tape of the statement he had made five hours earlier and was concerned that his daughter's captors might draw the impression he was being uncooperative.

"They might construe what I said this morning to mean that I wasn't going to do anything, but that I was going to come back with another offer, and that is not so."

Hearst's earlier appearance included an emotional statement he said he hoped Patricia would hear: "You can rest assured that your mother and I and the family will do everything we can to get you out."

Mrs. Hearst, crying softly, added: "We love you, Patty, and we're all praying for you...I know God will bring you back."

Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, said, "I just wanted to let you know it's a little frightening because the original demand is one that is impossible to meet.

"However, in the next 24 to 48 hours, I will be trying my best to come back with some kind of counteroffer that is acceptable," he said.

The Symbionese Liberation Army, which claims responsibility for the Feb. 4 kidnaping, demanded that Hearst supply $70 worth of free food for every elderly and needy person in California.

State officials said Wednesday it was virtually impossible to compute what the price tag would be for the food. Based on varying estimates on who would be eligible, officials said, the tab could run anywhere from $133 million to conceivably more than $400 million.

The SLA said Hearst's free food was the price for negotiating his daughter's release. It warned that failure to meet the demand could cost her life.

Immediately after the demand was made, Hearst said he would make every effort to comply — but it appeared the cost was just too steep.

In his statement, Hearst said: "It's very difficult because I have no one to negotiate with except through a letter that generally comes two or three days later than we expect it."

Nonetheless, he asked his daughter to tell her kidnapers "not to worry, no one is going to bust in on them or start a shootout."

Hearst said he believed the kidnapers were treating his daughter under the Geneva convention as they promised, even though she sounded a little tired "or like you were sedated.

"I think you'd like to know everyone is praying for you. I think a few are even praying for the people who have you....Hang in there, honey!" he said.

The FBI said Wednesday there were no new leads to the whereabouts of the heiress and vowed again not to jeopardize her safety.

Nixon calls for more unemployment benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration asked Congress Wednesday to soften the economic punch of the energy crisis with a $1 billion expansion of unemployment benefits.

Labor Secretary Peter J. Brennan said the administration's proposal would provide an additional 13 weeks of unemployment pay in areas of high unemployment and extend coverage to 15 million workers not now included.

Since most states now pay the maximum of 26 weeks in jobless benefits, it would mean that workers losing their jobs would be entitled to a total of 39 weeks unemployment pay in most cases.

However, where unemployment is high enough to trigger a regular federal-state extended program, benefits could be paid for up to 52 weeks, Brennan said.

The secretary said the proposal will help workers laid off because of the energy crisis as well as those who have lost their jobs for other reasons.

About 15 million state and local government employes and farm workers not now covered by unemployment compensation programs would be eligible for up to 26 weeks of benefits, he said.

The 13-week extension of benefits would go to areas where insured unemployment averaged 4.5 per cent or more for 13 weeks. It also would apply in areas where insured unemployment averaged four percent or more if they experienced at least a 20 per cent jump in insured unemployment since the October 1972-September 1973 period.

Insured unemployment is based on unemployment compensation rates, and the rates are about 2 per cent below the national unemployment rate, which is 5.2 per cent. About 15 or 20 states would be eligible for extra benefits if the proposal were in effect now.

The administration's proposal was suggested as a revision to its legislation of a year ago. That bill, still pending, would set national standards for unemployment compensation.

Meantime, the Labor Department said that unemployment insurance claims for the week ended Jan. 26 showed nearly 180,000 persons receiving jobless benefits attributed to the loss of work due to the energy crisis.

Nixon proposes new transit system

by JAY PERKINS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has proposed a $19.3-billion revenue-sharing program designed to improve the nation's public transportation system.

He also asked Congress Wednesday to approve a program to revitalize the nation's rail system through a massive program of government loan guarantees and through relaxed regulatory procedures.

Both proposals have been in the works for some time but the President said the energy crisis brought home the need for improvements in mass transit and rail systems.

"The energy crisis has underscored an important lesson: our system of national transportation is not working at maximum efficiency," the President said in a message to Congress.

"As our society grows and our economy continues to expand, we must insure that the efficiency of this system keeps stride with the changing demands placed on it."

The President's plan, if approved by Congress, would make $2.3 billion available to large cities and slightly over $1.1 billion available to towns of under 50,000 and to rural areas in the fiscal year starting July 1.

The urban grant program would consist of $700 million for the purchase of new equipment, another $700 million that could be used for new equipment or to reduce operating deficits of current systems and $1.1 billion that could be used either for highway construction or for mass transit programs.

The rural area program would make available $1.1 billion for highway construction or bus purchases and $10 million for public transportation demonstration projects.

Both programs would increase slightly through 1977, with the urban program hitting a high of $2.7 billion and the rural program topping off at $1.145 million.

All funds would be channeled through the governor of each state.

The President's proposal for revitalizing the rail system calls for $2 billion in government guarantees for private loans made to the railroads. This money would be used to upgrade track and purchase new equipment, and build new terminals.

In addition, the proposal would liberalize railroad abandonment procedures, thus making it easier for a railroad to drop service on routes that are unprofitable, and would authorize $35 million to study freight car utilization procedures.

Tax checkoff used for public campaigns

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The $1 checkoff for a presidential campaign fund on the 1973 income tax returns has produced so many questions from taxpayers the government issued a detailed explanation of it Wednesday.

It was enacted as part of the Revenue Act of 19 and took effect Jan. 1, 1973, but the checkoff box was on a separate form last year and was not widely used.

The collar checkoff is intended to provide public funds for paying the campaign expenses of presidential and vice presidential candidates of the two major political parties and any other party that received five per cent or more of the popular vote in the preceding election.

As they accumulate during the nonpresidential years the funds are deposited in the U.S. Treasury. They are paid out to cover stated expenses occurred from the date when a presidential candidate is nominated until 30 days after the election.

Each major party candidate is entitled to 15 cents for every person of voting age in the population as of June 1 in the year of the election. The total was $139 million in 1972, which would have yielded slightly less than $21 million for each candidate.

Minor party candidates would be intitled to a share based on the ratio between the minor party's popular vote in the previous election and the average vote of the two major party candidates.

Under the formula, no third party candidate will be eligible for funds in 1976. There is a provision for a new party candidate who receives more than five per cent of the popular vote to receive funds after the election.

Payments are restricted to the amounts actually needed to meet campaign expenses or repay loans obtained for campaign expenses.

Any candidate seeking to become eligible for the fund must certify that campaign spending will be limited to the maximum subsidy allowable under the 15 cents per vote formula.

Sen. Ervin guest of Yale

By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) - "I think I'd enjoy being in college again," U.S. Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. mused as he walked to his next "class" at Yale University.

The 77-year-old Ervin reflected his enjoyment during a three-day stay with students this week, and the students responded with respectful enthusiasm.

"In Washington, as chairman of one committee and two sub-committees, very seldom does 20 minutes pass without the telephone ringing or a member of my staff wanting me for something," said the North Carolina Democrat.

His rare college visit of more than one day, the Watergate committee chairman explained, "gives a nice chance to get to know more students on a more intimate level."

Although Ervin viewed the Yale visit as a break from Washington's hectic pace, it was no vacation.

After a near comic struggle to reach a New York City train Monday from his daughter's New Jersey house - he missed the first two - his every minute from dawn to bed was busy.

Ribbing about his Harvard Law School affiliation followed him right from his welcome to Yale's Timothy Dwight College by the college's master, Dr. Homer D. Babbidge.

The senator slept and ate most of his meals at the college, one of 12 at Yale, under a Chubb fellowship.

"He's obviously close to the ideal Chubb fellow," Babbidge said.

"He relates well with the students... and, frankly, he likes to talk."

Senator Sam J. Ervin

Wearing a cossack hat and light raincoat despite near freezing temperatures, the ample, grey-haired senator walked to nearly all of his engagements, cruising through sidewalk traffic like the prow of a ship.

One carload of young people stopped and gave him a cheer. Two students, one with an "impeach" sign on his briefcase, exchanged greetings with him.

Each day Ervin took part in some classroom discussion and repeated receptions, mealtime discussions, coffee hours, cocktail parties and student interviews.

Students were required to sign up in advance to attend meals and smaller social functions with him.

"There's a certain amount of excitement having a celebrity here," said senior Daniel Arnheim. "But otherwise things don't change very much."

Watergate was the first topic out of most mouths, from Ervin's initial news conference to the formal dinner of squab that marked his departure Wednesday.

The senator, however, noted the complete absence of Watergate from Tuesday morning questions on radio with another constitutional expert, Prof. Louis Pollak, and in a class on political theory.

His discourses spiced with an always-handy Ervin anecdote, he covered a wide range of subjects: his opposition to federal civil-rights legislation, the "un-civil war," privacy, free speech, women's rights, obscenity laws and federal finance.

He told one story at least three times, raising a laughter and applause each time.

FBI agent testifies at Wounded Knee trial

By JOHN LINDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - An Indian FBI agent told Wednesday how he was called to western South Dakota in late February last year and carried out surveillance at a meeting held by American Indian Movement (AIM) leaders.

Russell Means

Stanley Keel, who has been with the FBI nine years, said Russell Means and Dennis Banks were two of those who took part in the meeting the night of Feb. 21.

Means, 34, an Oglala Sioux from Porcupine, S.D., and Banks, 41, St. Paul, a Minnesota Chippewa, are accused of helping lead the 71-day occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D. Charges include theft, burglary, assault of a federal officers, fire arms violations and conspiracy.

Keel said he attended the meeting in Rapid City, S.D., at the Mother Butler Center where he said he heard Means acknowledge Bank's introduction of him as the "next chief of the Oglala Sioux nation." He testified Means "thanked the gathering for the support they'd shown for the American Indian Movement."

Keel said Means also urged the impeachment of Richard Wilson, president of the Pine Ridge Reservation Tribal Council.

Court recessed with the agent still on the stand.

Earlier, the prosecution called Ivy Goings, the youthful clerk of the Sioux tribal court and offered two exhibits, one of which the defense challenged.

The defense challenge related to a request for federal marshals Feb. 9, 1973, and whether it was properly filed. The defense also questioned the petition signed by Tribal Judge Theodore Tibbetts, saying a request for marshals must legally come through the 20-man tribal council.

Meanwhile, efforts by the defense to challenge the testimony of an Indian reservation official failed. The witness was Clarence Nelson, director of natural resources on the reservation. He was called by the prosecution to establish that Means was an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux.

Deportation: an ancient device

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent
AP News Analysis

Soviet authorities came up with what they probably saw as a clever way out of a predicament by deporting Alexander Solzhenitsyn, but it's an ancient device and it's use will reinforce an impression abroad that the Kremlin hasn't changed much over the years.

The Nobel laureate, in a way, has wound up a victor over the Kremlin. What it did to him is bound to shadow Soviet policy for some time to come and have an impact on detente projects involved in the current exercise in peaceful coexistence.

But the Kremlin's situation was unpleasant. While it cherished the detente for practical economic reasons, it couldn't abide Solzhenitsyn. He had challenged the authority of the leaders and the party. Something had to be done. But what?

To place on trial such a celebrated though patently inconvenient personage and then sentence him to the very punishment he so effectively exposed in his latest book could have bad effects abroad. Past experience suggested another way out.

Since Solzhenitsyn was avowedly determined not to cooperate with them in any way, they couldn't use the "voluntary" trip abroad ploy in his case, and so the regime dipped back into history.

The last forcible deportation was in the 1920s when Stalin expelled his political foe, the celebrated Lev Davidovich Trotsky.

But the czars frequently had used forced deportation to get rid of political undesirables.

Solzhenitsyn suspected the regime wanted to get rid of him by letting him go abroad and then lifting his passport.

"You may notice," he told interviewers last year, "that in those cases when it is impossible to get rid of a person with behind-scenes methods used on the nonprominent, they find it least painful to fling them out to the West, and it is best if it can be worked out under a voluntary agreement in the guise of a temporary trip abroad or irrevocable emigration."

That tactic was used many times in recent years against dissidents who now reside in the United States and Europe, forever forbidden to return to their native land.

The decision to banish Solzhenitsyn permanently to the West instead of incarcerating him in a labor camp and to let his family join him might seem magnanimous to some by comparison. Most likely it was reached in the interest of the detente and the Kremlin image abroad. Solzhenitsyn can continue his criticism from outside Soviet borders. But the point is that the West is already familiar with such criticism, and the Kremlin aim is to shield Soviet and Communist bloc people from contamination.

The energy crisis

Energy conference 'a success'

By SPENCER DAVIS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The turbulent 13-nation Washington energy conference ended yesterday with agreement to meet quickly with producer nations to ease the oil crises.

Although France objected to key provisions, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger called the three-day meeting a complete success.

Acknowledging that there had been sharp differences of view with France at the meeting, he said this that the United States attaches to its relations with its Atlantic partners.

Kissinger emphatically declared the United States does not consider itself to be in a confrontation with France. He said he had read some articles in the European press about a divorce between France and the United States. "That is absolutely not true," he said.

At a news conference, Kissinger also said he thinks international efforts to meet the energy crisis will result in lower prices than now charged by Arab countries "but considerably higher" than before the last Middle East war.

The conference gave up efforts to win a compromise agreement with France on establishing some machinery to connect the meeting of major energy consumers with later sessions with producing countries.

Instead, meeting for an unscheduled third day, all 13 countries signed a communique which contained footnotes that France had not agreed.

France objected to any kind of coordinating group and wanted the conference to end without agreements for further actions. France favors the United Nations, where developing countries and the producing nations are all represented at the forum.

Kissinger said the United States did not think the United Nations was a suitable body to work out energy crisis problems. But he said the United Nations was a good forum for airing the views of all of the nations.

The American view, he said, is that oil prices were too low in September 1973 before the outbreak of the Israeli-Arab war, but are too high now.

The coordinating group will be called into action by the United States but a site for the meeting has not been decided. The United States will not insist upon becoming the chairman of the group, Kissinger said.

Immediately after the conference ended, French Foreign Minister Michel Jobert told a news conference that the nine-nation Common Market countries were being carried away by the United States and had forgotten it was an economic and not a political institution.

Kissinger, however, said no existing international organization could deal with the energy crisis on the basis of the seven-point proposals the United States had put before the meeting.

All the foreign ministers, including France, agreed that solutions to the world's energy problems should be sought in consultation with the producer countries.

The American-promised compromise machinery which France objected to established a coordinating group headed by senior officials. The group was instructed to "direct preparations of a conference of consumer and producer countries which is to be held at the earliest possible opportunity and which, if necessary, will be preceded by a further meeting of consumer countries."

France dissented, but the remaining 12 nations all "concurred in the need for a comprehensive action program to deal with all facets of the world energy situation by cooperative measures."

The foreign ministers of Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States all agreed on the full communique.

Three proposals for a communique were placed before the foreign ministers attending the session.

The proposals, part of a 10-page proposed communique, were submitted by a working group which labored until 6 a.m.

The three versions dealt with the issues which became the most hotly debated during the three days of the conference: What to do next and how to arrange for one or perhaps two follow-up conferences which would include both oil producing countries and less developed nations.

The session of the ministers started at 10 a.m. recessed around 11:30 a.m. after giving instructions to a working group to draft a compromise version.

Simon slaps Ash on energy policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal energy chief William E. Simon made clear yesterday he would like budget director Roy L. Ash to keep out of the energy area after Ash predicted the energy crisis will end this year.

"Perhaps I should call a press briefing on the budget or maybe I should ask Mr. Ash to keep his cotton pickin' hands off energy policy," Simon said.

His comment, on NBC-TV's "Today" program, came after Ash said on three different occasions Tuesday that the energy crisis would be over this year, although problems would remain.

A source close to Ash said Ash had every right to speak out on energy. Besides serving as director of the Office of Management and Budget, Ash is a member of the Cabinet-level energy committee on which Simon also serves.

The White House refused to be drawn into the apparent controversy.

"Both gentlemen are working toward the goal set by the President" - to relieve the energy crisis, press spokesman Gerald L. Warren told newsmen.

In saying Ash should perhaps keep his "cotton pickin' hands" out of the energy area, Simon was using the same words his boss, Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz, used several months ago to suggest that then White House advisor Melvin R. Laird keep out of economic policy areas.

Simon was asked if Ash's statements about the ending of the crisis would make his job more difficult.

"Nobody's statements can make my job more difficult," he replied.

Simon said in a recent article written for the Associated Press that one of his biggest problems has been to make people believe there is an energy crisis.

Ash had told newsmen Tuesday, "The immediate short-term crisis is manageable, onetime and will be over with before the end of this year."

It will be over, he said, because Americans will have learned to live with seven per cent less energy than they had before the Arab oil embargo.

New legislation unveiled for Massachusetts

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent has defended "landmark legislation" controlling the environmental impact of new projects that he said opponents are trying to scuttle or curtail.

In an address to the New England River Basins Commission Tuesday, Sargent said the two-year-old Environmental Policy act is working and many of its weaknesses have been overcome.

The governor said in the eight months that environmental impact statements have been required on construction, $700 million in projects has been reviewed.

He said these statements "need not be the enemy of the businessman or the developer." He said the statements can reveal problems long before large sums are invested.

The governor said it's "too early to remove the teeth" of the law but said he won't ignore the "legitimate protests of those who must use the system."

The governor said the law has become the focal point of conflict between supporters of the environment and of the economy.

"I reject the assumption that the needs of the environment and of the economy are separate and irreconcilable," the governor said. "I reject the assumption that those who believe in the environment must forever battle those who believe in the economy."

New federal allocations due today after Sarge battles energy office

BOSTON (AP) - A new plan for state gasoline allocations will be announced by the Federal Energy Office this morning, following complaints from Massachusetts that it was being shortchanged under the current program.

An updated version of the allocation system will be disclosed at a 10 a.m. news conference today, the energy office said. Officials declined further comment.

Gov. Francis Sargent pleaded with the energy office to reconsider his request for more gasoline for the state.

"Massachusetts is being shortchanged," Sargent said at a news conference yesterday.

"I'm appalled at the way they, energy officials go about getting their figures."

Figures on which the allocations are based have been supplied by the oil industry.

Sargent said figures on the gas coming into Boston Harbor may be used to determine what Massachusetts is getting, when much of it goes out of state.

Gas station operators upset over new bans

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New England gasoline station operators are disgruntled.

They are upset with Federal Energy Chief William E. Simon's recent order that service stations may not limit gasoline sales to regular customers only.

And they are upset with other regulations.

If they have any one message, it is that they need more gasoline, not more regulations.

"We feel this is the straw that broke the dealers' back," said Robert J. Doucette, president of the New Hampshire and Vermont Gasoline Retailers Association.

"It is another point of dictatorship from Washington, from the F.E.O. Federal Energy Office," said Doucette, who operates an Exxon station in Nashua, N.H.

In Waterbury, Conn., 80 per cent of the city's gasoline station operators have threatened to close down for a week to protest Simon's order. The president of their association has asked dealers throughout the state to join in the shutdown.

Twenty-two dealers from Belmont and Watertown, Mass., have vowed they will sell gasoline to all comers until they "pump out."

Simon ruled that preferential treatment for regular customers was discriminatory and he urged motorists to report violators to the Internal Revenue Service. He also ruled against other gasoline station practices which "arbitrarily discriminate" among motorists.

"That stinks," is the way Stanley Dworkin, manager of McGinn's Shell Station in Quincy, Mass., reacted.

"These people keep our rent paid and food on the table," said Tom Harrington, an Exxon dealer in Watertown, Mass., of his regular customers.

"And when this is over, they'll still be with us and the strangers will be back with the cut-price independents," another dealer added.

The 22 dealers from Watertown and Belmont took their complaints to a representative of the Massachusetts attorney general's office Wednesday. They left unsatisfied.

Gov. Thomas Salmon announced that Vermont would go on a voluntary, alternate-day rationing plan Monday. The response of service station operators was unenthusiastic at best. Many said they did not like having to enforce the new system.

Rationing & waiting

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

To ration or not to ration? That was the question facing more and more state officials Wednesday as the federal government continued it's wait-and-see program.

South Carolina, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island joined the list of states announcing gasoline rationing plans based on the odd, even Oregon system.

Eight other states already have put similar programs into effect - all but three on a voluntary basis - and the governor of Connecticut asked the legislature Wednesday for authority to implement statewide rationing if necessary.

Connecticut Republican Gov. Thomas Meskill indicated, however, that he still opposes such a plan. Meskill previously has argued that rationing - if it comes - should be on a national basis administered by federal authorities.

The White House said Tuesday that President Nixon would assess the results of statewide plans before making any decision about nationwide rationing of any kind. The government has already printed World War II style rationing coupons in case it decides coupon rationing is warranted.

U. S. Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., said he would move to require mandatory rationing program. He said he is against coupon rationing, prefering a system like the odd-even Oregon plan.

Connecticut has been one of the states hardest hit by the gasoline shortage and numerous communities already have instituted odd-even rationing on a local basis.

The only mandatory statewide rationing plans are in New Jersey, Maryland and Hawaii. Officials in other areas have reported varying degrees of success with voluntary programs that limit motorists to alternate-day purchases and, in most cases, do not allow stations to sell gas to anyone with more than half a tank of gasoline.

Sargent's newest energy plan

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent unveiled yesterday the state's draft plan for dealing with energy shortages if they should get worse — a four-state scheme ranging from additional voluntary conservation to possible closing of schools and doubling up of families. The plan also includes a procedure for deciding when to consider ordering the various conservation steps.

The governor released the plan in a speech before the Steel Service Center Institute where he said "Two priorities stand above all others: the protection of public safety and the preservation of our economic base-of jobs."

"In real terms, if the crunch comes, this means that a supermarket will lose its heating oil before a home does; schools will lose their residual oil before a factory does."

In its discussion of the fourth stage, "extreme energy emergency actions," the report noted the Civil Defense authorities and the National Guard would be alerted.

"Because of the maximum flexibility required to meet this level of shortages, it is impossible to rank with any certitude the measures that would be taken. Nevertheless, it is safe to say that in the residential sector, the consolidation of living quarters would receive attention," the report said.

Closing or not heating a quarter of the state's homes would save the equivalent of 12 million barrels of fuel oil, the report said.

Other extreme measures possible would be a four-day work week in offices, closing of schools and rolling blackouts. The decision procedure calls for a complicated array of "trigger" indices based on Federal Energy Office announcements, and stocks of fuels on hand and expected.

The plan calls for the governor to confer with other state officials and the legislative leadership before ordering additional measures.

Some of the measures belonging to the first two stages are already in effect, such as the 55 mile per hour speed limit.

The draft plan was prepared by the governor's Emergency Energy Technical Advisory Committee and is being submitted to business, labor, municipal, educational and consumer advisory task forces. A final version was to be released later.

N.E. hits pump lines

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Drivers in Vermont will get an alternate day rationing system next week while in Connecticut, they may be able to start buying gasoline on Sundays.

The developments came Wednesday as governors of the New England states looked for ways for service stations to distribute limited supplies of gasoline without long lines.

Massachusetts has had a rationing system since Monday, New Hampshire starts one next Monday and plans for one in Rhode Island will be announced within the next 10 days.

Meanwhile, Massachusetts officials waited for a decision from the Federal Energy Office on whether the state's gasoline allocations will be increased.

The Energy Office said it would announce a revised allocation plan in Washington on Thursday. Under the plan unveiled last week Maine and Connecticut were the only New England states scheduled to get more gasoline.

Gov. Thomas Meskill said his recommendation for Sunday gas sales would probably be criticized.

"The Washington bureaucrats are going to come charging out of the very chairs in which they've been dozing these last week," he said. "We're going to be accused of flouting the conservation effort.

"I believe the people will go for Sunday purchases not to resume leisure weekend driving but only to avoid the wasteful results of congestion at the pumps."

Meskill also recommended that stations drop all limits on maximum sales but serve only cars that come in with less than half a tank of gas.

In Vermont, a voluntary alternate day rationing system similar to the one in Massachusetts goes into effect next Wednesday.

"Should the gasoline supply worsen in the coming months, the state may have to go to a mandatory plan later," said Gov. Thomas Salmon.

The system bases daily gasoline sales on whether cars have even or odd numbered license plates.

Some New England stations reacted bitterly to a ruling by the energy office that they cannot give preferential treatment to regular customers.

In Waterbury, Conn., 80 per cent of the city's stations threatened to close down in protest Wednesday.

The City Council in Lowell, Mass., has asked the city solicitor to draw up plans to make gasoline rationing mandatory within city limits.

On the Maine Turnpike, service stations have agreed to sell full tanks of gasoline to emergency vehicles whenever they need it. The action came after a service station charged an ambulance driver $20 for five gallons of gasoline after the ambulance ran short on the turnpike at night.

Mass. not responsible for federal highway

WASHINGTON (AP) — Massachusetts will not have to repay the federal government for some $58 million spent for preliminary work and land takings for the abandoned Southwest Expressway, the Inner Belt and I-95 north.

U.S. Department of Transportation officials gave that information to Gov. Francis Sargent and Massachusetts Transportation Secretary Alan Altshuler when they traveled to Washington last week.

The 58 million represents 90 per cent of the cost of preliminary engineering, right-of-way acquisitions and some construction. The federal government had forwarded the grants to the Bay State before Sargent decided in 1972 to scrap the expressways inside Massachusetts 128.

The DOT ruling comes as a surprise to officials at the state Department of Public Works and the Federal Highway Administration.

Altshuler said that if the DPW sells any of the seized property, it will have to pay 90 per cent of the proceeds to the federal government. He said that several dozen persons, most of them former residents of the corridors once intended for Interstate 95 north, have expressed interest in purchases.

Landlords, tenants, andapartments

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

When William conquered England the foundation of landlord and tenant law was an agrarian economy. Since the important aspect of a leasehold was the ability of the serf to earn income from the land, the key to the relationship was the tenant's obligation to pay rent and, thereby, to grow and harvest the crops on the land. The condition of the land and particularly the condition of any habitation, were irrelevant.

The basic premise has remained unchanged for ten centuries. Finally, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court in Boston Housing Authority v. Hemenway gave impetus to a national trend to require that a landlord warrant the habitability of residential premises.

The theory which is being given wide circulation and is appearing as legislation in a number of states relies on the notion that the heart of a tenancy is the residential capability of the tenancy. With the shift in legal reasoning tenants have acquired substantial new statutory rights.

For a general outline of the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants a booklet is available from the Amherst Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee at Town Hall and from most realtors who supply rental housing. The booklet is up-dated each summer.

Some important new laws are now effective and they follow in brief form here.

Rent Withholding

This continues to be an extraordinary and unusual remedy for most problems. If rent is withheld to effect repairs, a building inspector must first certify the need and issue a notice to the landlord. Rent may then be withheld if repairs aren't made as required in the order and used for the repairs. However, a new law allows tenants to withhold rent without a prior inspection provided there are violations which could materially endanger or impair health or safety. But a judge or inspector must later agree that the violation's were sufficiently severe. (Chapter 471 of Acts of 1973). The wise procedure will continue to be prior inspection or consultation with a lawyer before any rent is withheld.

Harrassment - Eviction

A landlord may not interfere with heat, light or water or tenant's quiet enjoyment nor try to evict without going to court. A tenant may sue for three month's rent plus attorney's fees for a violation. (Chapter 778 of 1973).

Notice to Terminate

The minimum notice to terminate a tenancy is thirty days, (except for non-payment of rent which is fourteen days) even for tenants who pay rent weekly. (Chapter 256 of 1973).

Health, Inspection Reports

Health inspection reports on conditions which may endanger or materially impair health, safety, or well being must be sent to tenant's within seven days of the inspection. (Chapter 920 of 1973).

Termination of Tenancy at Will

The sale of a building will not automatically terminate existing tenancies at will. (Chapter 416 of 1973).

High-Rise Sprinklers

High rises over 70 feet must have sprinklers installed. (Chapter 395 of 1973).

Eviction Appeals

If you lose an eviction case in District Court you now have 6 days to appeal to Superior Court. (Chapter 313 of 1973).

In almost every case the conflict of tenant's personal rights and landlord property rights need not develop into warfare. When there is a problem and before it is a catastrophe tell the landlord or manager what is wrong and cooperate in rectifying it. If specific repairs are required, back up oral messages with a letter.

Before resorting to unusual or drastic remedies, no matter what the annoyance, try to get responsible legal help.

Finally, all persons, both landlords and tenants and others, are reminded that Massachusetts is one of the first states to enact a so-called "right to privacy" law. It provides that every person has a right "against unreasonable, substantial or serious interference with his privacy." The Superior Court has the jurisdiction to issue restraints against violations and to award damages in appropriate circumstances. In the landlord and tenant relationship this law would appear to operate in addition to the anti-harassment law and seems to prohibit unannounced or over-frequent inspections of leased or rented premises. While the injury must be "substantial" a continuing course of conduct invading a person's privacy at their home would seem to be actionable under this new law.

Discussin' the bussin'

AMHERST--Tonight at 7:30 the Amherst Committee on Public Transportation will hold its long-publicized open meeting to discuss the feasibility of establishing an improved system of public transportation for the Town of Amherst.

The meeting, which is the result of several weeks of organizational efforts by two Transportation subcommittees, will provide the first real opportunity for an open public forum on the possibilities for mass transit in the Town of Amherst, and maybe other communities as well.

The tightly-scheduled agenda for tonight's meeting is as follows:

7:30 - Introduction of Committee and brief history of public transportaion in Amherst--Robert Rivers, chairman, Amherst Committee on Public Transportation.

8:40 - Explanation of mass transit legislation passed in the Massachusetts General Court in 1973--State Representative James Collins (D-Amherst).

8:50 - Review of options open to the Town of Amherst relative to public transportation--Duane Cromack, vice-chairman, Amherst Committee on Public Transportation.

9:00 - Description of UM-DOT demonstration project and possibilities for future expansion--William Goss, project director, UMass-U.S. Dept. of Transportation demonstration project.

Although the proceedings will be carried live over local cable television (Channel 8) and UMass radio station WMUA (91.1 FM), members of the Committee on Public Transportation are urging all interested citizens to attend the meeting in person. The Committee has made a special effort to invite all of Amherst's 260 Town Meeting Members and a number of local "resource people" to offer factual information during the question-and-answer segment of the meeting.

Tonight's meeting will take place in the auditorium of the Amherst Regional Junior High School, off Chestnut Street.

A new high: airship travel

By KLAUS F. PRUSS
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — In rainy twilight of May 6, 1937, the German Zeppelin Hindenburg with 97 persons aboard approached a U.S. naval airbase after a non-stop flight across the North Atlantic.

Without warning, the largest airship ever flown exploded and its shattered hulk collapsed on the sandy field at Lakehurst, N.J., killing 36 persons.

My father, Capt. Max Pruss, was commander of the hindenburg and one of the survivors of the crash. He and other airship enthusiasts were convinced that accounts of that crash caused the demise of transoceanic airship travel a decade before airplanes were to achieve the same goal. Airship construction in Germany was halted with the start of World War II.

Some aircraft designers now consider airships to be an answer to requirements of contemporary transportation, in which energy savings and environmental protection are important concerns.

The 1973-74 edition of Jane's Freight Containers, an authoritative reference on transportation, recently reported plans by Soviet designers for a nuclear-powered airship capable of carrying 180 tons of freight and 1,800 passengers at a cruising speed of 190 m.p.h.

The first of the Zeppelins, named after inventor Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin, flew in 1900 at Lake Constance in south Germany. The construction company, Zeppelin Metalwerke, still operates at Friedrichshafen, but it builds aluminium containers and radar equipment now instead of airships.

The first Zeppelin passenger service was inaugurated in 1910, and airships served as long-distance German bombers in World War I. The first regular transoceanic schedule was set up in the 1920s, connecting Germany with the United States, a three-day flight, and with Brazil, a five-day flight.

I vividly recall the Hindenburg, which was truly a flying luxury hotel. This airship was 804 feet long, 147 feet high and was powered by four diesel engines cruising speed of 78 miles an hour.

Passenger facilities were located within the rigid hull of the airship.

Longworth celebrates nintieth

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alice Roosevelt Longworth the grande dame of Washington's aristocracy and famous for her barbed wit, celebrated her 90th birthday yesterday.

Mrs. L, as her friends call her, says it's "just wretched...all too awful."

But those who know her suspect that the daughter of Theodore Roosevelt and widow of House Speaker Nicholas Longworth is enjoying what she calls "all this silly hubbub about my goddamn birthday."

The occasion was marked by a birthday party last evening at the fading DuPont Circle mansion where Mrs. Longworth has lived for more than half a century.

Scores of friends and admirers, including many of Washington's most famous people, were expected to be on hand.

The guests, Mrs. Longworth says, will include "everyone you'd recognize, but I can't recall who they are... And I'm not telling anyway. It would be silly."

Word had it that Henry Kissinger would be there. And President Nixon has made a point of visiting Mrs. Longworth on birthdays past.

Mrs. Longworth still has the rapier wit for which she has always been famous.

"Tell your wretched people I send them my curses," she said with a chuckle when pressed for a birthday interview.

"I'm 90. I can understand it. But tell them I'm recalcitrant."

One of her most famous remarks is inscribed on a needlepoint pillow in her mansion: "If you haven't got anything nice to say about anybody, come, sit next to me."

The Festival will be crowned with a series of concerts to be held at the prestigious Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., where winning songs will be performed by today's most popular entertainers. TV coverage of the Festival finale is planned. An album of the Festival's Best Songs will be released internationally.

WHAT KIND OF SONGS? There are six categories for both amateur and professional: Rhythm and Blues/Soul/Jazz; Rock; Country & Western; Popular; Folk; and Gospel/Religious. A song may be entered in more than one category. Amateurs compete against amateurs. Professionals against professionals. (Songwriters currently members of performing rights organizations: ASCAP, BMI, SESAC or their foreign counterparts will be considered professional.)

HOW ARE WINNERS PICKED? Each song entered will be listened to by experts from the music industry. Thirty-six semi-finalists' songs will be chosen (three from each professional and amateur category). These then will be judged by an international jury comprised of eminent composers, publishers, artists and other representatives of the recording and broadcast industries.

PRIZES: Total cash prizes of $128,000 will be awarded. Each of the 36 semi-finalists will receive $500 cash and be the guest of the Festival for the August 30, through September 2, 1974 finals.

Twelve finalists (a winner from each category, each division) will receive an additional $5,000.

The composers of the Best Amateur and Best Professional song will each win an additional $25,000. The Laurel Award for best song of the Festival will be a concert grand piano in addition to cash prizes of $30,500.

HOW TO ENTER: Start now. Enter as many songs as you wish for an entry fee of $10.85 per song. ($13.85 outside the USA and Canada.) Send the application below with $10.85 for each song to the American Song Festival. Applications must be postmarked no later than April 15, 1974.

You will receive the Official Festival Entry Kit, ASF Cassette by Capitol, entry form, and Songwriters' Handbook. This valuable book includes important information every songwriter should know; copyright laws, publishing, selling your songs, etc.

Record your song on the blank cassette and return it.

Instrumental and lyrical songs are accepted. You don't have to be able to write music—recording the cassette is enough. Elaborate production is not necessary. The song is what counts.

Vermont town to vote on impeachment

THETFORD, Vt. (AP) - The voters of this rural Vermont town will be given a direct opportunity next month to vote on whether President Nixon should be impeached by House of Representatives.

A group of 48 voters signed a petition placing on the town meeting ballot a referendum on the impeachment question. The referendum reads:

"Should the House of Representatives of the United States, and Congressman Richard W. Mallary in particular, impeach Richard M. Nixon, the 37th President of the United States of America. so that he can answer charges in trial before the U.S. Senate. If he is found innocent, he can govern effectively, but if found guilty by a two-thirds majority of the Senate, he should be removed from office as so stated in the Constitution."

Mallary, a Republican, is Vermont's only member of the House.

Thetford has a population of 1,422.

One of those who circulated the petitions and initiated the drive for the referendum was Jaqueline T. Lucy, who lives in the village of Post Mills, a part of Thetford Town.

Mrs. Lucy said the idea came up because "we felt the idea for discussing it publicly at the town meeting was exciting."

She said the town meeting would bring together the civic-minded people of the community. She said that the organizers felt a sense of urgency in the issue of impeachment because of the many crises in government.

Confessions of a UMass addict

By CINDY ROGERS

I am a t.v. addict. Yes, I am compulsively glued to the boob tube for at least four hours a day.

It actually started when I was a little girl. I was able to cut down once I entered college.

But I am hooked again and this time it began when I had nothing to do over intercession but sit around my color tv. It became a daily routine. My time schedule was centered around what was on TV at a particular timeslot. The day began around 1 P.M. and ended at 3 the next morning.

First, the soaps to see whether Phil knows he's the father of Tara's baby, Adam before he became the impotent doctor in Mash, Little Joe, Linc, Julie and Pete, Mr. Spock, Captain Kirk, James West, Arte Gordon and the Lovable Dr. Loveless with his diabolical plans. Pause for self-identification — am I on the Ponderosa or on board the Starship Enterprise?

My TV dinner was finished in time for prime time as I watched Owen Marshal push alcohol onto a client who was after a dope pusher .. followed by Channel 5 all night and George Fernell that kept me satiated until early hours. Every morning, it was pure agony to finally shut off the screen. Sharp chills crawled through my body as I thought I saw Christopher Lee's fangs on the blank screen. Oh God! Could it be true — I was a TV ADDICT!

But where could I go for help? Is there such an organization as TAA (Television Addiction Anonymous). I was scared — school was going to start and I didn't know whether I could kick the habit.

I did try. It was so hard. The two TVs in my room almost made the temptation uncontrollable. I sat up sleepless nights and stared at the blank picture tube. I became fidgety as boredom set in. Michael Dunn in my dreams!

It was too much — so I figured one program a night couldn't do all that much damage. But it was the fate of an addict that led me from that one program to another. Soon I found myself saying, "I wonder what is on television now."

So I returned to visit the Enterprise, James West, Dr. Welby and all those network movies.

Like the one who fails to quit smoking, I returned to my horrid old ways.

But what can I do — will I be doomed as a TV addict forever?

HAK: world saviour

In future text books, Richard M. Nixon will be justly criticized as being one of the worst presidents in American history. He has allowed scandal and incompetence to permeate his entire administration, and his overall domestic policy has been everything but successful. To be precise, Richard Nixon has done only one thing right — only one action will serve to credit his record. That action was the recognition of the incomparable talents of Henry Alfred Kissinger.

In order to more fully understand the great success of this worldwide diplomat, it is helpful to go back to his childhood, beginning with his birth on May 27, 1923, in the small town of Furth in the German province of Franconia. Kissinger is Jewish and was raised during the upswing of Nazism. He and his brother, Walter, were expelled from school and forced to attend an all Jewish institution, while his father was forced to resign his professorship. In 1938, the Kissinger family emigrated to the United States.

But Kissinger rarely talks about those days, and when asked about his childhood by a recent interviewer, he said, "That part of my childhood is not a key to anything. I was not consciously unhappy. I was not so acutely aware of what was going on. For children, those things are not so serious. It is fashionable now to explain everything psychoanalytically, but let me tell you, the political persecutions of my childhood are not what control my life." However, one has to sense that they must have meant a great deal to the man.

Kissinger's political philosophy, unlike that of most Americans, is primarily based on the philosophies of Hegel, Dostoyevski, Metternich, and Bismarck. He is much more skeptical and wary than most American diplomats, and therefore, he is much more willing to sacriface a little to gain alot.

However, it wasn't until 1961 that Kissinger was in any position to put his theories to work. It was then that McGeorge Bundy, special adviser to President Kennedy and a former colleague from Harvard, invited Kissinger to become a White House consultant on military and security policy. It was during these days that Kissinger was able to make the acquaintances of important Western European leaders, but his powers were severely limited. As a consultant, he was only consulted with about once a week, and his advice was generally disregarded. In short, he didn't fit into the all-American, Kennedy mold. He was later released from his position.

Strange as it may seem, there was one man who was always attracted to the philosophies of Henry Kissinger. That man was Richard Nixon. Perhaps it was Kissinger's hard-line stand in Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy, back in 1957, that influenced Nixon, or perhaps it was Kissinger's remarks on premature summitry with Soviet leaders. Whatever the case, Richard Nixon took Kissinger, who was then working with Nelson Rockefeller, and gave him the power to do what he could do best — to make peace.

As we all know, Henry Kissinger has won the Nobel Peace Prize for ending the American military involvement in Southeast Asia, and if the peace in the Middle East continues, he will most likely win another. I am now convinced that if there is one person that can save the world from nuclear annihilation, that man is Henry Kissinger.

"In the last sixties, the situation is more complex. The United States is no longer in a position to operate programs globally; it has to encourage them. It can no longer impose its preferred solution; it must seek to evoke it. In the forties and fifties we offered remedies: in the late sixties and in the seventies our role will have to be to contribute to a structure that will foster the initiative of others. We are a superpower physically, but our designs can be meaningful only if they generate willing cooperation. We can continue to contribute to defense and positive programs, but we must seek to encourage and not stifle a sense of local responsibility. Our contributions should not be the sole or principal effort, but it should make the difference between success and failure."

U.S. problems not that big

I was having a great season my senior year in high school. I led the team in hitting, and hadn't made an error all year at second base.

Then, in the third inning of the Oxford game, I dropped a throw to second. I thought nothing of it until the next batter hit a popup my way that I again dropped. My streak broken, my pride wounded, I tried to pull myself together. The next batter hit a grounder, right at me of course, which I kicked around until there was no hope of throwing him out. But I finally did find the handle, and threw it anyway. Practically into Connecticut.

Four errors in an inning. The only ones I made all season. I panicked, I prayed the ball wouldn't come to me, I fell apart.

Multiply that feeling, that incident, by 200 million and make the stakes bread and gasoline rather than hits and errors and you've got what we're into today.

200 million people are panicking, and 200 million people have inferiority complexes.

It's strange, because the overbearing, overconfident, condescending American was supposed to be able to hack anything. We'd solve the problems of the rest of the world; and now we can't solve our own.

At least it seems that way.

The sad thing is, the problems we face aren't that big. People look upon the current energy crisis and overabundance of shortages as being a threat to their survival and a threat to their rights.

Survival, in the American sense, has ceased to become a matter of nourishing the body, keeping it warm, and keeping it covered.

It has strayed from having friends and enjoying them, and "progressed" to a level in keeping with whatever the current state of technology is.

Eating is not surviving. Eating roast beef twice a week and steak at least once is.

Making a snowman is not enjoyment. Driving to Vermont to ski is.

Playing cards and drinking Falstaff on Saturday night with friends isn't a good time. Supper at The Scupper followed by "The Exorcist" is.

It is easy to say "simplify your existence." It is not quite so easy to change a life style which has been distilled to a high plateau of reliance on outside forces by sixty years of automobiles, movies, television, space travel, cheap veal cutlets, and even cheaper electricity.

But change it's gonna have to be. The 11th amendment (implied) of the Bill of Rights, "I shall have the right to drive my car wherever and whenever I damn well please" is in the process of being repealed.

With that repeal will go a big part of American life. It may not seem like it, but things could be worse.

I never got into Food Science, but I'll graduate on time.

Critical time now

To The Editor:

I noted with interest Howard Spier's letter ("Too Many Campus Shuttles," Collegian, Feb. 12, 1974) complaining about insufficient bus service to the Brittany Manor apartment complex on East Hadley Road.

No doubt there are many other commuters, both students and non-students, who feel the same way. The 1973 Amherst Street List indicated that of 603 persons reported to be living in the East Hadley Road apartment complexes, a total of 471, or 78 percent, were either students or employees at the University of Massachusetts--certainly a number large enough to justify an increased level of bus service.

But this is not solely the University's problem.

The Amherst Committee on Public Transportation, of which I am a member, is presently investigating the feasibility of establishing an improved system of public mass transportation for the Town of Amherst. The Committee is sponsoring an open public meeting tonight (Thursday), beginning at 7:30 P.M., in the Amherst Junior High School Auditorium. One purpose of this meeting is to hear citizens' views on the need for public transportation in the Town. I urge Mr. Spier and other citizens concerned about the problem of commuting to attend this important meeting and make their voices heard during the question-and-answer period.

Whether we will someday have a permanent transit system adequately linking all major population centers in Amherst depends largely on the intensity of citizen participation at the critical time prior to policy decision-making by the Town Meeting. That critical time has now arrived.

No pay-freeze

By DENNY MALTEAU

It used to be, back in the late sixties, that every so often there'd be a great social outrage of sorts, and nine or ten thousand of us would get together and have a good ol' time hiking and singing about it. Occasionally the local militia, wherever we might be, would join us in their own way and it would be an occasion of real down-home, grassroots social interaction. This would happen about once every semester, either because outrages happened that frequently or because it took several occasions of social interaction to make what we had to say clear. Another reason why these things took place once a semester was that it took at least two months to book a decent rock band.

In recent years, the popularity of such activities seems to have tapered off, as tends to be often bemoaned on these editorial pages. There are those, as Bill Parent pointed out recently, who point to the lull and exclaim that the students are no longer crying out against tyranny, and those who believe this to indicate a new wave of fifties-style apathy.

I don't believe there is such apathy. (But then, I sincerely believed McGovern had a good chance.. oh well..) One reason that such massive indignation is no longer evident is that we are finding it harder to rally round a cause; we've too many causes now, too many social outrages.

Besides the goodies laid on us by Walter Cronkite or Harry Reasoner every evening, we've the monthly bills to contend with. Bills representing an inflation which is more and more obviously contrived. For example, the electric company sent my household a bill which, because we had been nice patriotic little consumers and froze our butts off, was only slightly more than last fall's bill. But could we rejoice and blow the money we saved on new earmuffs? Never. The electric company has charged us an "adjustment", equal to 50 per cent of our total bill, to pay for the inefficient coal they're burning! As friend Elaine so eloquently put it: "Those Godam $!&?+():;, $!&?+; them! I'm paying more for inefficient fuel already, for my car!"

The electric company doesn't have to even engage a bill collecting agency for their more difficult customers. They have a nice little persuader in each and every home, especially new homes that don't have chimneys. You no pay, you freeze. As if to remind us of this, they asked us to keep our bill because there's a special number written on it which makes it easier for them to identify which lines we're on. Tell me, where can I march?

Further outrages: lingering disclosures of Vietnam, like "Project Pheonix", constant rumors that oil tankers have been turned away from New York and Boston, full, expedient disregard of basic environmental principles, heightening doubts about nuclear reactors combined with heightened efforts to build them, and so on. Add to that some of the activities in New England concerning the "special prisoners" compound at Kittery, and what you get is a certain reluctance to watch the news too closely. A certain reluctance to activate on one issue because of what might happen with another. Again, where can we march to?

Bigwordologist bored with prof

To The Editor:

I sat through a fifty-minute lecture Wednesday that would have taken twenty minutes if given in English. It made me think of George Orwell's essay, "Politics and the English Language." In it he lists the words and phrases many professors and politicians use when they're either trying to con you, or mixed up themselves, or both. Like "take into consideration" instead of "consider," "as a result of," instead of "because," "attempt" instead of "try," "engaging in the critical act," instead of "criticizing". They also use "clarification" or "making oneself clear" or "trying to convey the idea appropriately." I just gave an example of that tactic.

The lecture I went to was full of such goodies. I quote exactly: "begin to try to pinpoint your attention to" (can you believe that one?), "conform to the patterns of good argument," "It places a good deal of importance on the persuasiveness of your argument." I never thought Theater could be made dull, but it was.

What to do? To the listeners: Don't be intimidated into thinking the speaker is smart. Big words don't equal big thoughts. I know a lot of big words, so I know. To the people who have these habits of speech: get help! I mean seriously. Try to figure out, with or without help, why you can't commit yourself and talk intelligibly. Probably your parents never listened to you or laughed at you when they did. So to avoid humiliation you stop having ideas of your own and just recite impressive-sounding phrases that mean very little. But you can get out of that bag and start living! Not everyone is like your parents were. You don't need to please them any more. Come on, I'm rooting for your.

Sincerely,
Laura Uitto

Evaders: pimps, pushers etc.

To The Editor:

I disagree with many of Paul Putes' outrageous value judgements expressed in his commentary of February 13th entitled "Evaders are heroes." I live in a country that has chosen to accept tens of thousands of these so-called "heroes" and consider myself perfectly qualified to comment on some of Putes' contentions.

I seriously question the writer's belief that draft evaders who fled to Canada, or any other country in streams had any degree of "true moral courage." To run away from a situation requiring concrete action, to evade a question, by exiling oneself reflects not moral strength but moral weakness. I have always been against the draft and any such system which infringes on the individual liberty of a human being and his right to live and act without the interference of government, but I think that the tens of thousands of draft resisters could have done more for their point of view by staying in the United States even if such action would have caused their incarceration.

As a native Montrealer, living in a city that is a haven for thousands of draft dodgers, I know of their great "moral strength." I also know that many of them pass their time as pimps, drug pushers, and as pursuers of other disreputable occupations. They have not done credit, in my opinion to their own country or Canada, and although I was opposed to what they were opposed to, I cannot agree with their methods or actions. In short, they are not heroes.

N.Y.A.-neo nazism for young

To The Editor:

On February 12, a leaflet was distributed on campus by members of an organization known as the National Youth Alliance. this organization is the youth arm of the American nazi party and has connections with other professed right-wing neo-Nazi organizations such as the "Liberty Lobby".

The leaflet purports to be an anti-Zionist appeal but in reality it is simply a crude expression of age old racist anti-semetic ideas. By attempting to exploit the growing discontent with the Meir-Dayan regime in Israel and with worsening conditions in this country, these fascists, repeat the same nonsense as their German predecessors, blaming the Jewish people for all the world's problems.

It is important to look at this organization's forebears in Germany. The German Nazis also exploited discontent against the rule of monopoly capitalism in Germany and turned it against the left, the Jewish people, and other minorities.

We on the left who are anti-Zionist have a special responsibility to repudiate the racist garbage put forth by the National Youth Alliance. Our opposition to Zionism is based on the racist character of this ideaology. Attempts to pervert this position for racist and anti-semetic purposes are repugnant to us. We have already seen where this leads to. The geneocidal murder of six million Jews, the killing of 20 million Soviet citizens, countless Communists, Socialists, and other progressives in the resistance, and the many soldiers of the U.S., Britain, France and other democratic countries who fought to crush fascism.

The point of this is that racism must be fought wherever it is found and in whatever form. The search for a just peace in the Middle East is of such importance that it must not be diverted by rodents such as these American Nazis.

Fac-Sen rhetoric vote today

To The Editor:

This afternoon at 3:30 in 120 SBA the Faculty Senate will be discussing and voting on the Rhetoric Requirement. Some of you might remember that the Faculty Senate voted to retain the requirement last year, and then set up a committee to study it again. Well, that committee has reported. The Faculty Senate will have four options before them on Thursday: 1) to retain the present requirement; 2) to eliminate the requirement; 3) to establish a competency requirement, whereby a student would take a test to prove competence in Rhetoric instead of taking a course, or in conjunction with various courses or independent study assignments; and 4) to establish a test to help channel the students into the program which will help them the most, similar to the competency test, but there would not be any obligatory feature to this option.

If you are interested in your education, if you are interested in this requirement, show up at the Faculty Senate meeting this afternoon.

"Craft of the wise"

To The Editor:

Much interest is being shown these days in matters pertaining to the occult arts and especially to witchcraft. It is unfortunately true however, that the news media and television, tend to present articles and programs touching mainly on the subjects of Satanism and Black Magic.

The religion of witchcraft, or more accurately "Wicca Craeft", the Craft of the Wise, is the oldest religion known to mankind, and the first recorded history of the craft occurs in cave paintings depicting early hunting magic ceremonies.

The craft gained power through centuries of time until it was violently suppressed some five hundred years ago in the name of the gentle Nazarene by those seeking temporal power.

Since then the craft was practiced in secret, and as a result survived to emerge openly once more in the twentieth century. In order to promote an accurate understanding of the craft and to counteract centuries of adverse propaganda, various leaders amongst the Wicca have decided to come out into the open and offer help to those seeking the path to harmony, fulfillment and serenity.

I, as a High Priest amongst the Wicca and spiritual guide to Convens in Galveston, Texas, Temple, Arizona, New Orleans, Louisiana, and Springfield and Boston, am now available for lectures to Colleges, Schools, and private and church or civic organizations. Those interested in the craft lectures may contact me by writing in care of the Julia Sanderson Theater, Main St., Springfield, Mass. Telephone: area code (413) 785-5351.

Globe may interview Irving

BOSTON (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. has ruled that The Boston Globe may interview author Clifford Irving and any inmate at the federal prison in Danbury, Conn.

The decision, hailed by Globe Editor Thomas Winship as "catering to everyone in the news business", was moot because Irving is to be released on parole Thursday.

The federal Bureau of Prisons had refused to allow Globe reporter Richard J. Connolly to interview Irving, convicted in the Howard Hughes autobiography hoax. Irving served 20 months of a 2½-year sentence and has been at a New York City halfway house since last month.

Irving said he was delighted by Judge Farrity's decision in the Globe's suit against the Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Attorney General. "I think it can only lead to progress in prisons because until now the prisoner's voice has been muted-certainly out of Danbury."

Judge Garrity said the federal regulations on interviews of prisoners suffer from internal inconsistencies." He ruled that the regulations may not prohibit absolutely an interview by Connolly.

While the First Amendment does not require that the press be given access to prisoners in all circumstances," Garrity wrote, "the preclusion at issue here is absolute."

The policy "does not distinguish between maximum and minimum security prisons, between prisoners who have independent prominence" — such as Irving — "and the obscure, nor between troublesome and model prisoners."

The judge said visits by politicians and others "might cause more 'big Whell' notoriety of the inmates visited and more demands upon undermanned staffs than visits by the press, yet their visits are not similarly curtailed."

Garrity said each interview application should be judged on its merits.

At least two other federal judges have questioned the prison bureau's policy — Judge Gerhard Gesell in a 1972 decision, and Judge Frank Murray of Boston last December, who allowed a novelist to interview the brother of James Earl Ray, convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King.

Ast. U.S. Atty. William A. Brown said an appeal of Garrity's order was anticipated.

1,845,000 books in five college library system

"Let's see...If I read one book a week it will only take me 35,481 weeks to finish."

By JUDY BOUCHER

According to Robert Frost "the difference between a college man and a man lacking in college is that he has the resource of books, that he knows there's a book side to every thing...and to me that makes the library the heart of the whole thing".

As of Sept. 1973 5-college students have been granted the priviledge of direct borrowing from each others main library giving them accesibility to 1,845,000 volumes.

Previously library use was restricted to faculty and students enrolled in courses at that institution. The move for more cooperation has come from the four college presidents, chancellor of UMass, and the 5-college treasurers.

There was also "student pressure and an intuitive feeling that it would not lead to a bad situation" said Mr. Gordon Fretwell.

There has been "amazing co-operation" said Miss Billie Bozone, head librarian of Nielson Library at Smith, with autonomy of each library preserved.

Although an experiment, a committee reviewed the program in December and found no major problems or abuses. Amherst College has felt the brunt of direct borrowing with the highest circulation probably due to its central location. Mrs. Eleanor Brown, head of circulation department in the Robert Frost Library At Amherst "would like to see the program continue." "The system has worked quite well so far with fewer hang-ups than anticipated. The libraries are used more heavily now" said Miss Bozone.

The only foreseeable problem is "lost books and collections of fines" said Miss Edmonds, head librarian of the Williston Memorial library at Mt. Holyoke. Furthermore, "the colleges are now serving populations they are not financially responsible for" said Miss Anne Peyton, reference librarian at the Harold F. Johnson Library Center of Hampshire College.

It is unlikely that there will be a division of responsibility in building collections or co-ordination in purchasing books to prevent duplication. "The clientele on each campus has a strong need for a basic library collection" said Mr. Fretwell". "Each library has a responsibility to the college's curriculum and the needs of the faculty" said Miss Edmonds.

Statistics indicate more borrowing while there has been no need for hiring additional staff to accomodate increased circulation. The circulation staff at Amherst has been "much busier. We haven't hired anyone but would like to see more assistance" said Mrs. Brown. The demand on Inter-library Loan has not been affected by the direct borrowing system.

The future of the program is to "maximize the ease in which the faculty and students can utilize the libraries" said Mr. Fretwell.

Nixon reported in good health

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon took his twice-delayed annual medical exam Wednesday and the White House doctor reported he is in excellent health and showing "no evidence whatsoever of emotional strain."

Despite the pressures of a year of Watergate-related problems and Middle East and energy crises, the President has shown no physical change whatsoever, Dr. Walter R. Tkach reported.

Nixon, 61, underwent a 2½-hour physical examination by at least half a dozen doctors, had "a whole battery" of blood chemistries and was subjected to probing questions on his health, Tkach said.

The President himself signaled an O.K. sign with his right thumb and forefinger when he emerged from the National Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Md., after the examination.

In a White House news briefing, Tkach, an Air Force major general, declared Nixon's "health and physical stamina is excellent."

All of the tests, including X-ray and electrocardiogram, showed the President "within normal limits," and there was no evidence of any aftereffects from the bout with viral pneumonia that put Nixon into the Bethesda hospital for eight days last July, Tkach said.

Some White House observers and even Tkach have said in the last months that Nixon has looked tired. But Tkach reported no change in Nixon's health since his last physical Dec. 20, 1972. Even his weight held steady at 172 pounds.

The White House doctor said he wouldn't recommend any change in Nixon's health regimen, which he said includes daily running in place 400 times.

Tkach did not emphasize the need for more exercise as he has in the past, but he said he would like to see the President "get some sunshine."

Nixon left hours later for Florida. He had scheduled the weekend trip before he went to the hospital.

Asked why he was recommending sunshine,Tkach said: "It's a change in atmosphere....It does an individual some intrinsic good"to be exposed to sun.

Nixon is seeing no other doctors nor is he taking medication for any reason.

Tkach said in response to questions, Nixon had put off his physical exam twice, the first time in mid-December.

The President explained he was "busy with the energy crisis." Last Friday, Nixon drove halfway to the hospital but turned back because of traffic jams resulting from a surprise Washington snowstorm.

Guzzi to speak

Paul Guzzi, state representative from Newton, will hold an open coffee hour today in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at 2:30 p.m. today. Guzzi, a Democratic candidate for Secretary of State in Massachusetts, is anxious to meet students and answer questions pertaining to the upcoming elections, or any other matters of concern.

Rep. Guzzi is a member of the House Education Committee and therefore will provide an interesting topic for students and faculty alike. Later that evening, Guzzi will also address the Democratic Town Committee at 8:00 p.m. in the Town room of the Town Hall.

P-10 offers film course

A series of classic and recent films will be shown this semester in Project Ten, the campus experimental college, with the selection ranging from the surreal psychedilia of Federico Fellini's Juliet of the Spirts to the science fiction detective drama in Jean-Luc Godard's Alphaville and John Ford's great John Wayne Western, Stagecoach.

The film series is part of a three-credit course jointly sponsored by Project Ten and Southwest titled "The Understanding Moviegoer" and taught by sociologist and film buff Sam Kaplan. Included in the series, which meets in Project Ten on Tuesday and Thursday nights is Fellini's phantasmagorical "erotic fantasy" Juliet of the Spirits, showing tonight at 7 p.m. in Pierpont television lounge.

Other showings include Antonioni's Red Desert (Febr. 21); Alphaville (Febr. 26); Frank Sturges' Miracle at Morgan's Creek (Febr. 28); Stagecoach (March 19); Fritz Lang's M (April 9); John Huston's Red Badge of Courage (April 11); Orson Welles' Citizen Kane (May 7); Francois Truffaut's Wild Child (May 14); and others.

People interested in enrolling for the course should phone or visit the Project Ten office in Pierpont (545);871).

Harvard votes placingtenured prof. on leave

CAMBRIDGE, Mass (AP) — The Harvard University faculty will investigate the placing of a tenured professor on involuntary leave - an action without modern precedent at the nation's oldest university.

The Faculty of Arts and Sciences unanimously voted Tuesday to create a committee to look into the status of the professor, Louis Hartz.

According to the account in the Harvard Crimson, Hartz, professor of government, opposed the move when it came to a vote, saying he wanted the entire faculty to consider his case. He then left the meeting.

Dean Henry Rosovsky said he placed Hartz on involuntary leave Feb. 4 because Hartz dissolved a seminar last fall. The dean said he acted with the concurrence of Harvard President Derek Bok, the faculty council, the university's attorney and the government department.

Dissolution of a course in term-time "is a serious matter requiring adequate reason", the dean said in a statement read to the faculty.

He said neither he nor anyone he consulted could understand why Hartz' seminar was dissolved, and since Hartz was scheduled to teach a large undergraduate course this spring it would be "unwise for me to allow circumstances to arise that could lead to a repetition to the events of this fall or to other unfortunate circumstances."

Hartz told the faculty he dissolved his seminar on 19th Century political throught because it was "inauthentic on the basis of student response," something he said a professor has the right to do when "in his opinion that course has lost its integrity as an academic experience."

FINAL LOOK--This overhead view of the Skylab space station cluster in Earth orbit was photographed from the Command and Service Modules during the final "fly-around" by the CSM before the return home. The space station is centered against cloud-covered Earth. Note the solar shield which was deployed by the second Skylab crew and which shades the orbital workshop in the area from which a micrometeroriod shield has been missing since the cluster was launched on May 14, 1973. The OWS solar panel on left side was also lost on the workshop launch day. (AP Wirephoto from NASA)

The Amherst Film Cooperative will present the film Scarface, Sunday in the Student Union Ballroom. Showings will be at 7:30 and 9:30. It's a rarely released gangster classic, starring Paul Muni.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

According to my mail, more persons are concerned with love, money and health in that order. Love always is first and perhaps St. Valentine would agree. No matter what your zodiacal sign, my wish is for Cupid to touch the heart of the one you love and for your love to be returned many times and also for you to have money and health to keep your love warm.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on the spiritual, your ability to come to terms with yourself. The creative you is emphasized. You will feel and know — and you will do something about it. Leo, Aquarius persons could figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't play games where security is concerned. Accent is on area of solar horoscope related to taxes, income potential, money relationship with once close to you. Build on solid foundation. Get estimates. Do plenty of comparison shopping.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Social activity could accelerate. You may find that people demand more time from you — and some even ask for money. Maintain balance and sense of humor. Sagittarian could play significant role. Emphasis is on joint efforts, public relations — and marriage.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your routine comes under certain amount of scrutiny. One who has your best interest at heart offers sound advice relating to health and work. Attend to specifics. Get details out of way. Give yourself a chance to enjoy what you earn.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with creativity, romantic inclinations. Sweeping changes could occur which ultimately result in greater freedom. Member of opposite sex figures in important way. Stick to your own style. Ignore complaints of envious associate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Study Cancer message. Become more aware of family requirements. Harmony at home becomes an issue. Taurus, Libra persons play key roles. Be diplomatic without abandoning principles. Build on base that is solid. What has been delayed will soon be activated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Separate fact from fancy; determine real issues as opposed to imaginary woes. Perceive motives. See people in light of actuality. Avoid self-deception. Take cash and let credit go. Talkative neighbor or relative is only repeating rumor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent is on money, personal possessions, ability to collect essential material. Your earning capacity improves. Bank account could become more of a joy and less of a woe. Capricorn, Cancer persons may be featured.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Finish rather than initiate project. Cycle is such that you can close important transaction. Take cold plunge. Creative leap now finds you landing on your feet. Know it and assert yourself. Be positive, specific.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Visit one confined to home, hospital. Be aware of limitations without brooding. Plan ahead for ultimate new start. Creative associate has suggestions which can remove logjam. Know it and be receptive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent is on fulfillment. Young person could bring joy. Rise above the petty; perceive potential. Learn by teaching; share knowledge. Follow through on hunch. Element of timing, perhaps luck, is on your corner.

PISCES (FEb. 19-March 20): Special honor comes your way. You've earned it. No need to kick toe in sand. If you are too modest, you could be bypassed for promotion. Accept recognition that is due. Restless individual could tell tale out of school. Listen and be amused — nothing more.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, fond of travel and an individual who can gain through the written word. You attract to you many born under Gemini and Sagittarius. You are persistent, have had many bittersweet experiences and you will be rid of a burden this year. August should be on of your most significant months of 1974.

Freakball anyone?

By SCOTT HAYES

If you have ever seen six guys running around in socks, trying to kick a tennis ball, you may have been watching one of the major participation sports at UMass — freakball — and not even known it.

Freakball, also known as lounge hockey, dates back to pre-Southwest days. The sport grew up in Central, and was played in the Quad, usually in the basements. The players wore boots, and supposedly the game was played under a different name.

With the rise of the towers in Southwest, it was inevitable that lounge hockey would become popular. The lounges on each floor of the towers are perfect for the playing field, and when the doors are opened, there are two built-in goals.

It was in Southwest that the game of freakball underwent refinements. Since the goalie had no equipment, the injury rate was astounding. The injuries were minor of course, (sprained wrists, broken fingers and an occasional shot to the mid-section) but freakball officials decided to outlaw the use of shoes.

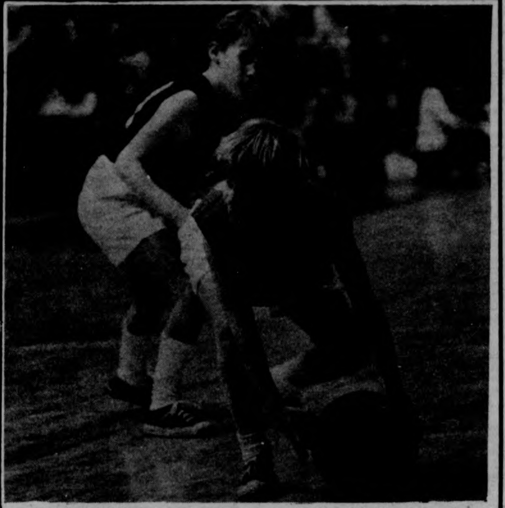
The rules of the game are simple. There are three players on a team, two forwards and a goalie. The object of the game is to kick (use of hands is forbidden) a ball, which resembles a tennis ball, through goals measuring about seven feet by three feet. There is checking and at times the going gets pretty rough.

The style of play varies from "pick up games" to league play. One of the floors which has had considerable success in the sport is the fourteenth floor of George Washington Middle.

Veteran Rick Clifford, a senior member of the fourteenth, told the Collegian, "Last year I organized a league, which was composed of five teams. Each team played five or six games during the semester. The playoffs had to be cancelled because of finals, and we never found out which was the best team."

This semester, the league's organizer, Clifford, plays goal for the Clippers. The Clippers won the championship last semester and so far have continued their domination over the Robins, winning the first two games this semester.

The coach of the Clippers is Chris Hackman. Hackman has had great success is looking for his second and is looking for his second championship in just two seasons. Larry Munn, the league's leading scorer last semester, is one of the many talented players the Clippers have recruited. Others include: Fran "Wildman" Brady, Joe "The Sword" Sheehan, Barry "Red Light" Emerson, John "Stretch" Heald and Mike "The Bouncer" Hegh.



WHO SAID BASKETBALL is for big men? Just because the little guy's hands can hardly grasp the ball he can still swoosh it with the best of them...his size. (Staff Photo—Dan Smith)

The Robins feature the play of Jeff "Lafoote" Karathanasis. Always an offensive threat, Karathanasis has successfully recovered from last season's most serious injury. "Lafoote" was digging for the ball in the corner last season, when his foot went through the retaining glass. Karathanasis was taken to the infirmary for stitches and was forced to sit out the remainder of the schedule.

The biggest question this semester for the Robins is whether or not they can replace Jim "Tongua" Cunningham. Cunningham, a 6-2, 190 pound forward, led the Robins in scoring last semester. Cunningham could perform amazing feats with the ball, but unfortunately was lured by a lucrative offer from an Orchard Hill team.

Mike Edison, Eric Cummings, and Bob "Baron" Millette join Pete Pettengill as the veterans of the squad. Hopefully for the Robins, rookie Jim Dale can replace Cunningham as the star of the team. Dale, a good looking prospect, has shown exceptional abilities in his first two games up from the minor leagues.

The fourteenth floor freakball league even has its own play by play announcer. Gery "Ge" Steinberg, a highly touted WMUA disc jockey, calls the action for those who can't get out to see the game.

A quick look at last season's attendance figures substantiates the success of the league. A total of 45 people turned out for 15 games. Of course, the figures don't include the 2,500 "no shows".

Red Sox inked

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Red Sox announced Wednesday that seven more players had agreed to terms, leaving five members of the 40-man roster still unsigned.

The latest to sign included pitcher Rick Wise, out-fielder Bernie Carbo, and veteran right-hander Juan Marichal.

Others agreeing to terms were outfielders Rick Miller, and Jim Rice, rookie pitcher Steve Barr and infielder Mario Guerrero.

WFL won't work

By BOB ESTELLE

Since the founding of the American Football League in 1960, many rich men have embarked on that bandwagon of trying to buck an established major league in a professional sport. The only sport that hasn't gotten some type of competitor is baseball and the only reason may be that expansion of the two major leagues has come to a point that the talent has become diluted.

In 1961, the American Basketball League came into existence. It had only two men in the league who could've played in the rival N.B.A. Eventually, Dick Barnett and Connie Hawkins became stars in the established league. The ABL lasted for only a year and a half and then folded.

The merger of the NFL and AFL encouraged another try at stopping the monopoly of the NBA. The American Basketball Association started play in 1967 and put pro basketball in such cities as Pittsburgh, Miami, Oakland and New Orleans. While those franchises did not succeed, others did and now it appears that the ABA is here to stay. The franchises in Kentucky, Indiana, Utah, New York and Virginia have been successful while other franchises are still on shaky grounds.

This apparent success led to the creation of the World Hockey Association. Starting play in 1972, this league has not succeeded in established NHL cities such as Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Chicago. It is a good guess that this league will fold. It doesn't have rich men willing to absorb initial losses like the AFL did and doesn't have owners to serve as cannon fodder like the ABA.

Nonetheless, we now have a new major pro football league. The World Football League will start play this summer. They, too, don't have rich owners like the AFL. They, too, are trying to establish themselves in established NFL cities. They don't have a good place to play in New York. Boston is too saturated for another pro team. Chicago's franchise may have to settle for Wrigley Field (which the Bears gladly vacated a few years ago) or Comiskey Park which was vacated by the Chicago (St. Louis) Cardinals many years ago (1960).

The talent may not be there. While the Southern California team got Booker Brown of USC and Kermit Johnson and Jim McAllister of UCLA, the probability of luring college stars away from the NFL is next to impossible as the older league has the wealth to compete with any rival and put them out of business.

I am all for this type of competition. Competition is what made this country great. But the public is not willing to buy the WFL or the WHA. The talent just isn't there to establish competition. And trying to buck established cities of the competitor will not help either.

Requiem for a superstar

The sun will be shining in Florida and Arizona next week. The one hundred and fifth season of major league baseball gets underway with the opening of spring training. Players whom you've never heard of before, young hopefuls with names such as Rick Burleson and Buck Dent will try to fulfill lifelong dreams of "playing with the big boys."

All of them report to places such as Tucson, Pheonix, Bradenton, Fort Meyers, and Winter Haven, locations that don't get major league baseball during the course of the regular season. One man will be heading to West Palm Beach. He'll be going for the last time.

This old man, he's played some, he's played a lot and always won...

The Man will be in shape, don't worry about that. He'll be looking forward to "just playing baseball." The mass media have been asking him the same questions for months on end. Shortly after the start of the campaign, his task will be accomplished. The media will want to talk to him again, so will Johnny Carson, so will Dick Cavett. Maybe the "president" will even give him a congratulatory phone call. But, The Man will be relieved; the waiting, the anticipation, the frustration will all be over. His job is done, however he will play the entire season.

The Man is durable — hardly ever in his long and illustrious career has he been set down by injuries for an extended period. He plays as often as possible. It's been a baseball "postulate" to retire people by giving them first base for the last couple of years of their careers. The Man tried playing first, but found he didn't like it there and so returned to his proper place in the outfield. Ballplayers are also retired by their managers by getting more frequent days off. Just because he wears an even uniform number doesn't mean The Man will sit down on odd days. He is a team player and wouldn't want to miss a thing. And boy would he love to end his playing career in the World Series just as a friend of his did last fall. However, his friend played his last year two years older than The Man and hence needed more days off. (He also played two years too long)

But let's get back to spring training. For those of you who have never followed the national pastime (and are doing so for the first time because you want to see The Man make history — after all it was his performance that got you interested in baseball) — let me explain something. He may hit two or more home runs in exibition games, but those don't count. It will, however show that he will be in shape when the bell rings.

It gives me a thrill to have seen The Man piay even though it was only a charity game for the Jimmy Fund some years ago. In a home-run hitting derby before the game, he put three pitches (out of five) over the famous Green Monster in Fenway Park. And the ball was being thrown pretty well.

If you want to see The Man perform this year, I suggest your first choice of seats be left-field upper deck. But they must be sold out already in the three cities where the act commences, San Francisco, Atlanta, and Cincinnati. Bring your big first baseman's mitt if you would like to catch the souvenir. You'll have to turn it over to an usher who probably will verify that it's THE ball by a special mark that the National League will stamp on it. Then you will become rich.

The Man might have played in Boston, but his first year was the team's first in Milwaukee. He was the one who made the city famous, not the beer. Now he plays and lives in Atlanta. And his brother is the only black manager in professional baseball, at Savannah — an Atlanta farm team.

He will be on the covers of a lot of baseball preview magazines. And it could be possible that Sports Illustrated will have the same cover person two weeks in a row. That would have to be The Man because he most likely will hit those two homers during the first week of the season. You might even want to wager with your friends who the pitcher will be.

The Man is Henry Aaron.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Big Marvin Barnes scored 31 points and grabbed 21 rebounds as Providence, the nation's 11th ranked basketball power, rolled to its 42nd consecutive home victory Wednesday night, belting Holy Cross 105-87.

Barnes also blocked four shots and had five assists as the Friars built a commanding 54-42 halftime lead and went on to boost their season record to 20-3.

Holy Cross, which has a 7-13 record, was led by Malcolm Moulton with 28 points.

Freestyle finale win gives swimmen success over Tufts

By BOB HIGGINS

It was the kind of meet that the UMass swim team always used to lose.

The outcome of the meet hinged on who won the final event, the 400-yard freestyle relay. In past years, UMass would lose the event and the meet. But this is a new UMass team, and yesterday afternoon they won the relay and the meet, 62-51, over Tufts.

The Minutemen started strong, as the teaa of George Kwiecen, Dave Boucher, Joe Hebert, and Spence Sullivan combined to wint the 400-yard medley realy, with a time of 4:06. Ben Crooker then won the 100-yard medley relay with a time of 11:08.5. Steve Latter took third place, and the score was 13-3, for the Minutemen.

The next three events were all Tufts. The visitors took first and seond in the 200-yard and 50-yard freestyle, as well as the 200 yard individual medley. UMass managed to take third in each of these; Ron Boucher in the 200-yard freestyle, Dick Blaisdell in the 50-yard free, and Duncan Lomas in the 200-yard medley. Tufts was now in the lead, 27-16.

From this point on, it was mostly UMass. Jeff Crouse took frist in the required one-meter diving, while Bill Quinn took third. Tufts' only diver, Susan Swan (that's right, Swan;, took second.

Joe Hebert then won the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 2:22.7, with Turfts taking second and third.

The same thing happened in the 100-yard freestyle as Duncan Lomas won it with a time of 53.2, and Tufts again took second and third, making the score 38-32, Tufts.

Tufts' Bill Sullivan won the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 2:16.8, but Scott McNab took second and George Kwiecen took third for the Minutemen.

Crooker won his second event of the meet, the 500-yard freestyle, with a time of 5:24.1. Spencer Sullivan also took third for UMass. Dave Boucher followed with a victory in the 200-yard breaststroke with a time of 2:24.3, with Tufts taking second and third.

Jeff Crouse then won his second event for UMass, the optional one-meter diving. Bill Quinn of UMass took second, and Susan Swan took third for Tufts.

This brought the score to 55-51, UMass, going into the final event, the 400-yard freestyle relay. The winner would win seven points and hence the meet. The race started evenly, but Ron Boucher took a smaal lead for UMass. The lead continued to grow. After Boucher came Joe Hebert, then Duncan Lomas, and by the time Dick Blaisdell was swimming the ffnal leg, the Minutemen had sewn up the race and the match, with a time of 3:30.2.

The hard-earned victory brings the UMass record to 4-4, one of the best in recent years. With five meets remaining, they have a good chance at a record of at least 8-5. The next meet is Saturday at New Hampshire.

Hurting UMass battles with Springfield

By CANDY GROSS
MDC Sports Staff

Springfield Memorial Field House will be the site for a clash between two of the top women's gymnastics teams in the nation, tonight at 8:00, as the reigning National Champion takes on fourth-place Springfield College. Of all UMass' dual meets, this will provide the stiffest competition, requiring top performances from every gymnast.

Springfield coach Mimi Murray has been with the team for eight years. In that time her team hasn't lost a dual meet, including its close 1.5 point victory over UMass last year.

Springfield has never lost the Eastern Championships, defeating UMass by a mere .15 of a point last year in a much protested decision.

Ms. Murray's team has also been strong in National Championships, having won three of the last five titles. Two years ago Springfield emerged victorious from a fourth place position, while UMass dropped to fourth from a tenacious lead. This turnabout came as a result of a weak showing on UMass' last event, balance beam. But last year, UMass women proved they were indeed the best team in the nation, scoring an all time high of 105.70 for first, which put Springfield 3.45 points behind for fourth.

This is to be their first meeting since last April and the outcome is anybody's guess. Springfield has three of its top gymnasts returning as well as the addition of an excellent new freshman. At last year's meet, Springfield's Katherine Kolemainen won All-Around, with Debby Dunkley capturing the balance beam and Debbie Mezger providing the all important scoring depth.

This is matched against strong competition from All-Arounders Anne Vexler and Jeannine Burger. It is anticipated that Margie Combs will also be back in all four events. Rounding out the line-up are bar specialists Betsy East, Gail McCarthy and Linda Nelligan, with Ms. Nelligan contributing some strong vaulting, as well. Specialists on floor and beam events will include Marian Kulick, Heidi Armstrong, Jodi Hitt and Alicia Goode.

Spirits have been riding high all week and Coach Virginia Evans sums up her team's efforts in this way: "the team has been practicing long and hard for this meet. I have no doubts that we're finally going to crack their long-standing dual meet record." Or, as Co-captain Anne Vexler confidently states, "I think we'll beat them!" We'll know Thursday night at about 10:30.

Woman gymnasts face 4th ranked Springfield

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

In a prelude to the final four Yankee Conference games of the year, the suddenly ailing Minutemen take on Springfield College at 8 p.m. in the Cage.

Ailing is right. Peter Trow came down with a strep throat and did not practice yesterday. John Murphy, whose knees have been in question of late, may now have kidney problems. And to top it all off, Al Skinner is feeling touches of the flu, which may account for his play against BU.

UMass women's gymnast Jeannine Burger is seen practicing her routine on the balance beam in preparation for tonight's meet. Ms. Burger will be performing as an All-Arounder against Springfield.

But doom is not forecast. Skinner and Murphy will almost definitely start, and Trow, the most serious of the three ailments, will probably see some spot action throughout the evening.

Even without the team at full tilt, Springfield should not prove much of a test for the Minutemen. The Chiefs sport a lowly 7-14 record, and have registered losses against both New Hampshire and Harvard whom UMass has handled with ease.

Springfield lost to UNH by nine. UMass romped over the Wildcats by 19.

The Chiefs lost to Harvard in overtime. The Minutemen solidly defeated the Crimson in the season's opener at the Cage.

Coach Jack Leaman, though, isn't taking S.C. lightly, "They're small, but they can still press and run", relates Leaman. "They have four fine players in Keith Daly, Fran Aniello, Bill Gregory, and Joel Goldson."

Daly is a good defensive guard who can also score (12.6 ppg). Aniello (a forward) can shoot. So can Goldson, who averages a sweet 16 points per game. And the Chief's center, Gregory, pours in about 14 per outing.

The Minutemen went through light drills in preparation for Springfield, which lost to Hartford in their last contest.

"It's not a matter of harder physical work now," relates Leaman, "it's confidence, which I think we regained against BU."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Minutemen
SPORTS

Speaking of the BU game, the coach had a few words on the officiating that night: "It was not well officiated, but often when the game is played sloppy, it becomes contagious. The refs were a little sloppy, too."

"Our players, though, were not as upset about the officials as they were about the size of the crowd." 3200 viewed the game Tuesday. The Cage has a capacity of 4200.

After Springfield, Rhode Island comes into the picture. "They've been shaping up well of late," says Leaman of the team which invades the Cage Saturday night. The Rams have a shot at the YanCon title, but would have to beat a lot of teams to come within grasp of it.

The Minutemen play three other conference teams after Rhode Island, Vermont and Maine at home and UNH away, in their request for a title that would most probably be a steppingstone to the N.I.T.

Before they can continue, however, the Springfield Chiefs must be encountered.

Solzhenitsyn and sport

Today in West Germany, a lonely embittered man ascends the stairs of an airplane and in so doing seeks shelter in a nation that only thirty years before had been the cruelest oppressor and anihilator in the history of Mankind.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn has assured that his name will live forever. It may not be remembered for his writing, but he will be forever etched on the minds of millions as a symbol of true moral strength. He stood up virtual isolation against perhaps the cruelest, most irrational nation in the world.

The Soviet government arrested the author for his attacks on "everything the Soviet Union holds dear." In other words Solzhenitsyn attacked the repression, coercion, and terror that characterize the Soviet Union, and which constitute the basic horror which is the sine qua non of its existence and prolongation.

This is the same nation that implores the czars of international sport to give it the opportunity to hold the 1980 Olympic Games. The Olympics are supposed to be the extravaganza where athletes from all over the world come to compete in a free and relaxed atmosphere where the only tension is that coming from athletic competition. Russia is not the place for such competition. Forgetting Solzhenitsyn for a moment, a short history of Soviet treatment of athletes will show why the Olympics must not be held in Moscow or any country which so outrageously neglects the basic tenets of human decency and human rights.

In September of 1972, an all-star team of Canadian professionals travels to the Soviet Union to battle the Russian national hockey team in the second half of their eight-game hockey series. It's bad enough that the Canadian team is down two games to one in the series, (one game had been tied) but the Soviets have devised a number of devious, typically-Soviet ways to make things even worse for the Canadians.

During their seven-day stay in Moscow, the hockey players and their wives could not even stay in the same roon. The Soviets obviously felt that sexual-privation would surely make the Canadians too tense to perform well on the ice. The KGB, the Russian Secret Police obliged Soviet Hockey Coach Vsevold Bobrov by phoning the Canadian players at all hours of the late evening and early morning hours trying to disrupt their sleep patterns. The fact that no one was ever on the other end of the line when the phone was answered didn't help the frayed Canadian nerves either. To make things worse, no member of the visiting party of players and officials could ever venture outside without being followed by one or two policemen.

To the eternal credit of the Canadian team they won three out of the four games played in Russia and completed an amazing comeback successfully, but the feeling as expressed by Paul Henderson undoubtedly spoke for the entire Canadian team. "It was great, but I don't think I could ever go back, the pressure was just too great." And he wasn't talking about competitive pressure either.

Last August, the World University Games were held in Moscow. The innocence that is sometimes associated with youth, innocence which sometimes is better left to literature, was nonexistent. The KGB took care of that.

The Israeli contingent to the games - world athletic events are supposed to be divorced from politics - was booed and had obscenities shouted at it upon its entrance to the stadium. Moreover, the small groups of Soviet Jews who witnessed the games' events to cheer their brethren were systematically and viciously hounded by the Soviet authorities, to the point where a group of Jewish spectators was dragged, kicking and screaming, from a basketball game which the israeli team was involved. The world howled but the Russian government said "no comment."

It is this atmosphere of tension and fear that have always characterized Russian life. For the olympics to be held in Moscow would constitute a hypocritical act in direct opposition to the ideals upon which the Olympics were established. The Soviets have no bones about exiling their own citizens when their words and deed are an embarassment to the state. They also have no bones when it comes to harassing visiting athletes. When not even a skeleton of human decency exists in the Soviet Union neither the Olympics nor any other international athletic events should be held there.

Senate head says UMass lots overfilled

By LARRY CARPMAN

A new experimental parking plan will make "already oversubscribed lots infinitely oversubscribed" according to David E. Booker, Speaker of the Student Senate.

The policy will allow all vehicles with a permanent decal to park in their assigned lot or any of the three peripheral lots.

Booker said yesterday: "The peripheral lots will be overworked and made worse. Booker noted that the peripheral lots (11, 12, 13) are in the worst condition of all the parking areas.

The potholes are the deepest and the snow removal is the worst," he said.

Meanwhile Alan Gross, chairperson of the Transportation and Parking Council said: "There was no intent to abuse the system. The experiment was decided upon because there were complaints that the peripheral lots were not fully used," he said.

"With this new policy, Gross continued, people in five-dollar lots can move around with more flexibility."

At the same time Booker pointed out that the proposed experiment would take away from the initial goal of making the campus for pedestrians rather than automobiles. He suggested that with the experimental policy people will use their cars for short trips rather than walk.

"It is a contradiction with the original proposal," said UMass Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage. "However, I do not think it will have a great effect in my opinion," he said.

The experiment is being run, Gage said, to measure the impact of the new policy. "There are long range expectations to close down the core lots, he said, but this is for sometime in the next five years."

Also, Ms. Carol Drew, an official of the on-campus union local 1776 who initially opposed the parking proposal said she was unaware of the new experiment and would bring the matter up at the next executive meeting.

The initial proposal created in April 1973 and then revised in June called for a plan that would "Discourage unnecessary use of the automobile...and increase safety, while reducing traffic."

The proposal also calls for the Transportation and Parking Council to hold open hearings during the "last weeks in February to review the accumulated suggestions and to discuss additional ideas."

"All our meetings are open to the public," said Gross. Transportation Council meetings are held Tuesday mornings in the Campus Center.

Faculty Senate again refuses to kill rhetoric

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday approved a "strong, effective Rhetoric Program" in which students will take courses or participate in specified activities according to their performance on language skills exams administered when they enter the University.

More than two hours of debate went into this decision as the Faculty Senate spewed forth its own "rhetoric on Rhetoric" at their regular meeting at the School of Business Administration yesterday.

Abolishment of the University rhetoric requirement was called for in the original motion from the Academic Matters Council.

In its place, a diagnostic examination in communication skills would be required of all incoming freshmen and transfer students.

Upon the basis of their performance on such an exam, students would be "counseled into" the activities of the Rhetoric Program, with note of this performance made on the information label of the student's academic file.

"A diagnostic test will help us to know what a student needs to gain or increase his competency in, and not to have each student meet minimum standards," stated Senator Castellano B. Turner, of the Academic Matters Council.

Senator John Muller, President of the Grad Senate, added, "The committee was originally concerned with defining the needs of students and creating a flexible program in response to these needs."

An attempt was made to substitute a "competency exam" for the diagnostic test. All students in the University would have to pass this competency exam before graduating from UMass, regardless of their performance in Rhetoric courses.

Professor Malcolm O. Sillars, Head of the Rhetoric Program, stated, "There has never been a clarification made of the role, scope or nature of the Rhetoric Program."

In reference to the competency examination, Senator Joseph Frank, Head of the English Department, said, "Fifteen months ago I passionately pleaded for the maintenance of the Rhetoric requirement. I've now changed my mind, but I find the idea of a competency exam dubious. It may be a dishonest means of competency."

Senator Howard Gadlin questioned whether a competency exam was feasible to determine exemption from the Rhetoric requirement because, "A student could pass Rhetoric and not pass the competency exam."

Or in the words of Senator Walter B. Denny, "You can lead a student to Rhetoric and let him drink, but you can't force him to Rhetoric and make him drink."

The substitute motion was defeated 56-27 and another substitute motion was placed on the floor by Senator Robert L. Bancroft.

For the past year, the Campus Committee on Communication Skills has been studying the Rhetoric Program and possible alternatives.

Senator Bancroft called for the adoption of the final CCCS report with several changes including deletion of the competency exam requirement and reduction of the student representation on the Rhetoric Board.

The Rhetoric Board will decide what courses or activities a student should participate in so as to strengthen the skills in which she or he might be deficient.

Hearst tags Saxbe comments on kidnapping 'irresponsible'

By SUSAN SWARD
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The father of Patricia Hearst denounced as "damn near irresponsible" a comment by U.S. Atty. Gen. William Saxbe yesterday, that if authorities located the kidnaped newspaper heiress, "they'd go get her."

Less than an hour later, Saxbe issued a "clarifying" statement backing the FBI's handling of the case and declaring he would not want agents to take any action that would endanger the young victim's life.

"To make a statement that you're going to bust in and shoot the place up from Washington I think is damn near irresponsible," Randolph A. Hearst told newsmen at his home in Hillsborough, 15 miles south of San Francisco.

"In the first place, they don't know where she is. In the second place, a statement like that is an antagonistic one that I don't think has any place in the negotiations we're trying to conduct out here," said Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner and chairman of the Hearst Corp.

The FBI also took issue with Saxbe's original statement that authorities would be derelict in their duty if they learned where Miss Hearst was being held and didn't attempt to rescue her.

"I would love nothing better than to be able to rescue the girl," said Charles Bates, special agent in charge of the FBI's San Francisco office. "But we're not going to if there's a chance it will get her hurt."

Hearst also rejected Saxbe's suggestion that the family should not agree to a multimillion-dollar food giveaway demanded by the Small crowd demands regional bus plan

By MARTIN J. WATERS

Wide support for establishment of a regional transportation authority was voiced last night at a meeting of the Amherst Committee on Public Transportation. Spokespersons for a dozen community groups told the seven-member panel that they favor utilization of a new state law providing for the regional transit authorities. A thin crowd of about 130 attended the meeting, which was carried over radio and cable television from the Junior High School.

Dissent came from the Massachusetts State Employees Association, represented by Eugenia Shifflett. She said "The UMass bus system has proved totally inadequate for the employees who use peripheral lots as the only alternative to exhorbitant fees." Shifflett stated that the M.S.E.A., representing some 16-hundred campus workers, "will oppose indeterminate extension of outreach (i.e. - Sunderland, Belchertown Road) routes without the users assuming the costs."

Other presentations, with one exception, included endorsement of establishment of a regional transit authority. Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) told the group that the new legislation provides added means of governmental support for public transit. One possible procedure for aid would include Federal payment of two-thirds of the cost, with the state and the local area dividing the other one-third.

University Planning Director Jack Littlefield re-emphasized administration support for the bus system now in operation, but for which Federal backing expires in May. "The University is firmly committed to maintaining the present level of bus service," he stated.

Associate Professor William Goss of the UMass Mechanical Engineering Department submitted a preliminary report he has prepared jointly with LeRoy Butler, Jr., a graduate student in the department. It details options for the future, including curtailment of service to only the campus, maintenance of present routes, and extensive expansion. The options for expansion are listed in preferential order, with addition of service to the South Pleasant Street - East Hadley Road area the first priority if service is expanded. The cost of that route, for class days only, is estimated at $52,000. Other possible additions, in descending order of preference, are: Mountain Farms Mall, Pelham Road-Echo Hill, South Amherst, East Pleasant St.-Cushman, and East Hadley. Service to Belchertown Center, South Deerfield, Montague, Leverett, Shutesbury and Pelham are low priorities.

If a regional transit authority were established, its operations might be via an enlarged University-based system, or through private bus companies. G.F. Pellissier, general manager of the Holyoke Street Railway Company urged use of private carriers. "The University's business is education, our business is transport" he said. Pellissier also alluded negatively to the use of non-union drivers by the UMass system. Student Government President Nick Apostola told the audience that the students pioneered the bus service, and want to be included in the decision making now. In his words "We're ready to put our mouths where our money has been."

Other recommendations from various spokespersons included construction of bicycle paths and bicycle storage areas at bus stops, dial-a-bus service, and indeed, a proposal for jitney service in Amherst. The Committee on Public Transportation will continue its work, submit an interim report at the town meeting this May, and a final report at the 1975 meeting.

Correction

A story in Wednesday's Collegian incorrectly reported the current percentage of full-time faculty with tenured contracts at UMass.

The correct figure is 57 per cent of the 1,306 full-time Amherst faculty, according to Susan Blonis of the Office of Institutional Studies.

The percentage represents 747 faculty as of January 17, 1974. The Collegian regrets this error.

Looking for employment? Why not try this

By SUSAN KRIVATSY and DON BANKS

Chances are that sometime in the near future you will be looking for a job. On the one hand, if you're a senior, you may be interested in a particular position which will hopefully lead to a career. On the other, you may be looking for an opportunity to tide you over a certain transition period.

In either case , you need not depend on classified ads to help you find a job. These are a helpful source of information, especially if your accupational choice is restricted by geographic considerations. However, rather than waiting for the right job in the right company to be advertised, systematically go through any directory of companies (consider everything from Fortune magazine's yearly list of the top 500 corporations to the local Yellow Pages) — and make your own list of the places where you would like to work.

Contact these agencies. If it is a local firm, you may phone them, describe the sort of job you're looking for and ask if they could employ you. (One woman architecture student we know used this method for landing well-paying drafting jobs in architectural offices four summers in a row.) Don't be disappointed if several tries yield no results. Many employers are short on cash themselves.

Contact other firms. Send your resume to the personnel departments or ask for their employment application forms; or, in some cases, write directly to the head of the department that interests you.

There are also persons and offices on campus for you to contact.

First, consider your academic department. Especially if you're closely associated with some of the faculty and intend to stay in the field, approach them and ask if they know of any job openings related to your interests. Community agencies often keep academic department heads informed of their openings.

Or, ask to see some of the professional journals which often carry job advertisements. If you are a sophomore or junior, this is a good time to find out how the seniors in your field are going about finding jobs and what agencies end up employing them.

Second, visit the campus Career Development Center, which also serves as a placement office. Get a copy of the weekly "Career News" which lets you know who will be recruiting on campus, what majors they are interested in and how you can make an appointment to interview.

It would be wise, at least by the end of junior year, to have a complete file on yourself at the Career Development Center. This is your placement file, an attractive package of credentials and personal data which is released on your behalf and at your driection to potential employers and graduate schools. Such a file contains a resume of your background, a statement of interests and career objectives, copies of references and, in many cases, copies of grades or courses.

During your college years, you "build" your file by collecting good letters of reference from part-time employers, workshop supervisors, and faculty members. In the field of education, it is almost a "must" to have usable credentials. In many other career areas employers insist on seeing such information prior to making a job offer.

In addition, don't hesitate to ask for a career counselor. He or she may very well be able to give you valuable information about how to use the education you do have and where else to look for a job. Or, stop in at the Career Information Library where you can find information about various career fields, projected employment outlooks, graduate schools, and specific employers.

Consider taking a "situation wanted" ad in some publication. Also, don't be reluctant to utilize "contacts" that you may have through family, friends and teachers. People are generally happy to help you out if they can. Later on, you will not only have your own "contacts", but you will be able to serve as a "contact" for somebody else.

Guzzi speaks; few listen

By REID FISHMAN

Paul Guzzi, Democratic State Representative from Newton and candidate for Massachusetts Secretary of State, addressed a small group of students yesterday in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. During the period, Guzzi answered a barrage of questions concerning such important issues as public campaign financing and the importance of the statewide caucus, which is scheduled to be held in Framingham on March 23.

Guzzi, who is the writer and chief sponsor of what is commonly known as the "Model Public Finance Bill", stated that if the bill passes, it would mark the "first time in this country that there would be a publicly financed election." Guzzi, who has always been a leading proponent of public campaign financing, said that everybody "didn't care about it until Watergate," but now it seems that everybody is interested.

Concerning the caucus in Framingham, Guzzi said, "If I don't win the caucus, I will abide by it and support the caucus nominee." But when asked what he would do if the caucus supported incumbent Democrat John Davoren, Guzzi replied, "That's another story."

Guzzi is running for Secretary of State because he feels that the office "could become much more than what it is." He intends to increase the potential of the office by using the state computer service more fully to distribute information and to "increase responsiveness to state government".

He appears to be an energetic candidate who is depending a great deal of the March 23 caucus, and he feels that the caucus is "a new way of going about politics". When asked if he would support either Democratic candidate for governor, he declined, saying that "everybody has to run his own campaign", but he did indicate that his policies were more similar to those of Mike Dukakis.

200 attend concert

About 200 concertgoers helped get the Hatch cafeteria's Celebrity Series Thursday concerts off to a start last night, despite a no-show by nationally-recorded rock and blues artists Tracy Nelson and Mother Earth which forced a local group to perform instead.

The concerts, sponsored by the management of the Bluewall, are planned for nearly every Thursday night for the rest of the semester, and several nationally known artists are scheduled to perform.

Among them are rock and jazz guitarist John Hammond, black blues artist Howlin Wolf and folk singer Dave Van Ronk, all in late February or early March. Each will do two shows on a Thursday in the Hatch cafeteria, beginning at 9 p.m.

Tracy Nelson and Mother Earth, originally scheduled for last night, will go on a makeshift stage in the cafeteria next Thursday. Tickets are $1, usually available up to show time at the door. A bar is open at each performance.

Stoneham: was he a scapegoat?

By MARK VOGLER

Campion

Stoneham

Dining commons food may have caused more than upset stomachs at the University of Massachusetts — and it is leaving a bad taste in the administration's mouth.

Inefficient operation of the Food Services Department proved to be a liability for another high level administrator last week as Thomas B. Campion resigned as Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Services.

In November Campion had announced that the contract of Joel Stoneham, then director of Food Services, would not be renewed when it expires September 14. The then-Vice-Chancellor wasted no time in appointing Kenneth Dean to succeed Stoneham, the latter being placed on "special assignment."

And now Mr. Campion finds himself with a new job.

Although Campion and most administrators have remained nonresponsive to the actual reasons behind the vice chancellor's stepping down, some University spokesmen have suggested that the problems with the dining commons played an important factor in the decision.

Stoneham, who in effect was fired by Campion, is one of those who voices this view.

"If you've got an albatross around your neck, then you've got quite a problem...but I really question as to whether Campion should be held responsible, " Stoneham said in a Collegian interview Wednesday.

The former food services director said that he is still very frustrated over his own dismissal. According to Stoneham, Campion never gave him a "definitive" reason for his dismissal.

"He told me that he and the students had lost confidence in me, but he never told me why," he declared.

Stoneham said he contested the assertion made by the UMass administration that the "finances were messed up."

"They weren't. It was simply the enormously high rising costs of food and labor," he said.

"As far as the student's beef about the quality of the food, it goes back to the basic problem of feeding a hell lot of kids in the factory. It's not like eating in a restaurant."

Stoneham said that there was a lack of communication between his office and Campion's and added that he never had an advanced warning that he would be replaced.

He now feels that the "student furor" was an important factor in his downfall.

"They had a lot to do with it...-they had an opportunity to beef with the higher level administrators. Perhaps I should have paid more attention to the student opposition, but I was too involved with the rising food costs.

"The kids get bored with hearing a person's name for too long...and they heard Stoneham for seven years."

One newspaper account reported that Stoneham had attempted to be reinstated, and had indicated that he may have been used as a higher ups.

Stoneham would not confirm this, but replied "I don't want to work for a boss who doesn't want me around."

He predicted that Dean, his successor, would fall victim to the same food problems he did unless "he knows something I didn't know and has a few miracles up his sleeve."

Food Services was not the only problem which forced Campion to resign. UMass spokesmen told the Collegian that the controversial parking policy and inefficiency in dormitory management were other reasons why the administration forced him out.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said changes in Campion's office were needed to exercise better management control and to reduce the scope of the office of vice-chancellor for administrative services.

Campion had performed "with great dedication in his complex role," Bromery said.

He was one of three vice-chancellors who served under Chancellor Bromery. The other two are Provost and vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage.

It had been rumored since last December that Campion would resign when he took a five week self-imposed leave of absence from his duties.

One University spokesman says that the administrative shake-up will not end with Campion's resignation and that another vice-chancellor will be stepping down in the future.

Non-profit towing eyed by Senate

By KATHY SHEEHAN

A non-profit towing service, owned and operated by the students, is being designed through the Student Senate for the beginning of next year.

The proposal is to buy an inexpensive tow truck from the State Dept. of Surplus Property. A tow would cost a driver about five dollars. The cars would be stored on the fourth level of the CC Garage, and the owners would be charged the regular parking fees at the garage for storage in addition to the parking fine and the small towing charge.

Although Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage has not yet given official approval of the plan, the Director of Campus Security, David Johnston, has given the Student Organizing Committee a clear o.k. for the project.

According to Elyce Cann, a member of the Student Organizing Committee, (S.O.C.), Johnston gave them approval to store the truck at the Campus Security Parking Lot behind Dickinson Hall. He agreed to let the student operators of the truck work out of his office.

The S.O.C. will submit a budget and a proposal of the two service officially to Gage within the next two weeks.

Amherst Towing has the current contract with UMass to tow illegally parked cars at a charge of $14.00 plus storage charges of $1.00 per day. They are frequently criticized by students here.

Only cars illegally parked in fire lines would be towed. Cars without stickers would also be towed. Cars parked in the wrong lot would escape the hook.

Approximately 14 to 20 students on the work-study program would be employed to drive the truck 24 hours a day.

Presently, the process for towing is conducted in three stages. A security guard calls the desk at Campus Security. The desk clerk then issues an order to Amherst Towing.

With the student-run system, a student would be at the Campus Security Station at all times. When a security guard calls for a tow truck, one would be sent out immediately.

If the plan is approved, the service would not be able to begin until January 1, 1975 because Amherst Towing is under contract with UMass until that time.

When their contract expires, the two service will then be open to the lowest bidder. Ms. Cann feels confident that the students will be able to bid the lowest among the two companies for the contract with the University.

The student operation would be non-profit and charge only for the cost of purchasing, insuring, and maintaining the vehicle.

The S.O.C. is the governing body of the Student Organizing Project through which the two service is being planned. This committee is open to all students who want to become involved in organizing and working on the project.

SW women set up task forces

By B. J. ROCHE

In order to become more atuned to the needs of Southwest, as well as work towards serving these needs, the Southwest Women's Center has restructured its volunteer work force.

The new system, recently introduced at the Center, is based on one which has been used by other women's centers, with positive results. Eight task forces have been set up, each under a different category, with three main objectives.

First, the members will study what has been done in the subject, with specific regard for Southwest.

Once the information is gathered, the members will propose plans for improvements. This would include changes, additions or eliminations of certain programs.

Each task force will meet about once a week, and in turn will present its findings to a general meeting of the Center, where policies will be discussed, and revised. In addition to making improvements, the task forces will provide more connections for the Center, to build a wider range of referral services.

Task Forces were originated with many different facets of the Southwest community in mind, and cover a large range of topics. Outreach, Hazards for Women on Campus, Academics, Budget, Counseling, and Racism are the long range projects, as well as a Communications group set up to work on communications among the eight groups. This task force will also be responsible for communications with all Southwest residents, and the Campus as a whole. The eighth task force is for the upcoming Spring Weekend to be sponsored by the Women's Center.

Peggy Cooksen, a member of the Communications group sees the task forces as being beneficial in that there is equality among the groups, and "It puts an end to the hierarchal order set up in most organizations." It is hoped that Task Forces will be more productive in providing serivces to Southwest, and that more people will become involved with the Center.

Volunteers interested in making improvements in Southwest are welcome to work on any of the Task Forces, and urged to come down to the Southwest Women's Center in MacKimmie and sign up.

Jaworski says White House cuts him off

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski told the Senate Thursday the White House has refused to turn over more material for his Watergate investigations. The White House confirmed it and said the order came from President Nixon.

"It is now clear that evidence I deem material to our investigations will not be forthcoming," Jaworski wrote Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Judiciary committee.

A committee member, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., immediately urged Eastland to call a meeting "to consider the ominous implications of Mr. Jaworski's letter." He said the prosecutor should be given the opportunity to testify.

Jaworski said he had been informed by letter "that the President has refused to reconsider his earlier decision to terminate his cooperation with this investigation, at least with regard to producing any tape recordings of presidential conversations."

Asked if this meant Nixon would furnish Jaworski and his staff with no further tapes or White House documents, Warren responded that presidential attorney James St. Clair "will continue to discuss matters with Mr. Jaworski on a confidential basis and will cooperate with the special prosecutor's office to the extent feasible."

Asked whether Nixon was contemplating firing Jaworski, Warren refused a direct response, saying the question "is not before us, the situation hasn't been raised."

In confirming that St. Clair had sent a letter to Jaworski refusing his latest request for material, White House aides made clear that the decision had been made by Nixon himself.

Eastland, reached by telephone in Mississippi, said he had not seen the Jaworski letter. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee declined comment on what the committee might do. It has a meeting scheduled next Tuesday to consider a nomination for deputy attorney general.

Jaworski aid that in the investigation of the Watergate break-in and coverup he had asked, and been refused, tape recording of 27 presidential meetings and telephone conversations.

A deputy, he said, also was not given materials relating to the investigation of dairy industry contributions, and that the White House refused to permit prosecution staff members to review files relating to the special investigations unit known as the plumbers.

The requests for some of the materials date back to August 1973, Jaworski told Eastland.

'Rival health plans' cost $80b, Nixon says

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) - President Nixon said yesterday that rival proposals to his national health plan would damage the quality of health care and add $80 billion to America's tax bill.

Dedicating a new hospital wing, Nixon made his first speech of the year outside Washington - the first of two political-type appearances planned during his six-day Southland stay.

As he promoted his own proposals and criticized Democratic-sponsored legislation before Congress, Nixon received cheers and applause from more than 1,000 carefully screened invited guests.

He ignored chants and boos of anti-Nixon demonstrators kept behind three rows of rope barricades in a nearby street.

He contended that his health insurance plan would preserve the best features of America's private health-care system at a low cost to the taxpayer.

"Most of us would not want an $80-billion increase in taxes," he said, repeating his previously used cost estimate for the plan proposed by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and other Democrats.

Democrats contend Nixon's estimate is erroneous, and the cost would be about the same as Nixon's proposal.

Nixon said the rival plans would be costly, too, "in reducing the quality of medical care."

"I want the doctor to be working for the patient and not for the federal government," Nixon said.

Nixon's address came after he toured an automated health testing center at the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital.

The invited guests outside on the sunny lawn waved hand-lettered signs saying "We love you," "Hang in there" and "One Year of Watergate is Enough!" There also was a small sign saying, "Even Freud Couldn't Help You."

Farther away, but in clear view of the President, were demonstrators with signs and banners ranging from "Impeach and Imprison" to "Nationalize Oil" to "Exorcize Nixon."

Nixon flew to his nearby Key Biscayne home Wednesday. On Monday he joins Gov. George C. Wallace for an Honor America Day rally in Huntsville, Ala.

Food prices soar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Grocery store food prices are rising much faster than government experts had expected a few months ago and for all of 1974 could match last year's 16 per cent jump, the most in a quarter century.

The Agriculture Department said yesterday consumers now are seeing the biggest increases expected this year. If farmers produce record crops and turn out more livestock next summer, consumers might see prices level off and possibly decline by year end, officials said.

Based on "most likely" situations, officials said the 1974 store price of food might be held to a 12 per cent gain from last year.

But meanwhile the Outlook and Situation Board said, supermarket food prices in the first quarter are up 5 per cent from the last three months of 1973. And compared with January-March last year, these prices are expected to be up 20.7 per cent.

Last December, in a preliminary analysis, the department said grocery store food prices would rise about 15 per cent in the first quarter.

The board, in careful language, said if farmers produce larger harvests than expected now the food price jump for all of 1974 — computed on an average for the entire year — might be only 8 per cent.

A year ago, USDA predicted 1973 food prices in stores would climb no more than 6.5 per cent. They rose 16 per cent on an all-year average basis.

Commenting on the first-quarter situation, the board said "prices for practically all major categories are rising."

Reduced supplies, higher farm prices and rising costs of getting food from farms to consumers were blamed.

"The outlook for food prices after the first quarter is much less certain," the report said. "Upward pressure will continue to be exerted on food prices in the form of higher marketing and distribution costs, partly as a reflection of the energy situation."

Saxbe tells Hearst: reject SLA demands as 'vague and unrealistic'

Symbionese Liberation Army, the underground terrorist group that abducted the 19-year-old college sophomore 11 days ago from her apartment here.

"Mr. Saxbe is not the father of Patricia," Hearst said. "I'm going to do what I can to get her out."

The SLA has demanded that the Hearst family provide $70 worth of free food for every needy Californian as a first step toward negotiating Miss Hearst's release. Hearst said Wednesday he could not possibly meet the demand — estimated by state officials to cost as much as $400 million — but promised to develop some sort of food distribution plan.

At a morning news conference in Washington, Saxbe said he believed federal authorities could identify most of the kidnapers. He later amended that statement also, saying, "I have no certain knowledge there are suspects identified in connection with this matter..."

He did not, however, make reference to his earlier comment that he did not think the Hearst family should comply with the terrorists' demands and a spokesman said the attorney general would have nothing further to say on the subject.

"I certainly wouldn't recommend compliance with such vague and unrealistic demands," Saxbe said. "What they are asking is even beyond the ability of government to perform. You don't catch kidnapers or save the victim by doing what the kidnapers say."

Hearst reiterated yesterday he was "in the process of seeing what is possible" in terms of partially meeting the demand.

"At the moment we're trying to see what is possible and what can be done. When we have given them the plans, we'll announce what we think we can do. I can't go on a strict time-table, because I'm not sure yet what we can do."

Hearst also said his wife, Catherine, had been wrong when she announced Wednesday that the family had received more than $1 million in donations from individuals and groups who heard about the huge ransom demand.

"She got the figure from hearing somebody say that if they had a telethon or suggested a telethon they could raise $1 million," he said. "I don't know how much we have, it isn't anything like that." He added that the family is not soliciting funds.

Meanwhile, a coalition of San Francisco Bay area activist groups here named by the SLA to be observers of the food giveaway offered to negotiate for Miss Hearst's release.

"We are concerned about avoiding bloodshed in the case both of Patricia Hearst and the members of the SLA," the Rev. Cecil Williams, a minister of San Francisco's Glide Memorial church, one of the groups named, told newsmen.

"Therefore, we are willing to appoint representatives from our organizations to serve as a liaison between the Hearst family and the SLA," Williams said, "if doing so would provide a situation that will prevent further destruction of human life."

Miss Hearst was dragged screaming from her Berkeley apartment on Feb. 4 and driven off in a hail of gunfire.

Berkeley radio station KPFA received a letter three days later in which the SLA said it was holding Miss Hearst as "a prisoner of war" for crimes her parents had committed as representatives of the corporate establishment.

A second letter to the station last Tuesday contained the demands for food and included a tape recording from Miss Hearst in which she begged her father to take the kidnapers' demands seriously.

Authorities have speculated the SLA may ask for Little and Remire's release in exchange for freeing Miss Hearst.

Julie operated on for cyst

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — Julie Nixon Eisenhower successfully underwent a 44-minute major operation last night to stop internal bleeding from an ovarian cyst, a White House spokeswoman said.

The 25-year-old daughter of President Nixon responded when she came out of the operating room at the Indiana University Medical Center last night and "everything had gone well," said Helen Smith, the White House spokeswoman.

A hospital spokesman said the surgery Mrs. Eisenhower had undergone could take from 30 minutes to two hours.

Solzhenitsyn rests, waits

Family still in Russia

By ROON LEWALD
Associated Press Writer

LANGENBROICH, Germany (AP)-Invitations to live in various countries poured into Alexander Solzhenitsyn's temporary refuge Thursday.

His host, German author Heinrich Boll, said Solzhenitsyn was expecting a visitor shortly, and that there would be an announcement "so there will be no obscurity about our plans tomorrow." The visitor was not named.

Friends of the family told newsmen in Moscow that prosecutors presented Solzhenitsyn with prepared charges of treason, which carry the death penalty, when they held him in prison before expelling him Wednesday. The Russian Nobel laureate was kicked out of his homeland because of his book about the Stalinist labor camps.

It appeared that the Soviet authorities attempted to frighten the author into accepting banishment from Russia on threat of standing trial for treason.

Soviet sources claimed Wednesday that Solzhenitsyn did agree to leave his homeland but there was no way to confirm this report and it was entirely possible he rejected exile and opted for the trial.

Fully aware of the international consequences of such a trial, the Soviet authorities may have forced Solzhenitsyn aboard the Russian jet that carried him to Germany.

Solzhenitsyn, a veteran of years in Stalin's labor camps, always vowed he would never voluntarily leave Russia and it was considered unlikely that he cringed at the treason threat.

Thursday he told newsmen at Boll's estate here, "No interviews. No questions. I am tired. I have my worries to attend to."

One of those worries was his wife, Natalya Svetlova, who is still in Moscow with the couple's three sons. The Soviet Communist party newspaper Pravda says the author's family will be able to live with him in exile.

She told newsmen in the Soviet capital that she still has not been contacted personally by Soviet authorities about her husband's exile.

She said she has not applied for an exit visa.

Solzhenitsyn said after talking with his wife by telephone Wednesday night: "Everything seems all right so far."

Scandinavian news agencies reported that Solzhenitsyn planned to settle in Norway. Other countries making residence offers or mentioned by newspapers as his future residence include Israel, Australia, Ireland, Britain and the United States.

Solzhenitsyn spent much of Thursday with his Swiss lawyer, Dr. Fritz Heeb.

Heeb indicated Wednesday that the author would settle somewhere in Scandinavia.

The attorney was silent Thursday when he arrived at the Boll country estate in Langenbroich, a town of 100 inhabitants about 35 miles from Bonn.

By Thursday afternoon, the Soviet news media was cranking up its propaganda machine in an attempt to justify the Kremlin's action against Solzhenitsyn.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the Soviet public was unanimous in its support of the exile decree.

The government newspaper Izvestia quoted a man who wrote a letter expressing "satisfaction" with the decree. The letter supposedly was mailed from Baku, about 1,200 miles from Moscow and arrived in time for Izvestia's Thursday evening edition, an incredible feat for the Soviet postal system.

Who's next on the list?

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

The exile of Alexander Solzhenitsyn demonstrates a certain Kremlin sensitivity to Western opinion, but at the same time it seems a new and significant step toward snuffing out the whole dissent movement in the Soviet Union.

The question quickly arises: Who will be the next to go? Andrei Sakharov, the physicist who has defended the Nobel Prize winner? Roy Medvedev, the historian whose biologist brother already is in exile for disagreeing? Vladimir Maximov, author?

In the days before the current era of peaceful coexistence between Washington and Moscow, Soviet authorities might have used other means of silencing such insistent critics.

However, only last September the U.S. Senate formally voted an expression of concern over Soviet intimidation of intellectuals, specifically mentioning Solzhenitsyn, Sakharov and some others by name. The action suggested that Soviet policy at home could hamper trade relations.

Exile is a softer tool and looks less barbarous to the West than such things as show trials and forced labor. In Solzhenitsyn's case, authorities had to revert to a tactic unused since the Trotsky expulsion of 1929 - forced exile - because the writer had balked at leaving voluntarily.

Exile has become an important official weapon against dissent.

Many noted dissenters who were persuaded to leave the Soviet Union for one reason or another subsequently had their citizenship canceled and were forbidden to return.

When Soviet-American relations were warming at high levels a few years ago, the KGB, Moscow's secret police, launched a campaign, codenamed Case 24, against dissenters.

It was successful in that it silenced the underground press that was holding the dissent movement together. Once facet of the campaign was that it drove into exile abroad dissenters so prominent that trying them at home would stir too much unwelcome uproar.

The less known and less lucky were sent to prison camps or to asylums for "psychiatric" treatment on the theory that anybody disagreeing with the Kremlin had to be mentally unbalanced.

Indians plans told to FBI

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Plans by Indian activists to jail federal marshals and set up a sovereign Sioux nation on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota were related to an undercover FBI agent, the agent testified Thursday.

Stanley Keel, 32-year-old half-blood Chickasaw from Oklahoma, testified as a prosecution witness at the trial of Russell Means, 34, and Dennis Banks, 41, leaders in the American Indian Movement AIM.

Means, of Porcupine, S.D., a reservation town, and Banks, Minnesota Chippewa from St. Paul, are accused in a 10-count indictment with theft, burglary, firearms violations and assault of a federal marshal. They are accused for their part in the 71-day occupation of Wounded Knee, S.D., beginning last Feb. 27.

Keel, who wears his black hair to his shoulders, told how he was called on for surveillance work with another man he identified as "Special Agent Stevenson."

The witness said the pair attended a meeting of AIM at the Mother Butler Center — a building owned by the Catholic Church — in Rapid City, S.D. Keel said they talked with various AIM members the night of Feb. 21 and the next day.

Among those he saw, added Keel, were Banks, Means and Clyde and Vernon Ballecourt. Keel went by the name of Richard Roundtree and Stevenson as Charlie Lightfoot, and showed identification such as drivers' licenses and social security cards, the witness said.

Amherst and Holyoke in report by privates

NEW YORK (AP) — A report calling for vastly expanded student loan programs to help students and their families meet the rising costs of private higher education was released yesterday by nine leading private colleges and universities, among them Amherst and Mt. Holyoke.

The report said access to the Federal Guaranteed Student Loan Program should be broadened and that institutions should be ready to help borrowers repay those student loans under certain circumstances.

"If we want to keep our doors open to other than the very rich, we must go more heavily to loans," Dartmouth College president John G. Kemeny said at a news conference.

Dartmouth, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard University, Amherst College, Brown University, Mount Holyoke, Princeton University, Wellesley College and Wesleyan University cooperated in the two-year study which produced the report. The study was funded by $310,000 from the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

The report pointed out that undergraduate loan demand at the nine institutions already was approaching $10 million annually and that the total outstanding undergraduate debt among the nine institutions could conceivably approach $200 million by the mid-1980s before stabilizing through repayment.

Changes in the existing Guaranteed Student Loan Program were recommended to make loans available to students from middle income families who now are ineligible because they cannot meet the "needs test" required by the 1972 educational amendments.

The report said few middle income families, which have to rely heavily on savings to meet educational costs, have made sufficient provisions to offset the rate of inflation in those costs.

It recommended restoration of adjusted family income as the basis of eligibility, but at a higher level than the $15,000 prior to 1972.

The report also said the loan program would be more effective if, where debt levels exceeded $4,000, lenders were permitted to make graduated repayment loans or longer term repayment plans to minimize repayment difficulties.

Ellsberg sees 'Gulag' link

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Daniel Ellsberg said yesterday he sees a similarity in his indictment in the Pentagon Papers case and the expulsion of novelist Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn from the Soviet Union.

In both instances, he said, governments were trying to block the release of information about their countries.

Speaking at Brown University, the former Defense Department analyst also criticized the U.S. government for what he said was a lack of moral concern over the exile of Solzhenitsyn. "That concern is nothing, no concern, negative concern," Ellsberg said.

The energy crisis

Mass. stations may strike

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The threat of a statewide shutdown of gasoline stations loomed in Massachusetts as dealers met in Framingham on yesterday to talk over their dissatisfaction with federal rules on how they may treat their customers.

"Most of these guys are pretty disgusted. They're all ready to lock up and go home," said Harold P. Murphy of Springfield, president of the Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association.

Murphy said other dealers were invited to a meeting of his organization at which the rules and a possible shutdown were expected to be the main topics of discussion.

The dealers are upset over a ruling by the Federal Energy Office that they cannot give their regular customers special treatment. Violators are subject to $5,000 fines.

The Bay State group joined two other Massachusetts dealers' associations yesterday in urging stations to lift all limits on sales as another form of protest.

Dealers have been putting limits on their sales so they won't run out of gasoline before the end of the month, when they get new allotments.

Meanwhile, Gov. Francis Sargent expressed disappointment over the energy office's announcement that it was sending investigators to Massachusetts and 18 other states to see how bad the gasoline shortage is.

State offlcals had hoped to receive word yesterday that Massachusetts would get an increased allocation.

"I couldn't guarantee to the people of this state that there will be enough gas to get through the end of the month," Sargent said.

"As each day goes by, it becomes more problematical that vigorous action will be taken by the federal government," he said.

Sargent added that he would meet with federal officials again this morning to "personally document the case that the Massachusetts motorist is being shortchanged."

Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., said he would also "ride herd" over the investigators while they are in Massachusetts to "ensure they get an accurate picture of just how bad the shortage has hit our state."

"Massachusetts is being hit much harder than other states by the gas shortage," Conte said, "because deliveries are based on 1972, when business was in a slump and gas consumption was low.

Under the federal allocation program, Massachusetts is getting 18 per cent less gas than it did in 1972. Withe the business recovery and growth since then, this shortage is at least 40 per cent."

The American Automobile Association said Massachusetts service stations are low on gas and worse off than they were at the first of the week. Areas particularly hard hit were Cape Cod, Worcester and Springfield.

The energy office team assigned to Massachusetts was scheduled to make its first step today at the State House to talk to Sargent. The team is comprised of two energy office officials from Washington and one from Boston.

Illegal deliveries probed

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The Berkshire County head of the Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association has called for a probe of possible "back door and black market" gas deliveries.

Ronald L. Brasslett of Pittsfield said some dealers have been approached by strangers offering to put them in touch with people who can arrange gas deliveries.

Two dealers who investigated found that they would have to contract for 400,000 gallons of gas at one time and would have to provide storage and place a $200,000 down payment, the Berkshire Eagle reported yesterday.

One dealer said the gas was apparently of foreign origin.

"A lot of independent stations that sell unbranded gasoline seem to be getting all the gasoline they want and are charging outrageous prices for it," Brasslet said.

FEO says more gas for truckers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Energy Office announced yesterday moves to direct more fuel immediately to the trucking industry and to crack down on propane price-gouging.

There were still no decisions on gasoline rationing or redistributions. FEO Deputy Administrator John C. Sawhill said the agency was sending teams into 20 states and the District of Columbia in an effort to verify gasoline supply data.

Only after that is done, said Sawhill, can the FEO decide how to shift supplies around to alleviate apparent imbalances among the states.

Sawhill told a news conference here:

—The FEO found that petroleum imports averaged some 4.9 million barrels a day last week, just about the level expected under the Arab oil embargo, but some 500,000 barrels a day higher than reported Wednesday by the American Petroleum Institute, an industry group.

—All major oil companies were directed to adjust diesel fuel and gasoline allocations to give the trucking industry all the fuel it needs.

"Where necessary, you are directed to make interim allocations in order to meet truckers' immediate needs," a telegram to the companies said.

—Sawhill said FEO investigations found "some illegal marketing and pricing practices" and some "atrocious situations" creating unnecessarily high prices for propane gas around the nation.

—He named no specific cases but said violators of federal regulations would be prosecuted.

"I think we will see a reduction in prices — that's what we want," he added.

—The FEO told refiners to increase jet fuel production six per cent and draw from stocks to supply airlines with their February fuel allocations.

—The FEO urged more states and local governments to take steps to solve long gasoline station waiting lines and other supply problems. It suggested minimum-purchase requirements and staggered hours of service to make sure gasoline is available throughout the day.

—Sawhill said the FEO also would propose legislation requiring mandatory reporting of information from all energy industries.

On two of the hottest issues, gasoline rationing and gasoline allocation, however, there were still no decisions.

FEO administrator William E. Simon had said a gasoline rationing decision could be made as early as mid-February.

But Sawhill told the news conference a gasoline rationing decision need not be made now, and that the question would remain under study.

It would depend, he said, on how rapidly gasoline production is increased, how well the public continues to conserve fuel and other unpredictable factors.

Meanwhile, the distribution of present gasoline supplies for February remained in doubt as the FEO tried to get its figures straight for the first month of mandatory allocation.

Last week, based on incomplete statistics, the FEO said some states appeared in line for much smaller proportions of the nation's gasoline supply than others, despite the allocation program's aim of nationwide equality.

Since then, "have-not" states have been pressing FEO to redistribute the supplies more evenly, while the "haves" braced themselves against the chance of excessive raiding of their own allocations.

Sawhill said Thursday the FEO has conflicting data and wants to make sure it has the right figures before it decides how to move gasoline from state to state, to alleviate the inequalities.

—United Air Lines announced it will reinstate 36 flights on March 2 which it discontinued early last month because of the fuel shortage

Beating the system

By MARK VOGLER

As more states establish their own lotteries for the sale of gasoline, shrewd citizens are devising their own ingenious methods for beating the system.

Here in Massachusetts where rationing went into effect Monday several sharpies found a way around the long lines and odd-even days. Gas station attendants have seemed to show benevolence on those motorists "whose cars suddenly ran out of gas." Just fill up the five gallon container and they are all set.

For those who don't have the time to resort to such chicanery, changing number plates has become a simple solution to getting gas on an off day. New Yorkers are doing it.

One stunt that caught an attendant off guard in New Jersey was when a motorist bluffed that he had run out of gas and just couldn't budge his car another inch. It was not his day to fill up.

The strict one-dollar allocation of gas on the New Jersey Turnpike — while annoying to most travelers — is a cinch to lick. There are 14 exits from the Goerge Washington Bridge to the Delaware Memorial Bridge — and there are about half as many service stations.

This reporter accompanied with a photographer and bound for Washington last week got on the pike with less than a half a tank of gas. We exited nearly filled to capacity — thanks to the multiple exits and u-turns.

Washington, D.C. also went to gas rationing on Monday. A motorist there said that a major weakness in the numbers game would be if a particular service station ran out of gas on any given day. Would it be fair to resume sales on the odd-even basis regardless of what day was denied gas? The motorist considered this a "convenient gimmick" to get around the system.

Conn. protest ends today

WATERBURY, Conn. (AP) — A strike by gasoline dealers to protest a federal ban on preferential customer treatment will end today, according to Gerald Vilela, president of the Waterbury Gasoline Retailers Association.

After meeting with Gov. Thomas J. Meskill in Hartford, Vilela said he was calling off the strike.

Police reported yesterday that only 16 of the 70 active stations in Waterbury were open and lines were 5-7 blocks long at the open pumps.

Meskill told a dozen dealers that he sympathized with them and that the state would not enforce the Federal Energy Office regulations. However, enforcement is assigned to the Internal Revenue Service.

Under an FEO ruling, stations are barred from giving preferential treatment to regular customers. Violation could mean a fine of $5,000.

"If somebody gets fined $5000 it'll put him out of business and if that happens, we'll close up every station in the state," said Vilela.

When the strike began Wednesday the statewide retailers association refused to go along, but dealers in other towns began discussing a protest shutdown.

Waterbury's energy coordinator, Edward Duval, said the stations were looking for "some support against what William Simon said. "They would like to treat their regular customers with a little more preference than the average guy off the street who never supported their station in the past."

In Washington, meanwhile, U.S. Rep, Robert H. Steele announced that Connecticut would receive about two million gallons of additional gasoline per month from FEO.

The Republican congressman said he hopes for final figures Monday. A scheduled FEO announcement yesterday was delayed until a study was made in other states, Steele said.

"Present indications are that there will be an increase of roughly two per cent or two million gallons of gasoline per month in Connecticut's allocation. This increased allocation would go into effect immediately," Steele said.

3 dealers sell gas in protest

BOSTON (AP) - Three retail gasoline dealers associations will ask their Massachusetts members to begin selling unlimited quantitites of gasoline to all customers, a spokesman for one of the associations said yesterday.

The spokesman said the action was a protest against federal rules that say dealers cannot give preferential treatment to their regular customers.

Addiction factor isolated

By LEIF ERICKSON
Associated Press Writer

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — The first isolation of the brain molecules involved in drug addiction was reported Thursday by a Stanford Medical Center research team working with mice.

"Eventually this discovery could have enormous importance in dealing with narcotics addiction," said Dr. Avram Goldstein, the team chief.

He said it also might allow development of a nonaddictive pain reliever.

The new isolated substance, extracted from mice brains, is called an opiate receptor. Receptors are special molecules into which drugs fit, like keys into a lock, explained Goldstein, a Stanford pharmacology professor.

"To understand addiction and possibly develop new ways to deal with it, the first thing you have to do is to find the receptors involved," he said.

The key for the Stanford-iso-lated opiate receptor is morphine, one of a chemical compound class derived from opium and its relatives.

The heroin taken by an addict is converted by the body into morphine, and morphine acts on nerve cells.

The report was published in the current issue of Science, the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. The research on mice brain tissue extended over several years and was financed by grants from the U.S. Public Health Service's National Institute on Drug Abuse and the Drug Abuse Council of Washington, D.C.

"In our work we studied mouse brain fragments and learned how to isolate and partially purify a receptor molecule that combines with a narcotic drug closely related to morphine," Goldstein said.

Asked if similar receptors exist in the human brain, Goldstein said:

"Very similar molecules are almost certainly involved in human narcotic addiction... Many of the effects of heroin and morphine are almost identical in mice, rats and other mammals, including man."

Goldstein said researchers at New York University and Johns Hopkins University had reported observing opiate receptors in human brain membranes obtained at autopsy. No attempt was made to extract and purify the human brain receptors, Goldstein said.

7 of 10 Yalies have smoked grass

NEW HAVEN (AP) — About 7 out of every 10 Yale University undergraduates have at least tried marijuana, about double the number seven years ago, according to a poll.

In addition more than one of every 10 students has earned money selling illegal drugs, the Yale Daily News reported in this week's news magazine.

The figures came from questionnaires distributed during the week of Feb. 4 in dining rooms of Yale's residential colleges, the newspaper stated. A total of 836 students responded.

Seventy-one per cent of the students answering the questionnaire said they at least tried marijuana compared with 35 per cent in 1967.

Small town looks back to rediscover values

By DAVID HIMMELSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

..UNITY, Maine (AP) — Residents of this small Maine community and surrounding towns are about to embark on a year-long project to discover and record their own history and culture.

"We hope that one result of our work will be a rediscovery of values implicit in community life. And we hope to achieve this through real cooperation among students, teachers and all interested town citizens," says David Day, special projects coordinator for Maine School Administrative District No. 3.

The National Humanities Faculty in Concord, Mass., the district selected as one of six national sites for original programs related to teaching humanities.

Each of the six project schools receives the equivalent of $9,000 in the form of 20 visits through the academic year by specially chosen instructors from across the nation.

"When we were told we had won the grant, the first thing we did was to call a public meeting to ask what particular area we should study." Day said. "The overwhelming sentiment of the twonspeople was we should have united effort to preserve our folklore."

A large part of the preservation will be done electronically.

Teams of interviewers will question elderly area residents on a variety of topics aimed at documenting the culture of the rural Maine town. Their stories, songs, instruction and art will be preserved on tape and subsequently compiled and edited.

Pat Rogers and two of his high school students from Raban Gap, Ga., were the first visiting faculty for the program.

Several years ago, Rogers helped start the "Foxfire Project" in his native Georgia - one of the first grassroots efforts to seek out and study local folklore.

Starting Wednesday, he and his students began three days of meetings with citizens and volunteers at community suppers, school assemblies and teacher workshops.

Bankbook shortage

BOSTON (AP) — And now the bankbook shortage.

A customer of the Newton Savings Bank walked into the Chestnut Hill branch this week and asked for a new bankbook; the old book was filled up.

"You can't have one," the teller said.

The branch bank manager Jean Colligan, said Thursday that the bank has been without new, unnumbered books for a few days.

"Apparently the paper shortage is doing this," she said. "They tell us we'll be getting more books next week.

In the meantime, the branch bank is recording deposits on small paper forms.

Charles Coyne, the Newton Savings Bank Comptroller, denied that theirs is a major problem. He said the employe who orders supplies missed an order some weeks ago and the bank has been short of books ever since.

DeSalvo estate small

BOSTON (AP) — The bulk of the estate left by the self-confessed Boston Strangler, Albert DeSalvo, after his murder at Walpole state prison last December is $32,000 in royalties from the book based on his story.

P.J. Piscitelli, DeSalvo's attorney, said most of that money will be gone after burial and legal fees have been paid.

DeSalvo, never charged in connection with the strangulation deaths of a dozen Boston area women during the 1960's, was serving a sentence at Walpole for assault.

Three prison inmates have been charged with conspiracy to murder DeSalvo, who was stabbed to death as he lay sleeping in his prison infirmary cell.

Accused slayers plead innocent

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Four Springfield residents pleaded innocent in District Court here today to murder charges in the January beating death of retired Enfield, Conn., School Supt. Karl D. Lee.

The four-Kenneth E. Barnes, 24, Donna Marie Webster, 20, Debra Ann Waters, 18, and Iris R. Grice, 18 - were arrested by Springfield police Wednesday and charged in the death.

They were held without bail at Hampden County Jail pending a Feb. 22 court appearance.

A fifth suspect in the case was released on personal recognizance today.

Richard C. Brown, 18, of Springfield was arrested Saturday and charged with murder and assault and robbery in the Jan. 27 slaying. Charges against Brown were continued to March 15. He had been held without bail since his arrest.

Crime declines

SPRINGFIELD Mass (AP) — Serious crime declined by approximately 8 per cent here during 1973, according to statistics released by the police department.

The overall decrease of 1,089 serious crimes was primarily due to decreases of about 600 each in reported larcenies and car thefts. Declines also were noted in burglaries, police said.

Murder, rape, robbery and assault showed increases, according to the department figures.

The statistics are being submitted to the Federal Bureau of Invesitgation for inclusion in the FBI's annual uniform crime report.

Another call to resign

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) — President Nixon "would be doing a great service to the country if he resigned," Sen. William D. Hathaway, D-Maine, said Thursday.

"Rightly or wrongly, whether all the charges against the President are true or all the charges against him are false," Nixon should resign because of "the low ebb of popularity he has throughout the country and the low ebb of popularity..and confidence he has by members of both parties in the House and Senate," Hathaway said.

The state's freshman senator made the statement in a recorded interview with Radio Station WBLM. The program is scheduled to be aired on Sunday.

Hathaway said Republican members of the Senate "just don't have faith" in Nixon.

"Times are tough"

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Educational institutions are faced with increasing demands for solutions to society's problems combined with justification for the use of public money, Harvard University President Derek C. Bok said in his annual report.

Bok said Harvard lost $2 million in federal and private aid to graduate students last year, and the graduate student dropout rate climbed to 40 or 50 per cent.

Bok said his report — formally to be issued Friday — was designed to "raise issues and stimulate an academic debate" rather than summarize the past year.

He said doctoral programs, in comparison to professional programs, are "highly unstructured" and that in many departments students are not always sure of what is required of them.

Federal teams begin checking N.E. gas shortage

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Teams of investigators are scheduled to move into four New England states this morning to find out if the gasoline shortage is worse than in the rest of the country.

Massachusetts, Vermont, Rhode Island and New Hampshire are among 19 states where investigators from the Federal Energy Office will check gasoline statistics to determine if the areas deserve more fuel than they are now getting.

Figures now compiled by the energy office show that even though lines may be longer in New England, the region is getting about as much gas as other places.

"We'll double check and cross check our figures to make sure they are accurate, and as soon as that's done, if we find a great discrepancy, something can be done," said Hugh Saussy, regional director of th energy office at a news conference yesterday.

Gov. Francis Sargent of Massachusetts said he was pessimistic about getting any federal action and added "I couldn't guarantee to the people of this state there will be enough gas to get through the end of the month."

Meanwhile, angry service station owners threatened to begin pumping gasoline to all customers without setting limits on maximum sales. That way, they would use up their monthly allocations before March 1, when they get new supplies.

The action was a protest against federal rules that prohibit dealers from giving special treatment to their regular customers. Three dealers' associations in Massachusetts said yesterday that they would ask their members to go along with the protest.

In Waterbury, Conn., where some dealers said they were closed in protest, a police check showed that only 16 of 70 stations were open. Lines of waiting cars were up to 70 cars long.

Members of the Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association said they would meet in Framingham, Mass., on Thursday night to consider their own shutdown.

When the energy office investigators begin their study in Massachusetts, Rep. Sylvio R. Conte, R-Mass., said he will "ride herd" over them.

Conte said he wanted to "ensure they get an accurate picture of just how bad the shortage has hit our state. Massachusetts is being hit much harder than other states by the gas shortage, because deliveries are based on 1972, when business was in a slump and gas consumption was low.

"Under the federal allocation program, Massachusetts is getting 18 per cent less gas than it did in 1972. With the business recovery and growth since then, this shortage is at least 40 per cent."

Maine is the only New England state that was on a list of 12 states scheduled to get increased allocations.

State tax man blasts computerized records

By DAVID HERN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - State Tax Commissioner Nicholas L. Metaxas says a proposed central computer system could threaten the traditional secrecy of income tax returns.

"One thing Watergate has shown us is that income tax data must be kept separate," Metaxas said.

Metaxas is opposing a plan being developed by the state Planning and Management Department which would put tax data into the same computer with information from other state agencies.

"I am not satisfied you can have a foolproof system when you have several people with access to computer terminals," he said.

"You should keep your tax department and tax information as sacresanct as possible and as free from political influence as possible. This what we are trying to do."

Metaxas said he feared that an outsider familiar with the computer codes could extract any information stored in the computer. He said he wants an independent review which he is sure would back his position.

Experts who favor the consolidation idea reached their decisions before closely studying the situation, he said.

Thomas O'Brien, director of planning and management, said the objective is to encourage economies in computer operations.

The plan for adding the tax department to the computer system with other state agencies is a year or two away. It would come after the computer is installed in the John W. McCormack Office Building that is nearing completion.

"Although the computer would be in the McCormack Building," O'Brien said, "the control of the equipment would remain in the department." He said this would satisfy the departmental demands. The agency would have access at all times and other departments could use it only when it is idle, he said.

"We probably will bid dual control processing units," O'Brien said. "The tax department wouldn't have to wait in line at all."

55.93-79.83 a week?

By ANDREW GLACE

The English Miners' strike bears close examination as it draws important lessons both for unionists and the population at large. This strike is not an isolated event, as some would have us believe, but rather is the result of an economic situation that has been festering for thirty years. Two questions that should be answered are: 1) what are the origins of the present crisis and, 2) what are the responsibilities of the working people in times of crisis.

Not long ago England was the most powerful nation in the world. Her colonial possessions lay in every hemisphere and she was able to exploit their resources as well as tap a large supply of cheap labor. Her capitalists owned the mines and plantations, the ships in which her goods were transported, and the factories where these raw materials were manufactured. She also controlled the prices and distribution on an international scale. There was a trade surplus then, not the record $5.1 billion deficit of today.

However, in the first half of this century two disasters struck in the form of world war from which she never recovered. The first virtually obliterated her youth. The second war, waged around the slogan of freedom from tyranny, resulted in almost total loss of her colonies and a consequent loss of her pre-eminent position in the world marketplace.

In the age of Imperialism and multi-national corporations the English economy ceased to compete efficiently as America, Japan, and Germany consistently out-manufactured and out-sold her products in every sphere. England became a third-rate power dependent on outside technology and investment merely to keep her head above water. But this was not enough. They were forced to resort to a tactic with which we in America have had some experience, wage-price control. If they couldn't have cheap labor overseas, then they would have to exploit their own workers more heavily. Simultaneously, they had to raise prices to ensure a "reasonable" profit margin. The reasoning here is that if you freeze wages and raise prices, then you can compete more favorably with cheap labor countries like Japan and Taiwan; notwithstanding a devaluation of the pound sterling. The fly in their ointment was the militant tradition of the English trade unions.

A few statistics are necessary to understand the demands of the miners, as well as the rail and electrical workers who are also striking. Last year inflation rose at a rate of 10.8 per cent; food alone went up 18 per cent, and mortgages rose to 11 per cent. On the other hand we find that the English miners are the worst-paid in Europe. They earn between $55.63 to $79.83 per week and are demanding raises of $17.60 and $28.60 respectively. This flies in the face of Heath's limit of 7 per cent for any wage increases. Obviously, a 7 per cent raise will hardly keep pace with 10 per cent inflation. And in fact, since the poor suffer most from inflation, adherence to this limit would leave workers far behind. Their just demands are in direct opposition to the stated goals of the English capitalist economy and furthermore strike not at any single employer but at the government and the whole class it represents.

The success of the strike is dependent on militant unionism and the character of its leadership. When Mr. Heath mounted his campaign around "Who governs England?" and a "Red under every bed" he addressed the real question for English society. To paraphrase Jefferson, when a ruling class is unable to solve national economic problems in the interests of its people, it is the duty of the people to take control of the reins of power. The large number of socialists in the unions have been able to pose this question with the enthusiastic backing of their fellow laborers (81 per cent of the miners). Unlike their toady American counterparts Meany and Fitzsimmons, their interests lay with the workers rather than the status quo.

The key to success of the Miners' strike is their uncompromising program for change. Socialists support this strike because it is in the interest of the working class. More importantly, we say that when capitalism can't satisfy the needs of the people they must make a Socialist Revolution.

Police need support

Many years ago in Greece a wise man named Solon said something that is profound and very relevant these days. His statement "Without law there can be no freedom" has quite a meaning. There's no doubt that everyone wants freedom. But in order to have it several criteria must exist. First, there must be as little government power as possible. Second, and most important, we must all accept (of our own free will) certain restraints. Basically that's it.

In his book The Law, French economist Frederic Bastiat said that the restraints which we must impose on ourselves are to honor the right to life and property (as in laissez-faire capitalism) and to allow each individual the right to lead his life and guide his family the way he wishes, not the way a government wants him to.

Human nature, being what it is, shows that there are those who will not impose upon themselves these restraints. Therefore, any government must impose upon its people laws to protect all citizens from those who do not honor these basic human rights. These laws are the ones against murder, arson, robbery, rape, etc. A system must function which is able to enforce these laws. We have such a system. It consists of the various police departments in towns all over the country.

Our founding fathers knew that a delicate balance must exist so that the police cannot turn a country into a fascist, Nazi or Communist state. Therefore, they limited the power of the federal government and put control of the police in local areas and forbade the Federal Government from controlling these local police. In Federalist Paper No. 45, James Madison carefully explained this stating, in part, "The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite..." Madison went on to explain what this means stating that the federal government has power only in areas of war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce and the states have power extending over affairs concerning the lives, liberties, properties of citizens as well as internal order, improvement and prosperity of the state.

Any dictator can honestly tell you that in order for him to have control of a country, he must control the police, meaning that a national police force must exist. Our founding fathers knew that and it is why they forbade the federal government from taking control of the police.

You and I both know that the United States is headed for a dictatorship, even though we may disagree on hows and means. Let us forget these differences and concentrate on police.

Since the days of the Warren Court, policemen have been harrassed by the courts and the federal government and their already difficult job. Supreme Courts, who make the Constitution read what they want instead of what it does read; and too much concern about criminal rights instead of victim rights have been responsible for the soaring crime wave that gets worse each day. That's one problem.

Another problem is the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. Created by the Federal Government in 1965, it now doles out $3.2 billion dollars per year for grants to local and state police who agree to comply with various edicts and guidelines laid down by the Attorney General of the United States and enforced by the LEAA. The guidelines we will deal with concern training policemen. Former FBI Agent Dan Smoot has stated, "The kind of indoctrination imparted by departments of sociology (which is what the guidelines state) in many universities will unsuit, rather than improve, a man for effective police work. The thin blue line of police officers who correctly look upon themselves as defenders of society — and who presently constitute the only real defense of our civilization against barbarism and anarchy — will gradually vanish. Law enforcement leadership will begin to reflect the permissive attitude generally prevalent in the federal courts and the federal bureaucracy: the attitude that 'society' and not the criminal is responsible for crime — that it is not society but the criminal who needs protection." Such attitudes have turned truckloads of hardened criminals loose on society and this has increased the crime wave. I say that we should make sure the criminal has a fair trial but that the rights of the victim are also honored.

This LEAA also, and more importantly, seeking to regionalize the police forces of our nation under their control. To do this, they have the Ford Foundation, headed by McGeorge Bundy, to help. The details of what they are doing are illustrated in Gary R. Handy's article "support Your Local Police" which appeared in the July 27, 1973 edition of The Review of the News.

We must not let the government have a national police force. A synonym for this is GESTAPO! Write your Congressman and tell him to make the LEAA stop what they are doing and to SUPPORT LOCAL POLICE AND KEEP THEM INDEPENDENT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. The police need our support, not hardened criminals.

Fizzleheads

Will Franklin Seltzer relieve Benjamin Blaine?

Benjamin Blaine is a born loser.

A born loser is someone who walks in on his roommate and his roommate's girlfriend at an inappropriate moment and, still not realizing what he has done, proceeds to turn on the lights.

A born loser is someone who dresses for and races to his 8 a.m. class, after partying until 3 a.m. the night before, only to discover it's Sunday.

For his birthday, a born loser receives a book with missing pages, scratched records, and pants with defective zippers, and then loses them before he has a chance to exchange them.

Such a man was Benjamin Blaine.

Last semester, Benjamin Blaine pulled an all-nighter to help his roommate study for an exam. Benjamin Blaine even let his roommate cheat off of him while they were taking the exam. Benjamin Blaine's roommate got an A on the exam; Benjamin Blaine flunked the exam.

"That's too bad," Benjamin Blaine's roommate said consolingly. "Maybe you should go to talk to the fizzlehead."

The fizzlehead was Franklin Seltzer. Franklin Seltzer was the TA of the course in which Benjamin Blaine and Benjamin Blaine's roommate were enrolled. Benjamin Blaine went to talk to Franklin Seltzer.

"I don't understand..." began Benjamin Blaine.

"Eet's very seemple, no?" explained Franklin Seltzer. "You no geeve me exam, I can no geeve you grade. Only F."

"But...but...but..." protested Benjamin Blaine.

"No buts. Only F."

"But I gave you my exam," argued Benjamin Blaine. "You must have lost it or something."

"Looose eet?" frowned Franklin Seltzer. "Eeempossible!"

Franklin Seltzer condescendingly leafed through the exams while Benjamin Blaine watched over his shoulder.

"There it is!" exclaimed Benjamin Blaine. "There's my exam, and it has an A marked on it!!"

"But there ees no name on thees exam, no?" pointed out Franklin Seltzer.

Indeed, there was no name on the exam. In a moment of confusion, Benjamin Blaine had forgotten to write "Benjamin Blaine" on the line which said "NAME". Instead, he had written this: 5129005.

5129005 is a number which means "Benjamin Blaine" in the language of the school at which Benjamin Blaine and his roomate were students and Franklin Seltzer was teaching assistant. It is not a telephone number or an address; nor is it a social security number or a license plate number. Rather, it is a student identification number.

Benjamin Blaine's roommate also has a number, but Benjamin Blaine does not know what that number is. Neither does his roommate.

"I no haf exam from Benjamin Blaine," said Franklin Seltzer for what seemed to be the fiftieth time.

"But you have an exam from 5129005," insisted Benjamin Blaine, "and I'M 5129005. So now you can give me that A."

"I am sorry," shrugged Franklin Seltzer. "There ees nothing I can do."

"But you don't understand," pleaded Benjamin Blaine, trying to be patient with the fizzlehead. "You have an exam from 5129005, and 5129005 is Benjamin Blaine, and Benjamin Blaine is ME!!! Therefore, I should get an A on that goddamn exam!!"

By this time, Benjamin Blaine was gritting his teeth. My father will never believe this, he thought to himself. Surely, he never had to put up with this bullshit when he was in college.

"Listen," said Benjamin Blaine as he fumbled for his wallet. "I'll show you my student ID. You can even see my driver's license..."

"What do you theeenk I am?" snorted Franklin Seltzer. "A bouncer at the Bluewall?"

And so Benjamin Blaine was forced to take an F on an exam when in fact he deserved an A.

When Benjamin Blaine told me his sad tale last week, I could easily sympathize with him.

"It doesn't make any sense," I said. "But I'm sure there are Franklin Seltzers all over campus."

"I know, I know," he replied. "That's the sad part about it. I guess the trick is to avoid them."

"By the way, what course was this anyway?" I asked.

"Philosophy 125," he answered. "Introduction to Logic."

Dick digs in

Starting with cross-filing...

By RAYMOND K. TIE

While I'm not exactly sure where Dick Nixon got the name Tricky, I am sure that he has spent a lifetime living up to it. From the beginning of his political career, Richard Nixon has carried the sour smell of pork.

Starting with cross-filing in the forties (a system whereby the candidate registers in both parties and doubles his mailing public), to the McCarthy era, to the Vice-Presidency, back to California, out of politics, and back into the White House, there has always been a little tarnish on the Nixon name. In order to maintain his popularity (which has been similar to the action of a piston), he learned to speak eloquently, with seeming purpose, while simultaniously saying nothing.

To anyone even slightly aware of American politics, this attitude is not unusual. To some degree it is a prerequisite because of the interrelated and plural nature of our political system. Probably most politicians have been accused of this at one time or another. However, few men have achieved the record or political shenanigans accorded to Richard Nixon.

At present, Nixon is perpetrating one of the most magnanimous lies known to man. It is so extensive as to cover the last five years, the present, and even pervades the future. An explicit laying open of the lie is not necessary, as most are aware of it, but how many of us realize it is rumbling again?

In his State of the Union message, his annual economic message, and his budget, the president indicated a desire to make life in America more dignified and equitable. He proposes increased attempts at world peace, including more intense research and facilitation of atomic energy for defense purposes. He asks for new social programs, including his own version of a national health program and increased payments to the elderly, disabled and unfortunate. He labels as primary, his concern over the energy crisis and its many manifestations. He is ready to launch the full economic power of the government into the war against unemployment and inflation.

It seems evident that his real concern in these matters is at best superficial and at least egocentric and ignominious. His performance in the last five years proves only disconcern, blindness, and stubbornness. He hides behind foreign affairs and refuses to lend credence to attempts from any corner to stabilize domestic issues. Suddenly, all the lost concern, all the regard for America's citizenry, all the importance of affairs within our borders is back. Like the early dawn, it has quickly flashed upon the scene.

To what do we owe this change of policy? Is it his conscience? No, probably not. Has he had a vision? Again, no. Is it awareness of the House Judiciary Committee's imminent impeachment hearings? Yes, it probably is.

to refusing to honor subpoena

Representative Rodino, the chairman of the committee, has already told the President that he expects the committee to send to the Senate a request for an impeachment trial and in his traditional style the President has vowed to fight even if it means refusing to honor the wide ranging subpeona power recently granted the House.

The lie has become a blaring concern for America. It is not for America that he is concerned, but for Richard Nixon. He wants us to be duped, to mollify us, to make us forget all the lies, the law breaking, and the conflict-of-interest implications that he has accrued in the past.

Yet this is not the extent of the gall of this man. He spoke also of taxation, and said there will be no tax increase. (There probably is no more effective tool for any politician to regain his credibility.) However, will disallowing a rate increase really mean no real increase? No, because inflation will drive incomes up, but not in proportion to inflation, thus putting people in higher tax brackets. This means they will pay more taxes and probably end up with less real income.

Also, how about Nixon's personal record in the field of taxes, or more precisely, tax evasion? Briefly, he tried to donate his personal papers to the government archives and claim the gift as a tax deduction. One of his lawyers falsified the necessary papers to prove that the gift was made prior to the effective date of a law forbidding that deduction. Fortunately, the Watergate investigations uncovered this story, and he is now facing the possibility of having to reimburse the country.

But the point is, should we believe a man who pledges no tax increase, knowing that it is untrue, who, behind our backs, is committing fraud, and thinks nothing of deliberately disobeying the law?

to deliberately disobeying the law...

Nixon's proposed changes are so out of line with his past that we cannot believe his concern is motivated by anything else than his own political well-being. Don't be fooled, don't be lulled, look at the facts. They show the real Richard Nixon.

ICS approves bar's Irish night

To The Editor:

We, the members of The Irish Cultural Society of the 16th floor of John Adams wish to commend The Chequers on an excellent "Irish Night" on Tuesday, Feb. 12. Our esteemed club especially enjoyed the music and jokes of the "authentic" Irish duo, the Beggarmen. We put our stamp of approval on "Irish Night" and if future "Irish Nights" are consistent with the excellence shown Tuesday, we would not hesitate to recommend these affairs to anyone looking for a good time.

Sincerely yours,
The Irish Cultural Society

Louise Day Hicks: go to your room

To The Editor:
In reply to Miss Maureen Mitchell:

I was distressed to find that you took so unkindly the spirit of the letter of Mr. Wally Clark. (MDC-Feb. 11) I am, as yourself, of solidly Irish extraction, and possess the pride in my heritage to an equal measure with yourself. As one of the signatories of Mr. Clark's letter, I must admit that when I was first asked to sign, I had misgivings of much the same nature as those you expressed in your letter.

However, it seemed to me that, in these trying times in which we live, it was heartening to see a group of people who were willing to poke fun at themselves; surely a better jest than many a wordy ethnic joke against those who are not of the same extraction. The ability to laugh at oneself is one to be prized highly, for it ensures a continual cheer at the expense of nobody save yourself.

I am quite aware of the difficulties in Ireland today, as I am aware of its past history. I did not sign Mr. Clark's letter out of the desire to belittle the efforts of the Third World, in combatting "institutional rascism"; but out of a desire to instill a modicum of humor in the all-too-unsmiling ranks of the Third World. Ethnic barbs aimed at others can be vicious; aimed at ourselves, by ourselves, they should only serve to bring out a sense of humor that is often a welcome relief.

As for Louise Day Hicks, go to your room, madam, I have no need of you.

Hi the diddley!

To The Editor:

My Irish American allies and I have been observing in the Collegian a number of letters concerning our brothers. The Irish are a proud and outgoing people, and I am glad to see them exhibiting their feelings; as for Maureen Mitchell in Wednesday's Collegian ..She was distressed at the satirical proposals revealed to the great unwashed masses by Wally Clark et al. Well, I am distressed with her distress. Those proposals were not racist against any community, but rather, they serve to bring to light some of the failings in this Yankee, W.A.S.P. university.

Where are the courses in Irish history, literature, etc. that can accomodate the number of people that courses for other nationalities (such as the Afro-Americans, Armenians, and Danish) do? Where is there a Gaelic course taught? There is not one in any of the five colleges in this area that the average interested student can take. These are not tidbits of terrestrial trivia, no indeed not; nor are they representative of Irish blarney. They are facts.

My pride in the Old Sod will grow as long as the shamrock sprouts from the earth. I hope this revelation renders the kiss-ass sentiments of Maureen Mitchell harmless. That is not to say she may not be a fair lass, and that is not to say that she or her allies are my enemies, no, nay, never, for we Irish have few enemies, "only many friends we have not met yet." Hi the diddley.

A serious lack of decency

To The Editor:
The Family in Social Context.

Last Monday a very unfortunate and disillusioning incident was imposed on me. I went in to the University Store to buy shoelaces, and as is required, deposited my books in the book drop. When I came out, my books were no longer there. One book belonged to my professor, and the other was a text for Soc. 257 which was jointly owned by myself and my suitemate. I tried to locate the books, but could not. In desperation, I was prepared to shell out another $15.00 for a new soc. book. However, it was not available at the bookstore, and hasn't been reordered. As a result, I am left without a book and will have to reread and highlight the 150 pages I had already read—if I can find a book.

To rip off something from another student which was valuable to them monetarily and even more so because of the work and time they had put into it, must require a serious lack of decency. I hate to think other students are capable of such low acts, but what choice am I left with?

To the new proud owner of The Family in Social Context, thanks a hell of a lot! If your conscience begins to bother you, you could always return it—no questions asked.

VD: no clapping matter

The rising incidence of venereal disease has been the focus of concern for many health professionals. VD affects University of Massachusetts students as well as any other part of the population. If it could affect Christopher Columbus, Henry VIII, Ben Franklin and Florence Nightingale - it could affect you.

The two most common venereal diseases are syphilis and gonorrhea. Both are usually contracted through sexual intercourse. The highest incidence of venereal disease occurs in young people between the ages of 15-24 years.

Gonorrhea is the most common. In males, the early symptoms are usually painful urination and a pus-like discharge from the penis. The signs usually appear 2-5 days after contact with an infected person. However, in some men symptoms may take as long as three weeks to appear, or they may not appear at all.

A woman may or may not have symptoms. Those having symptoms may experience a burning sensation when urinating, or an increased vaginal discharge. 80 per cent of women with gonorrhea do not have symptoms and remain an infectious reservoir. Meanwhile, her own infection may develop into serious complications.

If gonorrhea is not adequately treated, complications can develop -- sterility and serious pelvic disorders, and less commonly arthritis and heart problems.

The primary sign of syphilis infection is usually a painless sore called a chancre. This will appear at the point of entry of the syphilis germ, 10-90 days after contact. In the male it usually appears on the head of the penis, but in the female it usually develops internally on the cervix or vaginal walls and goes unnoticed. Remember, a chancre might might not appear at all.

If the disease is not cured at this point, the chancre will disappear without medical treatment in 1-5 weeks and the disease will progress to its secondary stage. This stage can include skin rashes, baldness, sore throat, fever and headaches. Even these symptoms will disappear without treatment, but the disease is not cured. It enters a latent and more dangerous stage when it affects the internal organs of the body. Untreated syphilis can affect every system in the body and even cause insanity and death.

Both syphilis and gonorrhea can usually be cured at any stage of the disease. Treatment in the later stages will stop the progress of the disease but cannot reverse the damage already done. They must be treated by a physician. You cannot cure yourself. Injected penicillin is the drug of choice. Other antibiotics can be substituted if you are allergic to penicillin.

Confidential diagnosis and treatment can be obtained at the College Health Service. Call 549-2600 for an appointment if you suspect that you might have been exposed to venereal disease. Questions and concerns can be answered confidentially by calling the Public Health Nurse at the Health Center, 549-2671.

Aiken to retire at 81
Vermont loses senior senator

By PATTI LEE
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — After 34 years in the Senate, George Aiken announced yesterday he would retire to his rural Vermont homestead, promising he intended to carry on his work for the state as usual through January.

For Vermonters, the announcement was a strong blow; they would lose the seniority of the 81-year-old Republican senator, as well as his personal influence, which had helped to bring special programs and federal dollars to the Green Mountain State through the years, particularly to the state's farmers.

Politicians of both parties praised his service to the state and the nation, but recognized the announcement left them with a confused political puzzle to be fit together as the election year progressed.

Aiken's place as Senior Republican member of the Senate Foreign Relations and Agriculture Committees, as well as the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, gave him a power he did not hesitate to use if it would benefit Vermont and what he called "the folks back home."

Aiken held a position of importance as a trusted advisor to both Republican and Democratic administrations over the year.

It was Aiken's aura of credibility that Vermont Democratic Gov. Thomas Salmon said would be sorely missed.

"His departure from the national and international scene comes at a time when this country cries out for trust and credibility," Salmon said.

His retirement would mean loss of the leverage Vermont held in his seniority, and Republican House Speaker Walter L. Kennedy, for one, was not happy at the prospects.

He said it would relegate Vermont to the "lower depths of hell" in the Senate.

Politicians of both parties had words of praise and gratitude for Aiken.

Vermont's junior Sen. Robert Stafford, listed Aiken's attributes as combinations of "greatness with humility, wisdom with simplicity and gentleness with strength."

Stafford was one of the few high-ranking politicians whose political ambitions were not touched by the announcement that a seat in the U.S. Senate would be available.

Democrats signalled their determination to make a strong race for the office months ago, when state Democratic Committee Chairman Philip Hoff, a former governor, announced that Aiken's age would become a major campaign issue if the senator decided to seek another term in office.

The two Democrats who have indicated an interest in the office have been Chittenden County State's Atty. Patrick Leahy and John Downs, a St. Johnsbury attorney. Leahy said Wednesday he felt Aiken's decision was a wise one because "it is time to give Vermonters a chance to be represented by younger people."

Downs said he would withhold a decision on running for the office until a firm statement had been made by Salmon. Salmon, who has consistently indicated he would seek another term as governor, was mentioned prominently as a possible candidate for the Senate seat.

On the Republican side, former Gov. Deane C. Davis said he was not ruling out a possible bid for the Senate. However. the name most often mentioned as the likely Republican candidate for the post was Mallary.

Notes, quotes, and anecdotes

Career planning

There's a new program on campus for students uncertain about their occupational plans.

It is offered until March 22. Any student can come in between these dates to the Student Development and Career Planning Center and begin the project. Students may work at their own pace and in their own free time. It usually takes 2-4 hours to complete the project.

The Center is located in Berkshire House. Interested persons should contact Sharon Zanowiak in room 212 from 9-5 on weekdays.

Hamp volunteers

Northampton Volunteers is a flexible group that visits patients at Northampton State Hospital. They offer unlimited options.

Ideas are welcomed.

Buses leave every Thursday for Hasbrouck at 6:30 p.m., stops at Paterson House, Southwest at 6:35, and returns at 9:30.

Scarface Sun.

SCARFACE, Howard Hawks' long unseen 1932 gangster film will screen in the Student Union Ballroom, Sunday at 7:30 and 9:30. SCARFACE is a rare classic film seldom shown in public showings because the Howard Hughes interests control the copyrights.

Presented by the Amherst Film Cooperative with assistance by the Arst Extension of the Continuing Education Division, the showing will be open to the public for a $1.00 admission. Tickets are available only at the door.

Help for the handicapped

The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs has compiled a list of potential readers for blind and visually disabled students and members of the five college community. Persons interested in gaining access to this list should contact the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs, 229-D Whitmore or call 545-0892.

Hatha-yoga

Do students of all ages learn better if their muscles are involved? For example, would a study of Hindu philosophy "sink in" more deeply if combined with practice of Hatha-yoga (physical yoga)? Questions of this nature will be discussed at a workshop-symposium on "BODY-DISCIPLINES IN ACADEMIA" Monday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Pierpont Main Lounge.

The workshop is sponsored by the Center for Integration of Academic & Meditative Disciplines, based in Pierpont 119.

Intern program tries for varied learning

Coordinators: Dr. Theodore Slovin, Allen Greenbaum

An alternative program, the Internship, is based on the belief that education is more than content learning. The program endeavors to combine both content and experiential learning, which will focus on the development of personal and interpersonal competencies within the Interns and their peers. The Interns, whose major fields vary widely, are chosen from quite a number of applicants the spring before the program commences. The two semester program is worth 12 psychology credits per semester to each Intern. (These credits are listed as independent study and independent readings credits.)

The focal point of this program is the freshman class. It is hoped that the program will increase their self-awareness and self-direction, thus enhancing the possibility that they will, through their own initiative, seek out alternatives and achieve a more rapid adjustment to the University environment.

A second goal of this program is to offer a group of Upperclassmen (the Interns) a means by which to improve and develop their interpersonal competencies.

Anyone interested in becoming an intern for the 1974-75 school year can get further information and-or an application at the Student Development and Career Planning Center, 2nd Floor, Berkshire House. Deadline for applications is Tuesday, February 19th.

Learn, not earn at MDC "class"

Have you ever stopped to think about how the print came to be on these pages you are now reading? How does the Colleigan "Magically" appear on campus each day?

To answer these important questions or gain an inside view of the dynamics of newspaper production (specifically the Collegian) an informal course is being formed.

In this class various production methods, involving mechanics or often artistic points will be discussed and demonstrated. Pages of the Collegian may be composed in class. Most definitely a trip to the printer will be in order.

Time: at 7:00 to 8:00 p.m. Tuesday, February 19, and thereafter on Monday evenings.

For more information please stop by at the Collegian offices second floor Student Union and see Bill Densmore, Managing Editor.

"China Night" has everything

China Night, an annual event sponsored by the Chinese Student Association, is back again this year on Sunday, Feb. 24. The enthusiastic response to last year's event has encouraged the Chinese community on campus to put in a greater effort to this tiger year's China Night, which will introduce Chinese culture to the audience through shows on stage and a delicious Chinese dinner.

The evening will start with a dinner prepared by Kalihi Kai, followed by entertainment featuring fashion show; Kung Fu; Chinese music; dances and plaxs.

A professional group from New York will display Chinese fashions dated back to two-thousand years as well as the latest fashions. If one is interested in Chinese martial arts, he should not miss the Kung Fu demonstration. Several styles of Kung Fu including Tai Chi; Shao Lin; Wing Chun; Choy Lee Fat and the Praying Mantis style will be demonstrated. The traditional Chinese music and dances will no doubt fascinate the audience in that evening.

Starting noontime on the same day, a free exhibition of Chinese arts and crafts will be held on the lower level of Campus Center.

Tickets for the Night are available at the Herter and S.U. Box Offices and C.C. concourse where slides of China will also be shown at noon. Since an early sell out is expected.

Pisces persons often see through sham while others are taking the bait. Pisces can become involved in labyrinth affairs but usually knows how the "story" will end. This native seems capable of getting behind the scenes, of creating a scenario and of "playing" every role in the drama. Pisces is subtle in a practical way and maintains an aura of poetic mystery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Check communications. False claim could be featured. Be versatile--investigate various sources. You could come up with procedure which saves time, money. Don't trust secondhand reports. Someone may be playing "double agent."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): If thorough, you uncover money dilemma--and have means of solving it. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio could figure prominently. What appears a minor detail might be key to unlocking a mystery. Know it and persist.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Legal loophole could be featured. What appears a binding agreement could actually be a piece of paper. Lie low--wait and observe. Partner, mate is insistent but likely to be misinformed. Be patient. Win through charm, not force.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get what you need, not through drive or power but through negotiation. Know it and don't rattle any swords. Moderation is key. Measure and plan--get appraisal and approval. Family should be included.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotions dominate. You love or hate and there is little or nothing in between. Key now is control. Be mature as opposed to childish whims. Know there is responsibility connected with pleasure. If grown-up, you gain. Otherwise, you will be embarrassed-and lose.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Study Leo message for valid hint. You may be tempted to go to extremes. Wise course now is to see who you are relating to, dealing with and to pull in reins accordingly. Capricorn, Cancer could be involved. Steer clear of one in authority who is angry.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Sound relationship, with one who threatens to leave, is indicated. Means what appears finished will be as if a phoenix--rising from its own apparent ashes. Know it and don't count out allies--or yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New approach to financial affairs would be beneficial. Refuse to be backed into corner. Speak up; maintain independent stance. Leo, Aquarius persons could be involved. Get to heart of matters. Affair of heart is not to be discounted.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are drawn between taking chance on dream and sticking to what is apparently a practical course. Key now is to stay with the familiar. Family member who appears conservative will ultimately aid in fulfilling ideal. Wait and you will win.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): You may feel as if you are walking on eggs--or thin ice. Key is to care, to be careful and cautious and to be gentle lest skeletons rattle. Be discreet, leave fine points for another time. Maintain low profile. What you must know will be revealed--wait, listen and "see."

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Friends are in mood to confide. Some want to share guilt by sharing "confessions." Know it and protect yourself in emotional clinches. You will be dealing with ambiguities. Study Capricorn message. Keep hole card in reserve.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Apparent travail will boomerang in your favor. Know it and maintain positive mental attitude. One in authority, appearing indifferent, is actually favorably impressed. Wheels may move slowly but justice will triumph. You will benefit.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have dramatic qualities, many of which are exemplified by your voice, compelling, fascinating, warm-dept. June should be one of your most significant months of 1974. Many born under Taurus and Libra are drawn to you. Contact made last year will blossom.

Depth the key as tracksters shoot for conference title

By SCOTT HAYES

Can a team that was shutout in half of the events and outscored by 34 points against UConn come back to challenge the Huskies in the Yankee Conference championships?

The answer is yes, or at least maybe. A little more than two months ago, UMass was humbled by UConn in a tri-meet with Manhattan. UConn scored 53 points to just 19 for the Minutemen. This time around, however, things should be a little different.

Although word has it that none of the other Yancon teams feel that UMass has a chance, the coaching staff and the members of the team are confident that they can overcome UConn for the championship.

Once again, UMass will be depending on its depth to outscore UConn in most events. UConn has some outstanding individual performers, but lacks the talent to consistently back top them up. If UConn takes first in an event, for example, UMass can still outscore the Huskies by taking advantage of its depth and finishing 2-3-4. A team is awarded five points for first place performances, while second place earns three points, third two points and fourth one point.

UMass is coming off a good meet at Dartmouth and the reputation of being a big-meet team should prove advantageous. The Minutemen are a better team than the one that was outclassed at Storrs, both physically and mentally. That tri-meet came only a week after the start of the regular season and many members of the squad were still green.

There is one interesting difference between UMass and UConn that could be a factor in determining the Yankee Conference champion. The Huskies have jaunted from the security of the Field House only once this season. That one journey was to Columbia, where UConn had trouble winning. This indicates that UConn is a shaky team away from home.

UMass, on the other hand, doesn't have an adequate indoor facility and has been on the road all season. As Coach Ken O'Brien put it, "Everyplace is home to us." The Minutemen have already been to Burlington this season and will not have to adjust as much as UConn will.

Teamwise, it will be the same old story, with UMass and UConn competing head to head. Rhode Island looks like a good bet for third, while Maine and Boston University will battle for fourth. Vermont and New Hampshire will be trying to finish sixth and not last in the Conference.

NHL, WHA near agreement

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League's board of governors will meet in Chicago Friday and is expected to ratify terms of an agreement that would end a $50-million litigation fight with the rival World Hockey Association.

Brian O'Neill, executive-director of the NHL, said Thursday that governors for all 16 teams will be represented at the Chicago meeting accompanied by legal counsel.

"It looks very promising that we might come up with something," O'Neill said.

Lawyers have been working on a brief that was to have been submitted to Judge A. Leon Higginbotham of Phildelphia. The judge has set March 28 as trial date for the anit-trust suits the WHA has brought against the NHL.

He has granted both sides several postponements to pretrial meetings in an effort to have the two parties reach an equitable out-of-court settlement.

In earlier meetings in Chicago and Philadelphia the NHL governors failed to obtain the unanimous consent required for such a settlement, although the WHA trustees had agreed to terms.

The peace proposal offered by the WHA would have the NHL pay the $1.9 million legal fees incurred by the new league in its fight against the NHL.

JV's siesta in second half, Springfield pounces, 58-55

By GLENN POSTER

Accustomed to playing the second half of home games in front of a sellout crowd, the UMass JV basketball team looked around, saw a bunch of empty seats. and promptly fell asleep for twenty minutes of playing time. At halftime the Minutemen held an eleven point lead at 35-24. But when the final horn sounded, it was Springfield College who came away with the victory, 58-55. You don't even need to be a math major to figure out how few points the home team got in the second half.

A look at the statistics reveals that UMass lost the game at the foul line. While Springfield hit on 12 of 19 free throws for a percentage of 63.5, the Minutemen connected on only one of eight for a miniscule 12.5 per cent. Sophmore pivotman Arnie Johnson personally contributed in this department by going 0-5. Another factor in the defeat was that UMass had more than twice the number of turnovers than their opponent, 26-12.

Things started off on the wrong foot for the Minutemen. Bill Santos, their fine playmaking guard, drew two early fouls and then became irate and received a technical. (probably for questioning the referee's nationality) Coach Chuck Olsen had to cool Santos off by benching him. And while he was cooling off, Springfield converted a four-point deficit into a five point lead. Santos re-entered and the Minutemen, over a four minute stretch went 10-2 to take a 28-21 lead with five minutes to go in the half. Thirty seconds later Springfield had cut the margin to 28-24. Then UMass went on a 7-0 scoring blitz, and went into the dressing room at the half owning a 35-24 lead.

They should never have come out. The team scoring for the second half was a mere ten field goals.

On the bright side, Santos ended up as high scorer for the game with 19 points. Arnie Johnson and Glenn Cooper each chipped in with 14. Cooper also had 15 rebounds. Jim Woolston led the Springfield attack with 13 points. POSTER'S PATTER — With the loss, the JV record now drops to 7-3. The next game will be Saturday night vs. AIC at 5:30 in the Cage.

Seed-hungry skaters host Colby, Bowdoin

By BILL BALLOU

"This Saturday," says Jack Canniff "We cash in our cards."

And when the score is totalled, Canniff should know about where his team is going in post-season play.

The Minutemen close out their Division Two schedule this weekend with a game this afternoon vs. Colby (Orr Rink at 4 p.m.) and another one Saturday night vs. Bowdoin.

Neither team has had a good season. Colby is only 1-8-1, while Bowdoin stands at 3-5 (in the Division). But UMass teams have traditionally done poorly against both schools, and who can forget the 9-3 embarassment UMass suffered at the hands of Bowdoin in the semi-finals of last season's playoffs.

Should UMass sweep both games, they'd finish the season with a 10-5 record in Division Two. It should be good enough for third or fourth seed, depending upon what Vermont decides to do. Salem State and Merrimack will almost certainly be seeded higher, and possibly Norwich and Boston State.

Two losses, and a final divisional record of 8-7, and you've got an entirely different story. The seed might be sixth, seventh, or eighth and the chances for a home play-off game non-existent.

If they split, mail me your guess, because it'll be as good as mine.

The Minutemen are healthy for the most part, and the only skater who'll be sidelined is defenseman Mike Ellis. However, Bill Mintiens has filled in well for Ellis in the last two games so the loss has not been as devastating as it first seemed it would be.

So, it's Colby this afternoon at 4:00, Bowdoin Saturday night at 7:30, and time to ante up right after that.

INCIDENTALLY: John Binkoski turned in a fine performance after replacing Chick Rheault with seven minutes left in the UConn game. He'll probably see some action in the last week of the season when the UMies play Div. I teams.....Tim Howes still can't score. He banged the post square against Connecticut and was stopped after good rushes a couple of times. He says he's never seen anything like it. Neither have I.....John Muse had an open net but couldn't lift the puck and the UConn goalie robbed him......The UMies just don't have that "killer instinct" around the net.

Matmen grapple 6th-best Wilkes

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Staff Wrestling Writer

It has always been the ambition of Wilkes College's Colonels to be the number one small college wrestling team in America. However a team of Mustangs from a school called Cal Poly at San Luis Obispo has never taken to that idea, and in the last seven years has kept the NCAA College Division Crown in California. During this time, Wilkes' has managed as high as second place and as low as fifth — but never first.

This year it's different — almost. Cal Poly is still number one, but Wilkes College has moved to the number one spot in the College Division III category. (The last year or so the NCAA has undergone a reorganizational change designed to make competition among colleges more even). Wilkes College opted to go Division III and copped the number one spot with their decision.

Along with that premier position the Colonels are the sixth ranked team in the East and that ranking includes all division schools. The Colonels have almost everyone back from last year's team but somehow haven't been able to win the big ones. Losses to Navy, Syracuse and powerful Oklahoma have spoiled an otherwise good season.

Two small-college All Americans will be wrestling against the Minutemen tomorrow. Art Trovei, fourth at 142 and Mike Lee, fifth at 150, seem to have a case of senioritis and have not been as outstanding as in years past. Both wrestlers admit to doing better in tournaments than dual matches.

Running down the rest of the lineup, UMass has senior Joe Phillips meeting Rich Mahonski. Phillips has not seen any varsity action this season but is a tough individual and could give Wilkes a run for it at 118. Larry Reynolds meets Wilkes brightest star in the 126 pound bout. Frosh Lon Balum has pinned almost everybody he has wrestled this year, including Oklahoma's Norm Hatchett, a dual match over last year's top seed at the NCAA, Billy Martin of Oklahoma State.

The Colonels aren't weak at 134 either, as Merk Chakmakas will wrestle UMass' Doug LeMire. Chakmakas was runner-up in the Wilkes Christmas Tourney. At 142 Al Elmost wrestles Trovei and Steve Jabaut will wrestle Lee at 150. The 167 pound class should also see some good action as Minuteman Captain Steve Benson meets Jim Wisenfluh. Wisenfluh lists among his athletic accomplishments two New York Gymnastics State Championships on the parallel bars.

Another highlight match should be at 158, where Cliff Blom meets the Colonels highly touted Gene Ashely. Minuteman Robin Osborne and Bob Yanku should mix it up at 177 while Al Grinkevich should give UMass' Bob Spaulding all he can handle at 190. The Minutemen could possibly be in the money at heavyweight, where Dennis Fenton grapples with Al Scharer. Scharer has not been as successful this year as last and is thought to be hanpered by an injury.

The Colonels don't wrestle away as well as they do at home but when a team is that good it becomes speculation. It is a chance to see one of the nation's better teams and possibly see a couple of future national champs. JV matches preceed the varsity at 5:00 with the varsity to follow at 6:30 in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

Out of town

Remember back at Thanksgiving when everyone, including Jack Leaman was wondering who would be his starting five? Sure, Endicott and Pitino would be in the backcourt and Skinner and Murphy would be up front, but it was the fifth starter Leaman was talking about. Duarte..a J.V. star last year? Trow..a sharpshooting forward? Mayfield..a freshman with a rugged reputation? As it turned out the job went to all of them. "Du" had 16 points against Maine and 12 vs. Niagra, Trow had 18 vs. UNH and 17 vs. B.C., Mayfield was the only good performer in a 16 point loss to Syracuse. But, in retrospect, the job could have gone to Town.

Jim Town is a 6'6" freshman from Glens Falls, N.Y. whom everyone believed would be that one player who could pick up the slack left by John Murphy off the boards and compliment the rebounding and scoring of Dr. A. And not only that, but move over and play center to spell Murphy, who needs to be rested every once in a while when he begins shooting without the ball.

But this was not to be! The National Collegiate Athletic Association has a new ruling which states that a student must have maintained a 2.0 cum in high school in order to play college sports. Through judgement errors by counselors and breakdown in communications, Town's transcript, which was sent to the NCAA, was correct, but included unnecessary information which set his cum below 2.0. The people at his high school were obviously not aware of the new ruling which was in it's first year. The NCAA reported his ineligibility, and though many appeals were made to correct the error in the transcript, the NCAA said they would only accept the first transcript which had been sent. All this had been kept from Jim by his parents and coach Leaman, but they finally told him 2 weeks before school started in September.

Surprised and upset, Jim finally learned to live with the idea of sitting out a year while still losing a year of eligibility. His reaction to the ruling? "The 2.0 is a good rule but was put into effect for the wrong class," meaning it should have effected high school sophmores in its first year who had 3 years to get a 2.0 average, not seniors who at this point could do little about it.

"That's why I like UMass," says Town, "if I were in Arkansas or Tennessee State and wanted to play football at one of those big schools, you know they'd cheat and I'd be playing. That's why UMass goes by the book and they've got a good reputation for it. Coach Wilson (who recruited Town) is the greatest man I ever met, he and coach Leaman, they just lay it on the line."

Town says he's "enjoying UMass even though I'm not playing." He adds that he came here because it was a good up-and-coming athletic university and he'd like to be part of it and try to contribute to it's growth.

As for next year, Jim is optimistic. "We'll be good" says the muscular frosh, "We won't be a finesse team like we are this year with Al (Skinner) but we'll muscle and rebound well." And win? "Yes, we'll win."

A slight bit overweight (coach are you listening?) Jim plans to do a lot of conditioning over the summer to get into top shape. "Like I told coach Leaman," says Jim, his voice crackling with sincerity, "I'm gonna start next year, there's no way anyone's gonna beat me out." He wants it, and if he wants it bad enough I think he'll get it. Jim's last words echo his eagerness, Just tell the NCAA to leave me alone 'cause I'm gonna be playing next year.

Gymmen battle Middies

By WALT POWERS

The UMass Men's Gymnastics team will have four more cracks at the Eastern League apple tank, but if they can't bite into a victory tomorrow, the rest of the season will be played in deference to the schedule.

After three straight tooth-skinning losses to the Eastern League iron, UMass will finally face a team of similar ability in Navy. The meet will be held at home, which ordinarily would spell ROUT, but a number of factors, will totally negate any home - gymn advantage.

The most important factor will be the injuries to all-around Gene Whelan and Steve Scuderi. Whelan sprained his thumb last Friday and will be under-par on the pommel horse, but the three days of practice he missed will probably exert a more telling effect. The loss of Scuderi is much more serious. A sprained ankle has scratched him from the all-around, and he's scheduled to compete in only one event, the parallel bars. An automatic 9.1 on the high bar, he will only compete if UMass is behind at that point.

Navy's comparable strengths on the first four events could decide the outcome of the meet. Navy is almost evenly matched with the Minutemen on floor, sidehorse still-rings and vaulting, and to win the meet, Coach Tom Dunn figures that UMass will have to win all four. The Minutemen have winning potential on the parallel bars, but have yet to show it in a meet. Other than Whelan and Scuderi, UMass is merely average on the high bar.

The Midshipmen own a 6-3 lifetime advantage over the Minutemen, and last year edged them at Annapolis. The loss of All American Eric Swanson and Doug Griffith, however, make a repeat of last year's score unlikely. The presence of team Captain Bruce Griffin and Dave Jacobson, an NCAA finalist on the high bar last season, should turn the meet into another percentage-point squeaker. A loss in this, the final home meet of the season, says Tom Dunn "would be an embarassment."

In perhaps the two most useless, somnolent contests of the season, both the Varsity and J.V.'s journeyed into the jungles of eastern collegiate gymnastics, and both returned awake and victorious on Wednesday night. The varsity took on the Engineers of MIT, and before janitors and three napping math majors, slopped to a 135.40-120.45 victory. The rings there were slippery, the mats were thin, and UMass, in general, avoided injury at all costs.

Most of the routines were compulsory, and the only real highlights of the meet were Steve Clancy's 8.95 on the floor exercises and a rare double-back somersault landed by Bill Brouillet on the parallel bars. In a meet held at Lowell, the UMass Junior Varsity defeated the Varsity of Lowell Tech, 127.5-115.85. There wasn't much to write home about here, either, except for a 8.75 thrown by Pete Lusk on the still rings. Tom Dunn called it his "best routine of the season, and only low general scoring prevented a 9.00.

UMass falters on beam

S'field nips gymwomen

By CANDY GROSS
MDC Sports Staff

"Anytime you give Springfield two points on beam you can kiss the meet good-bye."

In those words Coach Virginia Evans summed up last night's Women's Gymnastics meet with Springfield College. The final score stood at Springfield 107.25 go UMass' 105.30, with Springfield adding another victory to that seemingly impregnable record of not having lost a dual meet in six years.

The meet started with a fine UMass showing in vaulting, by which they gained a lead of .5 points after the first event. Springfield's Katherine Kolemainen took the event with a 9.4. From then on it was dominated by the UMass trio of Jeannine Burger, Margie Combs, and Linda Nelligan, each of whom scored in the nines. At that point it looked as if Springfield's dual meet record was in jeopardy of being broken.

The uneven bars turned out to somewhat less than hoped for from the UMass standpoint. Neither team scored well, with the highest score of 9.2 going to Springfield's freshman Stephanie Jones. Jeannine Burger turned in a strong second place routine for an 8.9. One of the problems for UMass stemmed from the recurring shoulder injury to UMass' All-Arounder Margie Combs. This was an obvious hindrance to all her routines. Springfield took the event by a small margin of .4 points bringing the halfway score to 53.20 to 53.10 in favor of Massachusetts.

Balance beam developed into a frustrating series of falls for both sides. But it was Springfield which managed to produce three solid routines in the eights. First place went to Kim Andres 8.95, followed by Debbie Dunkley with an 8.9. Anne Vexler held firmly enough to the beam to score an 8.5 third. However, Springfield's third gymnast Debbie Mezger was only .05 points behind Ms. Vexler, a fact which ultimately cost UMass the meet. After three events Springfield led by 1.45 points.

But there was still hope for Massachusetts if their floor team could tumble and dance with near-perfection. The first performer for both teams started with some tumbling falls, but then Springfield's Stephanie Jones clicked with 8.8 and from then on it was Springfield's event. UMass' Jodi Hitt astounded the crowd with her dance but it just wasn't enough to overcome the solid springfield performances.

Debbie Dunkley of Springfield won the event with a score of 9.55 followed by Katherine Kolemainen and Anne Vexler who were tied at 9.35. Anne's score drew quite a negative reaction from the UMass audience, indicating some objections to the judges' decisions. Jeannine Burger's 9.2 routine earned her a solid third but the event score told it all; Springfield 27.85, UMass 27.35, and a final meet score of SC 107.25, UMass 105.30.

Though this meet was a definite disappointment, it doesn't make the season. The really big meet is yet to come. This year Massachusetts hosts the Eastern Regionals on March 15-16, when the women gymnasts will get a shot at breaking Springfield's record of having never lost an Eastern Championship.

Disappointing crowd watches Minutemen melt Chiefs, 78-52

By STEVE SARACENO
MDC Sports Staff

Nine minutes left in the first half and heavy underdog Springfield College leads by two.

In the next eight minutes, Springfield showed why it was a heavy underdog.

The Chiefs saw their 16-14 advantage transformed into a 38-23 deficit as they melted under UMass pressure and only netted 7 points to the Minutemen's 24.

For the rest of the first half and all of the second Jack Leaman's troops steadily built up their lead, and ended up with a 78-52 semi-whomping.

The reason it wasn't a full-fledged whomping (authentic whompings are generally 40 point romps) was due to two factors.

One, a few Minutemen were feeling under the weather. "John Murphy was pretty sick with a kidney infection," explained Coach Leaman, "and Trow wasn't well, either."

Still, Murphy managed to play more than half the game (he had 12 points, second highest for UMass) and Trow, hampered with a strep throat, saw spot play during the aforementioned key eight minute rally.

The second reason why UMass didn't obliterate S.C. was probably due to a shortage of motivation. Without a Cage full of people screaming for blood (only 2000, a full 2000 under capacity viewed the game) the Minutemen found it hard to grind the Chiefs into the floorboards.

In fact, the crowd was the smallest at the Cage for a basketball game in some time.

However, the home roundballers still had more than enough spirit to turn in a satisfactory effort. Al Skinner (who else?) led his team with 8 out of 11 from the field and 19 points. Bill Endicott hit double figures with 11, and had several look-at-the-hot-dog-stand-pass-the-other-way assists. Speaking of assists, Rick Pitino led everyone with seven.

Greg Duarte played surprisingly well, especially in the vicinity of the boards. He grabbed 11 rebounds, more than Skinner or Murphy — or anyone on Springfield. Several S.C. shots collided with his palm, also.

"Greg looked good", said Leaman, "and you have to remember he's been away for a week, due to the death in his family."

Jimmy Burke got in a lot of playing time, and didn't waste it. He was a defensive hound all night.

Everyone played, in what Leaman called, "a satisfying outing".

Springfield, not so satisfied, had a star come out of the woodwork in guard Mark Shannon. The 6'2" backcourtman twisted his way to 21 points in a losing cause. Soft and smooth S.C. southpaw Fran Aniello jump-shot 14 points before sitting out trash time.

CAGE CAROUSING — Mike Stokes, the Nate Archibald type crowd favorite saw some playing time for a change before the game was a foregone conclusion...UMass is now 16-4 overall, and 8 out of 9 in YanCon play...The Rhody Rams, a formidable team, visit the Cage Saturday night — game time is at 7:30.

Press ignores N.E. hoop

New England basketball is in a sorry state.

This is not the fault of the players or coaches in the area, however, as the caliber of play has improved over the years and continues to progress this season.

The problem, it seems, is with the fans and the press.

The locals simply refuse to turn out to watch talented teams and individuals flaunt their wares on the hardwood.

Some cases in point: Boston College, an improving quintet on the verge of qualifying for a national tournament, played St. Francis of Pennsylvania, a team with a record of 13-7, on Wednesday night in front of only a handful of family, friends and local diehards. The Northeastern—UMass game in Boston several weeks ago drew 1400 fans, only half of the auditorium's capacity, and one of the Huskies radio announcers informed me that the crowd was unusually large for a Northeastern game. And who would have thought that this lethargy would reach all the way to Amherst where the Minutemen were forced to play in front of a less than capacity crowd for the first time in what seems like centuries on Tuesday night in a game against BU.

And since the fans aren't interested, the press doesn't bother to cover most of the contests. Only recently has the Boston Globe begun printing roundups of the BC games.

Harvard did receive some coverage in early December, but that was mostly of the novelty kind as the papers were interested in exploiting the arrival of their new coach, Tom Sanders.

The most striking example of press bias is in Providence. In all of Rhode Island and southeastern Mass, the PC Friars are everyone's darlings. Rarely a day goes by when one can pick up a copy of the Providence Journal without finding at least a ten-inch story on some aspect of Dave Gavitt, Marvin Barnes, Kevin Stacom, et. al.

But there are some other good teams in the area. Brown is an emerging power and is still in contention for the Ivy League crown. The only coverage they have received is when they played PC earlier this week; a game, incidently, which went down to the wire with the Friars barely hanging on for a two-point win.

Also in that area, Jack Kraft has rejuvenated his URI Rams, but you wouldn't know it by looking at any Rhode Island newspaper. The Rams are 6-3 in the Yankee Conference, and if they can manage to upend the Minutemen tomorrow night they will be in definite contention for the Conference crown. But still, no ink.

Another striking phenomenon of basketball in the area is the idea that Providence is the most overrated team in the country because they have only managed to squeak by local opponents BC, UMass, and Brown. But did these dissidents ever stop to realize that maybe they are thinking in reverse? It just could be that the rest of New England is underrated instead of the Friars being too highly considered.

Right now there are four teams in New England with good chances of playing in one of the national tourneys. Providence is almost a sure bet for an NCAA bid. UMass, barring a total collapse, will definitely go somewhere, most likely the NIT. And Boston College and Connecticut are actively seeking invitations and will go anywhere they can.

It is unlikely that a team from New England will win one of the tournaments, or even advance to the finals. But I, for one, am convinced that several good teams from around the land will be surprised when the easy pickings they expected from a second-rate basketball area turn into early elimination.

And if you don't believe me, ask somebody from Missouri.

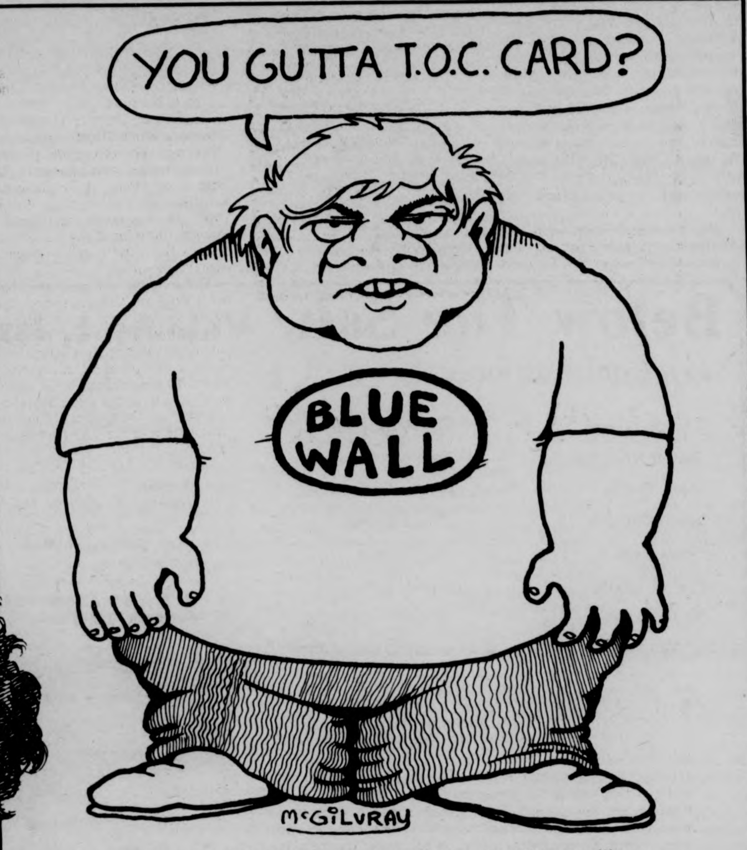
Another Dollar? For What?



One more dollar? Why? The Campus Center doesn't know either.

Barbara Voorhees

Sometimes you can't help but feel a little bit paranoid that it's out to get you. The University, that is, is out to get your bucks, baby.

You get that feeling when you're paying your tuition and your dorm and dining commons' fees and your Campus Center fee and your lab fees and your phone bill (through the University of course) and when you're paying $12 for one of your 20 required books.'

And when you want to sit down and have a drink, first you've got to pay a buck for a damn Top of the Campus (T.O.C.) card and they don't even give you a free drink anymore.

What kind of a rip-off is this?

You no longer get a free drink with purchase of a T.O.C. card, according to T.O.C. entertainment manager Tony Tartaglia, because it was discovered that this was against an Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABC) regulation which reads, "No license shall offer, give, agree to, accept or receive any prize, premium, gift or other similar inducement in any agreement or effort to aid, promote or induce the sale or purchase of alcoholic beverages."

You still pay the buck for a card because it is a T.O.C. by-law that some nominal fee be paid for membership in the club.

The Campus Center (C.C.) has a club liquor license which restricts who may go in and out of the three bars in the C.C. complex to members of the UMass community who hold T.O.C. cards and their guests. The Amherst Board of Selectmen favored this type of license over a regular liquor license for the C.C. and on occasion have secretly checked the three bars to see if they follow the regulations stipulated by this license, especially those concerning admittance. Last semester when the Collegian reported that Amherst high schoolers were frequenting the Blue Wall, the Selectmen invited T.O.C. officials to their meeting for questioning.

Non-members may use the cafeteria facilities of the three bars, but persons buying drinks during meal times are supposed to show their T.O.C. cards to the bartender or waitress.

So far this fiscal year (beginning in July) 10,510 members of the UMass community have purchased T.O.C. cards. 10,510 bucks. Neither Tartaglia nor F. Craig Stuart, treasurer of T.O.C. Inc. and business manager of the C.C. could say exactly where T.O.C. card money goes.

"When we're talking about the Campus Center, we're talking about a two million dollar budget and $10,000 is well... nothing," says Stuart.

According to Stuart, 60 cents of each dollar paid for a T.O.C. card goes toward making the card itself. But students don't get cards, only stickers. Faculty and staff, who don't pay a C.C. fee as students do, get cards.

The rest of the money goes into T.O.C. Inc. funds which are used for entertainment, liquor, insurance, and operating costs and, Tartaglia and Stuart assure you, eventually filter down to student worker salaries.

Any profit made by T.O.C. Inc. is given in the form of rent to C.C. Food Services.

Stuart is looking into the possibility of dropping the $1 T.O.C. card charge for students. The T.O.C. Inc. lawyer is going over the legal aspects of such a move with ABC officials and if he gets the OK the T.O.C. Inc. Board of Directors will vote on it. If this goes through, faculty and staff will still have to pay the fee.

An ABC regulation requiring that nightclub owners issue receipts for cover or admission charges is awaiting Governor Sargent's signature and may have been signed by the time this goes to press. If this regulation goes into effect, Tartaglia says that the Hatch will continue with its admission charge and give out tickets at the door.

Neither the Blue Wall nor the T.O.C. bar have cover charges at any time but the Hatch bar charges a $1 admission fee on Thursday nights. Tartaglia says that the money is used to bring bigger name bands such as Clean Living, Fat and Tracy Nelson and Mother Earth to the Thursday night "Celebrity Series" in the Hatch.

Only if students express dissatisfaction with the "Celebrity Series" will it be discontinued.

There's still no place in Amherst (except during Happy Hours) where you can find cheaper drinks than at the C. C. bars. Low prices there probably also keep prices lower in competing town bars.

So if you're thirsty, not too big on atmosphere, and don't mind the University ripping you off for another buck, (keeping in mind that the charge may be dropped soon) drown your other sorrows at the C.C. bars.

We have nothing to live up to

We're Below The Salt

Yes, Below The Salt. The name stems from an ancient dinner custom in England. Long tables held the repast, and while all ate together, all were not together by any means. The nobles, royalty, well-to-do, etc., were placed at one end, always the better, of the table, while the hoi polloi, the disfavored, the commoners, the low life, were seated on down the other end. The line of demarcation was the salt supply located around the middle of the table. There was no crossing this line; those running the show were definitively seperated from those with whom they wished not to consort — they stayed far above the salt. The people left out were seated, and sentenced, to stay below the salt.

We are not friends with Big Business, powermen or the money-go-round. We're not likely to be invited, ever, to The White House for any occasion whatsoever. We don't like the Army. We don't like TV. We don't like William Randolph Hearst. We don't like Nelson, David, Lawrence, or any of the Rockefellers. We're out of it. We have nothing to live up to.

So it is that we can find ourselves absolutely no other place than below the salt. And we will have it no other way.

Thanks to all who took the time to try and give us a name. Don't be surprised if some of these ideas pop up around here from time to time.

Poor Richard's has been the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. We pledge to uphold this tradition, but can't promise everybody's peculiar work will fit. Yours must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces to the line. The deadline for each Thursday's edition is noon the previous Tuesday; but you can write to us anytime.

A Continuing Story . . .

By Denny Matteau

Part II: Our story thus far: King Pritchet, monarch of a small but wealthy Atlantean-kingdom, has begun to show signs of cutting loose from the accepted reality (in other words, he's out of his tree) and his loyal friend Holyman has been trying to humor him. Now, we enter a tavern in Cinelli, the capital or 'royal seat' of Mineola:

It is smokey inside, a crowd of workmen throngs the bar, and small groups sit at tables scattered about the room. 'Way in the corner sit two men. One is tall and thin and bent, wearing a tattered monk's robe. His face is partly hidden by his hood. The other is short and stout, and wears a minstrel's toga.

"No, no nono no..." mused the monk, staring into his mug of frothing mead. He gulped a long draught and rested his head in his hands.

The minstrel tapped his fingers in rapid succession along the edge of the table. "You may be wrong, you know!" he said in a burst. "True, you are Holyman, closer to the king than I, surely, but still, you may be wrong!"

Holyman lifted his head and stared at the minstrel with a weighted look. "And if I am wrong, Belvedere, what is right, what is your explanation?"

The minstrel picked up the mandolin that was leaning against his chair and thoughtfully plucked a riff "He... could... be... up... to... some... thing." he said in a sing-song. Holyman glared. Belvedere stood up.

"I know whereof I speak. So do you. It's the method of his Majesty's madness that has me here singing for a meal. Alone, when once my family was great."

Belvedere took his mandolin and called out to some drunkards across the room, who all began to sing loudly. Holyman finished his mead and hobbled towards the door with a walking stick. He paused and threw a coin at Belvedere's feet before slipping out to the night.

King Pritchet pranced down the hall in a sprightly mood. He entered the game rooms and beckoned to a young servant.

"Go to Holyman's quarters and invite him to a game of darts." he said. The servant left, and King Pritchet strode to an ornate case which held sets of jeweled darts. He picked up three sterling ones, and swung round on his heel, landing a dart with one deft motion right on the center squares of the freshly painted board. Holy man entered, blinking and slightly out of breath.

"Your Majesty...?"

"A game of darts, Holyman! Here, take the gold tonite. We play for high stakes."

"High stakes, my King? I... what are the stakes?"

"The stakes, my man? Why, my plan, of course! I wish to include you in my great plan, but must see that the Gods are with you, by the darts. My wonderful, truly wonderful plan! My reign will be marked by this!"

Lampoon Parodies: Humorous "Ivy"

The Harvard Lampoon Centennial Celebration 1876-1973. Edited by Martin Kaplan, with a foreword by John Updike. Little, Brown and Company — Boston p. 310 $29.95

It is a cloudy morning in March, 1972. You roll out of your bed in Cambridge, Massachusetts and pick up your copy of The New York Times. As long as you can remember the Times has reassured you that even though there are some troubles in the world, at least another day has arrived no less mediocre than the past. Yet this day is different: The ancient Parthenon has toppled due to an earthquake in Greece; Castro has seized the U. S. Naval Base at Guantanamo; A walrus in Central Park Zoo is reported to have spoken; and the New York Thruway is converted into a one way road.

'What is going on in this world?" you mumble sadly, feeling that things are getting just a bit out of hand. Before calling your best friend, or looking through your Desiderata, for reassurance, you are informed by a friend the real story: You've been spoofed once again by the Harvard Lampoon.

Yes, the Lampoon has printed up two thousand of these "bogus" copies of the Times and had distributed them throughout Harvard College, and other parts of Cambridge as well. The spoof is on you, as you roll over in your bed and wonder aloud what is worse, the reality of the Harvard Lampoon or that of the real world.

The Harvard Lampoon Centennial Celebration 1876-1923 is filled with such parodies as this one on the New York Times as well as similar spoofs on Cosmopolitan (including the now famous "nude" photo of Henry Kissinger); Time, Life, and Playboy.

Perhaps the parody on Playboy is the best. Copying the type-set accurately and capturing the smug outlook of Playboy, it features its monthly interview with a new Presidential advisor — Magic Eight Ball. From this I quote, Playboy: As a professional predictor, don't you consider the existence of pollsters like Louis Harris as something of a threat?

Ball: You may rely on it.

Playboy: And yet you are reading a poll right now. Do you consider this basically contradictory?

Ball: It is certain.

Playboy: When, then, about sex?

Ball: Yes, definitely.

In addition to its parodies, the Lampoon has opened its letter files and pulled out some gems to be observed by the readers of this book. Without a doubt, the funniest is the Vice President of the Elvis Presley Fan Club of San Francisco who berated the Lampoon for attacking Presley and wrote, "Elvis is a hero to me, and you're a heel. I bet you even look like Godzilla. Another irate reader wrote in, "So, Veronica Lake is one of the two movie worsts, and the worst discovery of 1941!!! May I have an explanation, or are you too busy ruining the career of some other person?"

It is too bad that these people took the Lampoon so seriously. The Harvard Lampoon has been coming out fairly regularly since 1876. A list of Lampoon contributors reads like a Who's Who of Journalism: John Reed, William Randolph Hearst, John Updike and many others. The quality of the humor and the artistic talents displayed within the pages of the Lampoon has been consistent in its excellence.

Martin Kaplan, a former President of the Lampoon has compiled this book, which he calls "a celebration of America's oldest humor magazine." As editor he has put together this mammouth collection of humor, parody, satire, and pure spoof that is a joy for any reader to skim through. Of course many of the jokes are inside affairs; lost in time and geography to the men of Harvard College. Nevertheless, there is enough in the collection to please anyone.

The only bad thing about the book is its price, a heavy Harvard heist of $29.95. Too bad. This will surely limit its circulation outside the halls of "Ivy". A book like this really deserves to be read by as many people as possible. I hope that the people of the Lampoon will have enough sense to try and come up with a paperback edition of the book soon. Till then, it will be restricted to those who can afford (or live in a situation of utility where they can pool their money with friends) this truly excellent, but much too expensive book.

KHESANH AIRLIFT PROVES MISTAKE; PARACHUTES FAIL

Tanks, Heavy Guns Fall Mercilessly on Men Below

By TOM BUCKLEY
Special to The New York Times

KHESANH, South Vietnam, March 6—An attempt to airlift heavy artillery and tanks to the besieged combat base at Khesanh proved disasterous this morning as parachutes failed to open.

Official military spokesmen refused to estimate casualties or damage resulting from the malfunctions, but it was apparent to all of us here that many American lives were lost and many millions of dollars worth of equipment were damaged beyond repair.

No explanation of the catastrophe has as yet been made available to the press, but Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam, ruled out

Nixon Calls Mishap Typical of Johnson Handling of War

By MARK JONES
Special to The New York Times

HANOVER, N.H., March 6—Richard Nixon today cited this morning's Khesanh catastrophe as typical of the "careless, almost happy-go-lucky manner in which the Johnson Administration is conducting the war." Speaking at a sparsely attended fund-raising luncheon, Mr. Nixon called for a full investigation of the accident.

"In my opinion," Mr. Nixon proclaimed, "President Johnson owes a personal apology to every mother of every boy killed in this most unfortunate incident. The Khesanh catastrophe must stand out to all Americans everywhere as a flagrant example of the kind of waste and misjudgment that has characterized a good deal of our war effort under Democratic leadership," he continued.

CASTRO SIEZES U.S. NAVAL BASE AT GUANTANAMO

WASHINGTON, March 6—Authoritative sources within the Johnson Administration announced tonight that Cuban nationalists forces had siezed the United States Naval Base at Guantanamo.

Reports from the Pentagon arriving at the State Department shortly before 11 p.m. (E.S.T.) indicated that communication from the Base had ceased about three hours earlier in the evening. Further information was described as "sketchy", but it was expected that President Johnson would make a televised statement sometime Thursday night.

Premier Fidel Castro and the Cuban government have virtually ignored the presence of the United States outpost on their soil since they closed off base's water supply several years ago. Nevertheless, the Administration has instituted periodic inspections of base's defenses during recent years. For this reason, Central Intelligence Agency Director Richard Helms, Admiral Raymond Nelson, and Undersecretary of State Nicholas Katzenbach were sent ot Guantanamo two days ago to investigate proposed further security measures. It is believed that three men were taken into custody.

Research Links Asparagus Tips to Stomach Cancer

Research at Columbia University has tentatively linked three types of stomach cancer to asparagus tips. Dr. Stephen Y. Nareff announced his findings yesterday afternoon in a press conference at New York's Ritz Tower Hotel.

Dr. Nareff conceded that "a great deal of work remains to be done," but data thus far complied shows "distinct and indisputable" correlation between incidence of stomach cancer and the eating of asparagus tips.

Dr. Nareff's findings are expected to have a profound if not immediate effect on agriculture and related industries.

Asked if he viewed only the tip of the asparagus plant as a potential health hazard, Dr. Nareff replied that "it is too early to tell, but we suspect that some areas lower in the

Heinlein's Fiction Betrays Promise

Time Enough For Love
by Robert Heinlein
589 pp. $1.95, G. P. Putnam
Reviewed by Ed Smith

As a beginning reader of the writings of Robert Heinlein, I was led to expect something rather special. From the reception accorded Stranger In a Strange Land, which swept the college campuses about the same time as Kurt Vonnegut's novels, I anticipated a science fiction writer with a refreshing philosophical perspective. Heinlein's newest novel, Time Enough for Love, is, in a word disappointing.

The major concern of the story is the activities of Lazurus Long, a descendant of the Howard family which has apparently been a mainstay of Heinlein's fiction for some time. Long, who has lived over two thousand years, is the only viable character in the entire book. His age apparently entitles him to better treatment by the writer than the numerous and totally flat characters who populate the rest of the book.

The first four-hundred pages of Time Enough for Love consist of memoirs of Lazurus Long. In places these memoirs are interesting, humorous, but never fascinating. Interspersed within Long's adventures are excerpts from his notebooks which have to be the most absurdly laughable part of the entire book. It is certainly an interesting device to attempt to give the reader a peek at the personal reflections of a man who has lived two thousand years, but the philosophical aphorisms of which the notebooks consist are not brilliant, striking or even especially touching. They are at best witty. The few that do show a spark of creativity were almost all repeats from the words of the major character in the only other Heinlein novel I have ever read, I Will Fear No Evil.

Robert Heinlein

The last one-hundred pages of Time Enough for Love are the book's only saving grace. In that space, Long travels in time back to his childhood. Though time travel is a common device in science-fiction, this part of the book is well done because there is a well-written interaction of personalities which is generally not evident in the rest of the book. This type of dichotomy in one book makes me feel that in science-fiction, like any other literary form, one cannot rely on fantastic machines or inventions to hold a story together. The basic elements of characterization and plot, both sorely lacking in this case, are what it takes to hold together any piece of fiction.

A major factor in the future society which Heinlein develops in this book appears to be sexual liberation. In fact, there is at least one reference to how sexually liberated everyone is on each page. To me, this leads to hang-ups on sexual liberation due to an obsession with it. I would not mention this except for the fact that this becomes one of the most grating, obnoxious aspects of the entire book.

Although Heinlein appears to be an optimist, there is one feature of Heinlein's future society which is, for me, rather terrifying. Everyone, in terms of their moral outlook, is either black or white. He has developed the most sterile, one sided set of characters I have ever come upon. Aside from Lazarus Long, who is the embodiment of everything but the most object evil, the characters all talk alike, respond alike and voice the same witless comments ad nauseum for five hundred pages. If those characters are supposed to be reflections of the people in a perfect future society, I pity those who will ever have to live it.

ASTRO BLACK - SUN RA (Impulse AS-9255)
THE MAGIC CITY - SUN RA (Impulse AS-9243)

At last we have Sun Ra found almost anywhere. Impulse! is apparently going ahead with its Sun Ra reclamation project, giving us Sun's messages old (the almost impossible to get Saturn label releases) and new. The Magic City was recorded in 1960. Astro Black is vintage 1972 Ra. Both are stunning re-arrangements of time and space. "It's about time, it's about space, it's about life and the human race..."

Sun Ra's appearance at last spring's Black Musicians' Conference at UMass was certainly one of the fullest and richest concerts I've ever seen. Sun and his Solar Arkestra did manage, as promised, to levitate the Student Union Ballroom and take us somewhere else for three hours, and when they came back, they left us in a different time and space than where we'd started. Channel 5, WCVB - Boston, was there to film the show. I can imagine the havoc at 3 a.m. some morning when they flip on Ra on Boston's insomniac's screens.

Compared with The Magic City, one of Sun's finest works, Astro Black shines with less an intensity, if only for the fact that it contains less adventuritiveness and hence goes fewer places. Where Astro Black does go, however, it spends its time in greatly defining and describing some of the sound tones only briefly noted in other trips — the exploration of the "Big Note".

The title song is the only one on the album with a vocal, and features a tearing alto sax duet by Danny Davis and Marshall Allen, and some tree frog moog by Sun. It's a lazy anthem, a chant to "Listen While You Have The Chance - Find Your Place Among The Stars - Listen To The Other World - Rhythm Multiplicity - Harmony, Equational - Melody Horizon."

The rest of side one is "Discipline '99" and "Hidden Spheres", both of which are subtle sound color changings and find tunings that require patience, patience, but are quite rewarding in the end.

Side two, "The Cosmo Fire" is an 18:22 deviation that is of the usual Ra ken, with shooting sounds abounding, time reduced to a force used only at Sun's command, and isn't the commanding influence it is almost everywhere else, and you never know where they'll go next. This is the music that makes people like Hawkwind look really lame.

The Magic City begins with the title track on side one, another side long flight. At 27:24, they've even more time to bend, and the result is another excellent excursion. Sun's work on a cousin of the piano and clavinet, the clavoline, is superb.

The best single evocation of Sun's strongest spirit and main feel is "The Shadow World", the first song on side one. With the horn section blaring like a train that's taken the wrong turn past Mars, "The Shadow World" is a most dynamic and impressive use of the full powers of the Arkestra.

The last two songs, "Abstract Eye" and "Abstract 'I'" are less full-blown and more subtle arrangements that move in more controlled and yet, at times, freer patterns than the other more carefully structured arrangements.

To get the real facts, I checked with one of the few true Ra crazies around here, Terry Adams from NRBQ, owner of over twenty of Sun's records. He endorsed The Magic City with words that shone, and confessed that he'd not yet heard Astro Black. Terry's excused, because I know he'll try it first chance he gets, as Terry knows the magic. How about you?

SAY WHAT YOU MEAN - THE HOT DOGS (Ardent ADS-2805)

What are the Hot Dogs? They are primarily Bill Rennie and Greg Reding. They are backed by some really fine artists like lead guitarist Terry Manning. Together they surprise you with an array of songs which are at times fairly weak but very well done. Hot Dog enthusiasm saves them from being the $5.99 headache.

SA'Y WHAT YOU MEAN is a fast album that would have done better four years ago (along with the Monkees). "Another Smile," one of the few slower cuts, is perhaps the best effort. They really have the potential to become very big and with a bit of luck, time will deepen their lyrics and mellow their vocal and instrumental arrangements.

Therapy Rather Than Creativity?

Court and Spark

Joni Mitchell

Asylum 7E-1001

I've been listening to new records by Graham Nash, Carly Simon, Yes and Bob Dylan, and none of them have come close to entertaining and enlightening me as much as Joni Mitchell's latest. Court and Spark is an eleven-sided jewel; one of those rare records where every song is completely satisfying. Looser and less complicated than For the Roses, it is immediately accessible and enjoyable. The pace is more fluid, helped a great deal by some experimenting on "Raised on Robbery" (Bette Midler cum the Andrews Sisters) and "Twisted" (a pixilated jazz tune).

Joni incorporates her pain with her art. Lennon and Dylan used to; their music suffered when they stopped. Court and Spark marks Joni's annual return to her vinyl analyst. There are laments over past lovers, inner conflicts and uncomfortable situations, yet the poetry is less dense and the melodies are lighter and more frivolous than the past. Perhaps this explains why in spite of "Raised on Robbery" is not making it as a single (as opposed to "You Turn Me On" from Roses, which did), the album is still selling at a furious rate.

Perhaps the single most beautiful piece is "People's Parties", featuring two 12-string acoustic guitars which lend a velvety texture to the melody. "Help Me", the album's most commercial cut, has Joni tip-toeing over the notes as a rock skimming on water. "Free Man in Paris" brings Crosby, Nash and Jose Feliciano together. "Car on a Hill" is an outta sight electric song; and "The Same Situation", has Joni's voice sounding like vibes: at once icy and brittle, affirmative and confiding. All can easily vie for the top notch.

At any rate, Joni Mitchell has returned and she's better than ever. Isn't that right Ms. Yeslow?

—Steve Feld

The words are all there, printed in a light gray against a mellow melony background. Just stagnant gray words. The whole message is foggy without the music that was meant to accompany, so just to be a sport you put it on the stereo, and sit back to wait.

From then on over it will just flow from your speakers featuring such fine musicians as John Guerin, John Sample, Larry Carlton, as well as David Crosby, and Graham Nash. All of these teamed with Joni's numerous talents only make Court and Spark more than another Blue.

The only break in the perfection comes when Joni tries at "Twisted", which after being done by Bette Midler leaves Joni in the dust with her fragile voice; a variation, but definitely lacking.

It might not grow on you like a fungus or hit you like a cube steak at the dining commons the first time you hear it. But give it time, time to let the once stagnant words come alive.

— Lorie Ann Yeslow

The most faithful among Joni Mitchell's recently increased audience know by now how true love never runs. Court and Spark is a crucial point in the relationship of listener and performer.

Joni, since her mystical and hauntingly ageless first album, has consistently baffled those critics who exercise their terseness and wit reviewing monosyllabic rock and roll writers, and who often end up inadequately prepared to honestly appraise the work of a musician who is also a poet. Joni has proven herself capable of lyrical poetry, that when fused with the sensuality of her music, tends to transcend the mindlessness and temporality of many of her contemporaries.

Recently her sensitivity and previous poetic works seem to have become a shield, deflecting honest criticism: those who would criticize her deny the scope of her work, and those who praise are saccharine or elusive in their commending. Jon Laudau's recent review of "Court and Spark" (Jan. 30, Real Paper) exhibited a failure to penetrate Joni's recently acquired aura. The dichotomies of love and freedom, trust and paranoia, etc. he sights as the grain of the album are evident more from a knowledge of her previous work than from the often weak and disjointed lyric work involved in these new songs. He centered out "Twisted" (along with "Trouble Child") as a courageous flirtation with insanity. There are threads and echoes of madness skillfully interwoven in songs from Blue and For the Roses that need neither gimmicks (Cheech & Chong and night club drumming) nor coquettishness ("Now do you think I was crazy?") to move one. Beyond Joni's rather forced sincerity here, what's the point? The cynicism of the song is evasive, almost to the point of being flip: Schizophrenia is fun. "Trouble Child" reveals little with its "deceptive simplicity" other than the uneasy feeling that Joni seems to be taking less time to write of herself, to reach beneath the superficial and confessional as she has done so well since "Song to a Seagull". This album feels much too often like a work written to fulfill audience expectations rather than an artistic need, therapy rather than true creativity.

The pettiness and detachment of "People's Parties" and "Free Man in Paris" are nearly self-satirizing. It's tiring to listen to the trials of being a star; rather than being introspective or revealing to a listener (who does not go to such parties or experience such struggles of stardom), it comes off as self-indulgent, at times almost a fear of communion with those who love her and her work, and are not stars.

"Car on a Hill" and "Just Like This Train" annoy me for several reasons, one being the constant expression of Joni's overly Americanized search for a man, "a strong cat without claws".

"Down to You" is the inner core of the album for me, a depth of feeling, a quality of lyric work, and a spirit of self-determination and communion that was found throughout For The Roses, which I consider to be her finest work. Somehow possibly via her independence from James Taylor) Joni overcame her tendencies toward self-pity and lady-like docility to create a work of art that was inspired and revealing. Many of the songs on Court and Spark seem to be attempts to "make" music and poetry out of situations and ideas where none is intrinsically felt.

My criticisms, rather than expressing a desire to limit an artist's range, a woman's right to rock, a star's option to play, are a reaction from an admirer who hopes that Joni, as too many people are doing, won't allow fame to displace her art. Her line "I just let things slide..." frightens me. The world has come to a dangerous and confused place, and for an artist, a female artist, creativity can be an enlightening experience, a sharing, or a contribution to chaos, a hindering of self-discovery. To be honest (as she has been with us) I express the hope she clear away the shit of stardom, center her gravity, and reveal, if she is so moved, to us the poetry and music at her roots, the joy and awareness of peoplekind's common ground, the mainspring of her and all others' artistry.

WILD TALES — GRAHAM NASH (Atlantic)

Graham Nash is a simpleton — he makes no qualms about it. He called his first lp Songs for Beginners; quite fitting considering all he ever really did was to learn a handful of chords, rhyme enough incongruent words to form what is collectively known as "lyrics", and, slap the two together to get what is commonly known as "songs". Only this reviewer ain't a beginner, compris? And this reviewer is fed up with people who think he's a beginner.

Shit. I've been around, y'know. I've lived through two world wars, seen people come and go, come and go. I've had me plenty of women and may I say that I loved me one or two. Been all around the world, participated in African fertility dances, Indonesian sacrificing of the Virgin — you name it, I've done it. Y'understand?

'N then this guy comes along with some Wild Tales. I mean, do you understand what I'm trying to say? Do you feel my urgency when I demand this hunk of tar be taken forcibly off my turntable? Any self-respecting person (like me) would wanna go straight to the bidet and unchuck his supper.

What can be done, you ask? First, and most important; DON'T BUY THIS RECORD (WHATEVER YOU DO!!!!). Second: tell anyone you see playing this record to kiss his ass goodbye, 'n then sock 'em in the kisser. (It's the only way you can deal with dem cretins.)

OH YEAH (I almost forgot): this is a GREAT record. Gimme more, mama, daddy's comin' home.

THIS IS MARVA JOSIE-Marva Josie with the Earl Hines Orchestra (Thimble TLP-4)

Marva Josie is the only redeeming feature of this album. The things that bother me about the record are the company she recorded for, the "musicians" that accompanied her and the material that was included in the album.

A few songs sound as though they were recorded in somebody's basement, and too much echo-reverb was used too often. I think I should give the engineers at Thimble credit for revolutionizing the recording industry, though. It appears as though they've developed a technique of recording the ring in your ears and have managed to reproduce it as a slightly audible, high-pitched squeal.

"You're Not Mine Anymore" would probably be the best tune on the album were it not for the guitar solo. Two or three times the guitarist found himself on wrong notes and it didn't sound as though he tried to conceal it. And then, on "Jelly, Jelly" a guitarist takes a blues solo which, besides being the most hackneyed solo I've heard in a while, also contains some notes that make you wince. Just one more thing — the soprano sax man should sell his sax.

The album, which is supposed to be a union of symphony orchestras, jazz, gospel and rock, never manages to make that concept work. It fails so miserably, in fact, that I feel compelled to say only that I would be glad to hear the power, depth, and range of Marva Josie's voice in some other context.

BLACK AND BLUE-HAROLD MELVIN AND THE BLUE NOTES (Philadelphia International KZ 32407)

A beautiful example of how good, consistent production can sound. Gamble and Huff may be formula writers judging from the distinct sound of the Notes, but it is a dynamic rhythm-oriented formula, featuring immaculate vocal harmonies and tight instrumentation. The emotional dramatics of the vocals blend beautifully in the infectious melodies which come through with crystal clarity. Lots of potential follow-ups to "The Love I Lost" with best bets being "Is There A Place For Me", "It All Depends On You", or "Satisfaction Guaranteed". No doubt about this one.

BLONDEL-The Amazing Blondel (Island SMAS-9339)

In times such as these winners like The Kibitzers can make it up to and over the music staff's mind capacity as far as quality goes, it's a true wonder how Blondel could have escaped without a word of praise or otherwise. Truly amazing.

But here it is, occupying a space on my record shelf. It's been there for three months and for three months I've been trying frantically to put it into words, trying to compare it; all to no avail.

It's divided up into chapters, chapter one starts with a prelude which might be what a sunrise would sound like if put to music. It goes on and on with its beautiful harmonies and the only place it seems to go on and on in, is some room in the basement of Cance. Truly amazing. Blondel: Eddie Baird - vocals and guitars. Terry Wincott - vocals, guitars, percussion, flute, crumhorn, piano and recorders.

a...)STARS. I

Jan Garbarek. Afric Pepperbird (ECM 1007 Stereo). ECM is a German label which is distributed in this country through the good grace of the Jazz Composers' Orchestra Association (New Music Distribution Service, 6 West 95th Street, New York, New York (10024) — send for their catalog), and Jan Garbarek is one of the most staggering improvisors to come out of Europe; ~~and~~ his work on tenor sax sounds like it's based around the late, fantastic Albert Ayler's work on that instrument. Arild Andersen is a superb bass player, full-bodied and percussive and Jon Christensen is a finely inventive percussionist. Terje Rypdal explores new horizons on guitar (inspired by Sonny Sharrock) and he matches Garbarek for intensity on the aptly named "Blow Away Zone", in which Garbarek does some of the most incredible harmonic leaps I've ever heard on sax.

Jan Garbarek should be a talent to be reckoned with already, and has not gained ascendancy on the international level, or even in his home land, for that matter. Still, this is a lovely album, with a diversity of materials that range from the bass compositions of Andersen, to the "free" improvs of the entire group, to the orchestral density and structure of Andersen's "MYB", to the natural sounds explorations of Christensen's "Blupp", and into the tightness of motion featured in Garbarek's title composition. I should also mention that this album has the clearest recording quality I've ever heard in my life. This one'll probably cost you from about $4.25 to $5.85 in the 'Import' bins of a good record store (it's available in town); however, don't stop there — JCOA has lots of goodies for ya, so don't forget to write to them. Other fine releases on this label include Marion Brown's Afternoon Of A Georgia Faun, which is one of the most beautiful tone poems I've ever heard (ECM 1004) featuring the massively-expressive reedman Anthony Braxton and erstwhile Cecil Taylor - drummer Andrew Cyrille. Then there are labels like Strata-East and Caliq and Enja. This is music that's being recorded and distributed by the musicians themselves, so it's perhaps the only true musical art one can hope to gain material possession of. These aren't the kind of musicians that Carly Simon would write songs about, mostly because they are sincere, and further, true craftsmen, and not (trumpet fan fare and a big Cadillac rolls up to reveal a...) STARS. I repeat, they are not stars, so their music is not easy listening. But it is music, and it's sensitive but strong, and it breathes alive.

Check it out, and remember: "The music business and the music scene are two different things." Quote Ornette Coleman. Album ratings for the label and the artists — A+++...inf.

J. GEILS

In Concert:
J. Geils Band
Brownsville Station
Providence Civic Center
1-19-74

By way of their AM hit "Smoking In The Boys Room", Brownsville Station can now play with the big boys. They played for an hour, which for some people was an hour too long. Brownsville can best be described as a Poor Man's Slade, with a little Chuck Berry thrown in. Honestly, they would have to pick Slade to model themselves after: How about a break and bring on Black Sabbath!

After being subjected to such dreck, J. Geils seemed like a Godsend. They immediately won over the audience by starting with their latest hit, "Did You No Wrong". The band looked to be in good spirits and their stage attire was, needless to say, quite flashy. But glitter & satin do not make a concert.

I was stunned to see the band switch over to almost all slower material. Geils painfully labored on and on, then, sensing something was wrong, eventually went back to what they do best, that is — boogie. Though I was quite happy to see this turnabout, I still sensed something was wrong. Adding to the sullen atmosphere created in the early goings, Geils's guitar was lost in the mix throughout the show and the sound overall was badly distorted. The only band member who played consistently well was the keyboard player, Seth Justman. He was dazzling to watch and turned in two good solos.

Geils was called back for three encores, even though the third one was evidently a clever publicity stunt. Ironically, after floundering most of the concert, the band played all of their biggest hits for the encores. Perhaps an apology for us? Perhaps an apology for playing pretty sloppy? I really can't see how tonight's performance deemed such approval from the crowd, because it seems to me that J. Geils has turned sour.

TEXAS TORNADO-THE SIR DOUGLAS BAND (Atlantic SD 7287 time 37:14)

Not exactly a tornado — more like a twisted twister here, as Sir Douglas is saddled with a lot of help he doesn't need. This is certainly the most corn-ventional Sir Doug album, with Sahm's warbling about the only difference between this and a classic, stodgy B.B. King quickie in the Fifties. All sorts of 'nice' music here — sambas, slow blues, all horned up with that jazzy night club touch we've all come to hate so much. And here's the rub — I love it. Somehow Doug separates the rock from the schlock by doing some outstanding singing. Everytime I get sad and think about my dead carrot or something, I can put this on, and there's Doug thinking about it too. And ooh, Bobby Charles' "Tennessee Blues" should become another standard in Sahm's mouth.

Don't play this for the one you love, unless he-she can get the honky blues too. B

ONE MORE RIVER TO CROSS-CANNED HEAT (Atlantic SD 7289 time 36:45)

A not altogether unreasonable album. This emerges with a lot more aim and direction than did the drifting Ancient Heads and Historical Figures mish-mosh, or their New Age pish-posh. In other words, the Heat, despite a few more personnel shuffles (the Hite-Vestine-de la Parra core remains) have made a quite competent piece of solid business the kind for which they are eminently and justly famous. SOFT MACHINE 7-(Columbia KC32716)

This is an album with guts to it. Soft Machine's fifth and sixth records were excellent, virtuosic almost, but so cerebral and detached I was afraid they were heading for a rut. There are traces of it still in this album (In fact, one cut is a direct steal from the Six album), but still! This album swoops and veers and leaps out at you and wraps itself around you like a sonic boa constrictor. It demands your attention — or takes it without asking. It's some of the finest electrical jazz, and listening to it will put hair on your ears.

Your Sacred Cowboy

CHERYL DILCHER—BUTTERFLY A&M (SP-4394)

A circus just rode into town equipped with big cats and other animals of the wild. A creeking caravan can be seen passing by as the little boys begin to run alongside the small white cart containing a young clown singing in the thick summer's air. She only sings songs of her own. A hint of times gone by is detected as the notes and words fall all over her dot covered costume.

The words continue to ride along the straight and narrow track provided by the steady voice. The track continues on and maintains its course throughout as the wooden wheeled cart stumbles slowly towards its destination. After some time, the boys turn away for want of more variety and run towards a colorful collection of wagons containing many different sounds. The clown sings on in her monotonic manner with her cat seated on her lap to an audience which has long ago left her for a more colorful conveyor of melodious tunes.

Mitch Chakour and the Mission Band
S.U. Ballroom
Feb. 9

Instead of Bonnie . . .

"Last night, right here, was the greatest celebration of life since Woodstock," stated Billy seated next to me. He was talking about Friday night, but the ballroom looked like anything than a celebration of life Saturday night as the replacements for Bonnie Raitt got under way.

It seems attractions such as Las Vegas, the Bluewall, and the Hatch had sidetracked a good majority of people, so the ballroom started with the usual 150 sitting on the floor or lining the walls.

About nine, Jon Pousette-Dart String Band wandered on. They managed to ellicit a few head nods and claps as three guitarists trying their best, but the main attraction during their set was the mobs of people leaving and organizing group field trips to the soda machines.

The people who were the real show was Mitch Chakour and the Mission Band who set the room alive, re-filling the ballroom with people, whether the long lines at the Bluewall were disgusting people or they just didn't have anything better to do, the music filtering out into the S.U. lobby was hypnotizing these drunk UMies on their way to southwest or other far corners of the campus. Either way, as it ended it was clear it just wasn't the celebration of life that supposedly took place the night before, at least according to Billy.

Communications at UMass (or Are You Listening?)
by Gomes & Kostek

"How do things get done around here?" With a great deal of difficulty, I assure you. The question is most often asked by Whitmore rejects, who've run across the emons of getting finances, courses, records, etc. Strange and often bizarre fruit does the computer at Whitmore produce. A young man came up to me the other day and asked about the designation 'HP' on his card. Puzzled, I took the matter to Whitless, and got the answer: "It doesn't mean anything." Strange? Well, it works....all the rules of Whitmore (especially the ones to raise the cost of going to school here) work. The same is true of the Senate. Whether these procedures are dehumanizing still has to be investigated, but we'll assume for the time being that, as long as the people who have the energy hang around, these gizmos will work.

However, the people on a media on campus determine how that system of communication is to work. Why? Inherent difficulties in the news system, as it had been passed along from generation to generation. There is a form for writing news stories — a form sponsored by the prerequisites of "who, where, when and WHY?" This last part is where the difficulties arise. The first three aspects are fairly agreeable to very nearly everyone. These are the facts, ma'am. When a news story comes about, the best practice would be to view every news story as an opinion — which is what it is, of the three "W's."

And we have "professionals" and "living legends", whom no one can judge the validity of, since the folks have had experience. Jim Lavrakas, Nathan Gorenstein and several other turkeys have been gumming up the works of this office for a long time, as have I. But the simple truth remains that no one person on this paper constitutes the truth, and those who come to the Collegian expecting a professional paper had best look elsewhere. The Collegian is not The New York Times, or even the Daily News. This magazine that you're reading is, quite obviously, not Rolling Stone, or Boston-After-Dark. Thank the Supreme deity (of your choice), that it's not. We can experiment (as you can), with the format of the paper — it should be open, as we have been warned by our advisor, Al Oickle, time and time again, because, quite frankly, when you get into the realms of the commercial press, almost all experimentation ceases. That's the cake from which one must eat (and it truly does).

As in any mathematical formula, it is given that:

1) The Collegian and this magazine have been heading (hopefully) towards more of a community press, and as a consequence, they should be having more and more coverage of local events by "ordinary" students — know what I mean?

Okay, now that we've got that straightened out, we can move onwards and upwards...What's this? We have a front page story telling of a woman graduating from ROTC? Whatever happened to the concern about ROTC on this campus? Like most issues of the late sixties and early seventies, it seems vanished with morning dew. Consequently, the following story on the article, written by a two-bit flunky named Kostek. Is it political? You betcha, keed!

CORRECTION:

Oh, prior to last week's Political Porpoise page, I neglected to check up on my sources, so I left out the WOMEN'S COMMITTEE of the Student Senate. My apologies. It's still functioning, and handling the problems of women as they occur in the University and various other areas. CONTACT THESE PEOPLE IF YOU'RE Interested. They won't bite...honest!...The Senate props itself on the right side (as you're entering the front) of the Student Union's upper level. OR...come up and see us...we do bite, but we've had our rabies shots, so the only damage will be psychological. WMUA, and the nature of its broadcasts, will be here soon, as will sundry investigations into the seemier side of life here at UMass, — the bureacracy, and, to correct past mistakes, an investigation of Concert Committee, and an investigation of the workers who do the maintenance jobs here at UMass. We're going places, but we need your help, so come on up.

POLITICS

Of all the blatantly political changes wrought on this campus in the last three years, the two that have actually been changes are a pair of attitudes; one toward women, and the other toward ROTC on this campus.

At long last we are seeing some sort of change in how we treat half of the human race (no wonder everyone's losing). Imagine what we might be doing if all the population got a chance. I know this attitude hasn't spread to many fraternities, sororities or one-sex dorms, as chicks and studs still prosper, but it'll come. Remember, the sooner we bring our sisters up equal, the sooner we all can start working on Human Liberation.

And ROTC. Rotsy. How many strikes against it? Two? '70 and '72? Ah, but our friends still grace Dickenson Hall, though reduced to an activity and publicity level with The Center For Human Development (whatever happened to them), but still ugly, still around.

This unfortunate fact gacked back to me on the front page of The Collegian last Tuesday, with a horror story about Pat Wojtas's being "the first woman to graduate from ROTC in the history of the Commonwealth." Fantastic. "People were getting out of school with no jobs, and ROTC seemed to pay well," said this particular pawn in their game. She also declared that "people should have the right to take ROTC courses — no one is forcing them to take any courses." Wonderful.

It was also disheartening to read, in the same article, of Oswald Tippo's presence at this historical occasion. Tippo resigned as Chancellor a few years back, supposedly for being too strong on the students' behalf. "Tippo, who was introduced to the audience by Colonel Paul H. Fisher as 'one of our strong supporters throughout the years', spoke of the days when he was 'in the cavalry' at the Massachusetts School Of Agriculture, and gave a brief history of ROTC on the UMass campus."

Goodbye Oswald, goodbye Pat.

Front page jive from The Collegian?

It's happened before, but not for years in this Daily News type of news-for-news-sake foolish format. Great job, Larry Carpman, who told us the Important Facts, and George Withers, who showed us the scintillating sight of Pat's having her Second Lieutenant bars pinned on by her brothers, Peter and Charles. Don't call us. It makes me tingle. DOESN'T ANYBODY KNOW THAT ACTION LIKE THIS LEGITIMIZES THE INSTITUTION? DOES ANYBODY CARE?

Repertory Season Opens Here

Compiled by Mark Cuddy

The spring season for the University Theatre at UMass opens February 21 through February 23 with John Osborne's Entertainer. Then it will run alternating weeks in repertory with Oscar Wilde's Importance of Being Earnest and Ibsen's Rosmersholm through April 27.

The leading character in The Entertainer is Archie Rice, a second-rate song and dance man of the British music hall. Osborne himself has stated that he used the "techniques" of the music hall to solve the eternal problems of time and space that confront the dramatist. Thus, The Entertainer is structured like a vaudeville bill, with a series of thirteen numbered scenes separated by two intermissions.

For the most part, the scenes (or "turns", as they are known in vaudeville jargon) alternate between the actual stage on which Archie is doing his act and the room he shares, for the duration of the play, with his wife, father, son, and daughter. A show-business atmosphere pervades the drama from beginning to end, for the Rice family sing to one another, strut, and generally compete for center stage even in the privacy of their home. Archie does his professional act with the help of three scantily clad show girls who sing, dance after a fashion, and otherwise decorate the stage with a tawdry kind of glamour.

Osborne used the death of the English music hall literally and symbolically in his play. The University Theatre production of the play has been set in America of the Depression thirties, when the vaudeville performer's skill and experience had become useless in the struggle for survival.

As in The Entertainer, music has a definite place in the University Theatre's second offering of the spring season, The Importance of Being Earnest. The UMass production of this satirical work employs music not only to set the mood for the play but also to highlight style and actions within it. Following a tradition well established in the British theatre, the current production presents a male actor portraying a leading female character. Earnest provides a vivid contrast to The Entertainer. Where the latter play is relatively modern in setting, realistic in treatment, and concerned primarily with the anguish of failure, Earnest is drawing-room comedy of elegant manners and gorgeous costumes and furnishings of late Victorian England.

Harry Mahnken plays the title role in John Osborne's ENTERTAINER, to be presented by the UMass University Theatre in repertory at Bartlett Auditorium beginning Feb. 21.

Oscar Wilde's high comedy The Importance of Being Earnest, he tells us, is "a trivial comedy for serious people." A friend asked him, "What sort of play are we to expect?" The dramatist answered: "It is exquisitely trivial, a delicate bubble of fancy, and it has its philosophy." "It's philosophy?" "That we should treat all the trivial things of life seriously, and all the serious things of life with sincere and studied triviality."

Since its first English production in 1891, Ibsen's Rosmersholm has consistently fascinated critics and audiences. It has been described as "a play about sexual identity," "political power struggles," "a bizarre murder mystery," or, as Freud explained it, "an explanation of the depths of man's unconscious." Rosmersholm may fit all of those descriptions, but above all it is a love story. Rebecca West and John Rosmer, the main characters, decide to make a stand against the various patterns of sexual, religious, and political manipulations. In the process, they discover some jarring truths about the nature of society and their relationship.

Film:

Local Killers, Pimps & Others

by Steve DeCosta and Kathy Podesky

Magnum Force, with Clint Eastwood, directed by Ted Post.

In Dirty Harry, Clint Eastwood played Harry Callahan, a homicidal detective on the trail of a psychopathic murderer.

In Magnum Force, a sequel, Eastwood is still cast in the mold of a tough, macho San Francisco cop and he's still chasing psychopathetic killers, only this time they too are cops.

In a sense, Magnum Force is almost an apology for the earlier film. It is the antithesis of the theme expoused in Dirty Harry, that law and order is being emasculated by the liberals.

In Harry, Eastwood played a fascist cop whose efforts to bring the Scorpio killer to justice was thwarted by, what he considered, the too liberal workings of the court system.

In the sequel, Eastwood is cast in the rold of defender of the system which he so callously disregarded in the first film. He tracks down a group of rookie policemen who have decided, as Harry once did, that the legal system was just not working, and too many criminals were getting off without their due.

The rookie cops, headed by Hal Holbrook, a lieutenant who is also Harry's boss, cruise around the Bay area systematically murdering local killers, pimps, and others who they believed have escaped the arm of justice.

Harry gets an offer to join the vigilante group, and the viewer is almost surprised when he turns it down. But Harry says, "I hate the goddamn system, but I'll stick with it until something better comes along."

It isn't as if Harry is a flaming liberal. It is just that he becomes, through the death of his black partner and the exposure of Holbrook as the leader of the vigilantes, the most liberal and likeable guy around. But even then Harry, true to his form, says, "there's nothing wrong with shooting, as long as the right people get shot." And it would seem that he alone reserves the right to make that decision.

But if the film apologizes for the theme of the earlier work, it makes no compromises about the violence. Bombs explode in people's faces, shots are fired from close range, and an entire poolside party is wiped out by a flurry of machine-gun fire.

The film is carnage without emotion. People are systematically murdered while no one in the film shows any feeling whatsoever. The viewer also feels nothing as each killing is ticked off,- except the possible repulsion at the method in which they are portrayed.

Even when Harry's partner is killed there is no remorse. Harry did try to warn his partner about his impending death, but after the act is accomplished, the film simply presses on in what is considered more important matters.

Magnum Force even goes off on tangents that have little or no bearing on the plot except to accentuate the violance, such as when Harry alters the plans of several potential hijackers.

Eastwood is the perfect actor in the context of the film. He is a skin-deep character, a thin veneer of macho toughness beneath which lurks no feeling at all. Even the women in Harry's life have to come to him. He uses them as he uses his gun, relentlessly, and with one purpose in mind.

Eastwood is, if you will, an anti-actor. He portrays little beyond the image that his on-screen presence presents. He has progressed little, if at all, from his roles in the spaghetti westerns, in which he played a character called simply The Man With No Name, who only spoke in monosyllables and only when necessary.

Director Ted Post seems destined to become a master of the movie sequel. His only other filmic experience as a director came on the sets of Hang 'Em High, a sequel to the aforementioned spaghetti westerns that were originally directed by Sergio Leone, and Beneath the Planet of the Apes, a film which needs no explanation.

The script was written by John Milius, an accomplished screenwriter. His previous credits include the script of The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean, and the writing and direction of Dillinger. It would seem that he used Magnum Force solely as a vehicle in which to strengthen his reputation as a lover of guns and violence.

Weekend

by Arthur Levine

American Graffiti

This film is more than just another nostalgic look into the fifties. It grapples with the very real difficulties of growing up and finding a niche for oneself in the adult world. The film recounts the exploits of four friends on the night before they are to go their separate ways; some to college, others to continue to haunt the local street corners. There's a lot of fun and good music, but also some interesting studies of American youth. Playing at the Academy of Music, Northampton and the Mountain Farms Mall.

Caberet (1972)

An unusual American musical in that it is not overly sentimental nor does the music conspicuosly stand out from the ongoing action. It deals with the pursuit of fame by a nightclub entertainer, Liza Minelli, at about the end of the Weimar Republic in Germany. The songs comment on the lives of the characters, thus being a revolt against the Oklahomas and West Side Stories that we have come to accept as the norm. Playing Feb. 21 at 7 and 9:30 at the SUB.

A Diary of Anne Frank (1959)

Starring Millie Perkins, Joseph Schildkraut and Shelley Winters. Produced and directed by George Stevens and based on the book, Anne Frank; "The Diary of a Young Girl". Playing Fri., Feb. 15, at Sage Hall, Smith College.

The Exorcist

A hair-raising horror show, based on the work by William Blatty. It deals with the possession of a young girl by demonic spirits and subsequent exorcism. Recommended for those who like to dabble in the occult and - or are strong of stomach. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Go-Between (1971)

A genuine look black at the summer of 1900 in a stately home in the English countryside near Norwich. The story is of a futile love affair as witnessed by a thirteen year old boy who acts as the messenger of notes between the parties. The affair is between the sister of the young boys, friend, Julie Christie and a farmer, Alan Bates. Of course this is a clandestime affair because the sister is engaged to a lord. The film goes on to show the consequences of the affair on the youth who unknowingly takes an active part in its eventual destruction. At the Globe, Northampton.

Jezebel (1938)

Being desperately anxious to play the role of Scarlett O'Hara in Gone With the Wind, Bette Davis was given the role of Southern belle, Julie Morrison, as compensation. It is a lavish production, directed by William Wyler, that captures the "dripping magnolia," "singing darkies' " atmosphere of the Old South. Davis turns in a memorable performance. Playing with Intermezzo. Tues., Feb. 19, at 8:00. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke.

Love (1973)

"In Hungarian; English subtitles. A dying old woman in Budapest believes her son is having adventures in America, while he is really a political prisoner. Beautiful performance by Lile Darvas. A gentle and touching film which conveys the transitory nature of life and the sense of loss inflicted on human relationships. Directed by Karoly Makk." Sage Hall Smith College, Sat., Feb. 16, 7:30 and 9:30.

Magnum Force

Reviewed elsewhere in paper.

The Mouse That Roared (1959)

"Comedy based on the original novel by Leonard Wiberley, can be enjoyed for either its sheer humor or rich political satire. The worlds smallest nation, the Grand Duchy of Fenwick, realizes that any nation defeated by the U.S. in a war is always splendidly reconstructed. The tiny Duchy declares war on the U.S. and invades New York City with 20 archers in chain mail. Starring Peter Sellers. Playing with the Ladykillers." Sun., Feb. 17, 8:00 at West Lecture Hall, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Macbeth

"Director Roman Polanski converts what in Shakespeare was pathology into a normal state of affairs." There are so many horrors that it is quite difficult to pay attention to the poetry of the immortal bard. Fine direction and a lot of action, but don't expect the typical Shakespearean production. Campus Cinemas.

Performance (1970)

The story of a sadistic British mobster, James Fox, who is forced to hide from his fellow gangsters as well as the police. He finds refuge in the basement dwelling of ex-rock singer, Mick Jagger, who is living the totally decadent life with two women. The film is a continuous merger of the two characters personalities until by the end they are unrecognizable as distinct persons. The vehicle for these transformations are psychedelic mushrooms. Some very interesting acting by Mick Jagger as well as some comedy, but overall a very confusing and wearisome exercise in camera technique. Wed., Feb. 20 at 8 in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall at Hampshire College.

Scarface (1932)

"Loosely based on the career of Al Capone, Scarface was released as "the gangster film to end all gangster films," but in fact triggered off a whole series of imitations. Its violent visual style, its cutting, and its cynicism and sense of character are as arresting today as they were them.

Hecht and Hawkes create a world for Scarface and his mob that is not unlike the court of the Borgias in Renaissance Italy with similar intrigues, double crosses, and gratuitous murders. The mobsters are all identified by their own special peculiarities of behavior a device often imitated in gangster films. Though it has often been copied, Scarface still remains one of the best of its genre." Sponsored by the Amherst Film Co-op at the SUB on Sunday, Feb. 17.

Repulsion

"This was Roman Polanskis first film in English. It is a brilliant exercise in psychological suspense, terror, and murder. A London manicurist who cringes at sex, retreats step by step into insanity. Catherine Deneuve gives a haunting performance, and Polanskis measured, nerve wracking camera work can turn you inside out." Campus Cinemas.

Papillon

Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman star in this epic adventure film, based on the memoirs of the late Henri Charriere, who at the age of 25 was sentenced to a life of hard labor in the French penal colony of Guiana. Unlike most protagonists in this age of the anti-hero, McQueen displays the virtues which enable him to overcome what appear to be insurmountable hardships and achieve freedom. Sometimes the flashbacks to Charrieres younger days in Paris appear obtuse, still the superb acting of McQueen and the sheer fascination with his struggle for freedom, save the film from mediocrity. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Serpico

Al Pacino plays an honest cop, who blows the whistle on police corruption in New York. A dramatically explosive film that documents Serpicos fight for his integrity and his life. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Seven Ups

Another violent tale of the New York police force. The only high point is the magnificently directed chase scene, that is if you can stand to see another one. Starring Roy Schelder, Mountain Farms Mall.

Sleeper

Allen is the writer, director and star of this new film which finds him awakening in the 2173 after being frozen for 200 years when an operation for an ulcer went amiss. The futuristic satire is full of the usual Allen one liners and sight gags, but with some Chaplinesque slapstick added. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Sting

Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heros. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin, keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. Its an authentic look into the thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Tristana (1970)

Will be shown in place of originally scheduled, Murmur of the Heart. "Tristana is another of Bunuels masterly tales of repressive religion and perverse love. Catherine Deneuve plays a devout young Virgin who goes to live with her free-thinking guardian after her mother's death. She becomes his mistress, abandons him for a young artist, and then returns to marry her guardian, only to refuse to sleep with him. Long after the simpler terrors of even a well made horror film have disintegrated, the final and strangely beautiful images of perverse sexuality remain as warnings against illusions, arrogance, and innocence." Friday, Feb. 15, 7:30 and 9:30. At Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

The Virgin and the Gypsy (1970)

The fairy tale-like rendition of the novel by D.H. Lawrence. Set in early twentieth century England, the story recounts a girls longing for physical involvement with a man of real strength instead of the anemic aristocratic types she is constantly surrounded by. Beautiful photography and fine acting. Starring Joanna Shimkus and Franco Nero. Sat., Feb. 16, at 8:00 at Gamble Auditorium, m, Mt. olyoke College.

Solzhenitsyn —
"He had as much right to live on Russian soil as 'those who had the audacity to physically throw me out'."

Solzhenitsyn vows to continue working in exile in Switzerland

By FRANK CREPEAU
Associated Press WRiter

ZURICH, SWitzerland (Ap) — Alexander Solzhenitsyn vowed yesterday to continue his work in exile and said he has as much right to live on Russian soil as those who had "the audacity to physically throw me out."

In an exclusive interview with The Associated Press, Solzhenitsyn said he did not know when his family would join him or where he would settle. It was his first interview since he was expelled from the Soviet Union last Wendesday.

"But I do not think that it is hopeless," he said, referring to his exile. "Even old trees — even they are transplanted, and they take root in a new place."

Solzhenitsyn, 55, seemed much the same as in Moscow — defiant of Soviet authorities who stripped him of his citizenship and expelled him and eager to get on with his writing.

He accepted questions at the Zurich apartment of his Swiss lawyer, Fritz Heeb, and then wrote out the answers.

The Nobel laureate voiced special concern for his family and for his literary archives collected over the years. "If the Soviet authorities confiscate them, even partially, it will be spiritual murder," he said.

Solzhenitsyn said he did not have the strength to reassemble the collection of documents. If they are seized, he said, "then my remaining years and strength, instead of being directed to Russian history, will be directed toward the Soviet present for which I need no archives."

He said "the direction" his work takes now will depend on whether Soviet authorities release his archives. He said "October 1916," the second volume of the history of revolutionary years begun with "August 1914," was nearly ready and the third volume is under wav.

Confiscation of what he called a "rich collection" of materials, documents, photographs and rare books he had annotated, would amount to "spiritual murder."

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko said in Paris, where he was visiting French leaders Monday, that Solzhenitsyn's files "are not known to many people," hinting it might be some time

Five College Major In Black Studies Proposed

A proposal for a single Black Studies Major is before the curriculum committees of the five colleges in the area. Once adopted, this Major will replace all Majors presently existing at these institutions. Regardless of the school in which a student is enrolled, once he or she declares Black Studies as the field of academic interest that student becomes a Five College Major.

The proposal, which shall be discussed here, has been generated by the Five College Black Studies Executive Committee as a major first step towards creating a Black Studies consortium. Properly implemented, the major will affect the academic experience of students and bring about basic adjustments in the procedures of the Black Studies Programs in the five schools.

These adjustments will require a collective effort in planning and setting up the mechanism to make this proposal a reality. To this end the committee will be calling meetings of faculty and students.

The Five College Black Studies Major has been designed. The introductory sequence of courses in the major is intended to present students with a comprehensive overview of the cultural and political history of people of African descent, and to introduce them in a general manner to the contemporary, social, political and economic realities of the Black world. These courses must be taken during the freshman and sophomore years.

At this point the student must concentrate in a specific discipline is the field of History, the Humanities and Arts of the Social Sciences. The material of the advanced sequence will involve the Black experience as it pertains to the particular discipline. In this way the students will specialize and advance their study of the Black experience while learning the methodology and critical language of a particular academic discipline.

Afro-Am Majors will also be required to complete field work in a Black Community with faculty guidance and participation.

Hearst plans $2M food giveaway for daughter's safe return

By SUSAN SWARD
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Newspaper magnate Randolph A. Hearst pledged $2 million Monday to feed the needy as a first step in winning freedom for his kidnaped daughter Patricia.

"This is a gesture of good will," Hearst told a news conference at a downtown hotel. "There is no guarantee Patricia is going to get home on this."

Hearst said he was donating $500,000 himself and that the Hearst Foundation was giving $1.5 million. He said arrangements have been made for the money "to be delivered to a tax-exempt, charitable organization approved by the attorney general of California, capable of making a distribution for the benefit of the poor and needy."

Hearst said he was still looking for a suitable organization to administer the good give-away demanded by the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army which claims it kidnaped Miss Hearst on Feb. 4.

"The money will be available tomorrow, but we have to find the proper conduit," the gray-haired president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner said.

Hearst said the $500,000 he is giving is "a substantial part of my personal assests." He said the remaining $1.5 million from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation had been approved by directors. of the charitable organization after family members disqualified themselves.

"This is an honest effort on my part to do what I can, and that's all I can do. I think they'll believe that," he said.

The SLA had given Hearst until Tuesday to devise a sweeping food giveaway estimated to cost as much as $400 million. Hearst said he only could afford a modified plan for the poorest of the poor.

Campaign to back Solzhenitsyn

UMass professor stresses individual freedom as means for world peace

By DONNA HARTMAN

A UMass economics professor, Vaclav Holesovsky, is soliciting supporters for The Ad Hoc Committee for Intellectual Freedom, a new nationwide campaign backing Alexander Solzhenitsyn.

Solzhenitsyn is the Soviet author who was deported from his homeland last Wednesday for his accounts of Stalinist conentration camps in his latest book Gulag Archipelago. Professor Holesovsky, himself a Czechoslovadian exile, learned of the committee by responding to an advertisement in the New York Times sponsored by Howard K. Smith of ABC news, asking for financial contributions to the Norman Thomas Fund, Inc. and the Andrei Sakharov Campaign.

Professor Holesovsky has approached faculty members here in a letter stating the importance of Western knowledge of Soviet oppression, and participation in encouraging intellectual freedom for individuals such as Solzhenitsyn. He feels freedom for individuals could eventually lead to freedom for Soviet citizens and consequently world peace.

These very ideals were expressed by both Norman Thomas, a respected American socialist leader who encouraged labor novement liberals in the U.S. to join in the "spirit of freedom" expressed by liberals in non-democratic countries, and by Andrei Sakarow, Soviet nuclear physicist, better known as "the father of the Soviet H-bomb," in his 1968 book, Progress, Coexistence and Intellectual Freedom.

According to Holesovsky, the funds raised by the campaign will be used to "enlighten the Western public" to the global importance of the crucial issues at hand involving Solzhenitsyn. Holesovsky feels it is difficult for most Americans to realize the types of harassment people in the Soviet Union receive. He noted that Solzhenitsyn's life was continually threatened while residing in the Soviet Union and if not for his deportation he would eventually have been "bumped off by thugs" hired by the Soviet government.

Holesovsky stated that although Americans are disgusted with the dificiencies of their own system, the can't conceive of the proportional differences between their system and totalitarianism. "Americans must gather enough moral strength and insight in the importance of western protest actions toward the Soviet Union in order to influence the development of democracy in the Soviet Union," Holesovky said.

The professor believes that Americans and other Westerners should devote their technological resources to communicate with the USSR in order to foster the spirit of intellectual freedom there. Solzhenitsyn's books are circulating underground in the Soviet Union, but very few people have the opportunity to read them.

Westerners could share their knowledge with the Russians by initiating such projects as broadcasting Gulag Archipalago and other news through Radio Free Europe. Therefore, according to Holesovsky, the Soviet regime would not find it as easy to manipulate the population for thier own purposes.

Andrei Sakharov issued a statement Thursday asking for the establishment of an international tribunal similar to that which tried Nazi war criminals. Its purpose would be to deal with the crimes of the Soviet regime, which are made public. Holesovsky agrees that "moral strength is toothless without legal strength."

Picking the best and the brightest

By EDWARD MISCH

An estimated 16,000 students will be applying to UMass this year and it is the job of Robert J. Doolan and his admissions staff to decide who will be accepted. Director of Admissions Doolan expresses a growing concern for the preservation of the individuality of the incoming student.

"Our admission philosophy takes care of the individual," says Doolan. "We don't want to bring someone here who will get chewed up by the university."

In an effort to become more familiar with the educational environments of the applicants, the admissions staff visits most of the high schools in the state. The three men and two women on the staff each have a territory in the state for which they are responsible for being acquainted with.

High academic performance is naturally important in the consideration of an applicant but Doolan indicates that it is beneficial for an individual to have exhibited an ability to survive socially. Having seen that incoming students some times find it difficult to cope with university life, the UMass admissions crew is looking for people who will offer something to the university community.

But this is a particularly difficult task. As Doolan says, "How do you judge the social survival of an individual?"

At UMass, the board and aptitude exams that are required from applicants are no longer given the weight that they once had and Doolan is seeking the elimination of these scores. He would rather have S.A.T. and college board results submitted on a voluntary basis, realizing that poor test scores do not necessarily indicate a poor student. The admissions staff is now looking for a strong pattern of rising grades.

Doolan regards the extra curricular activities of an applicant as an indication of the sincerity an individual has for the field he wishes to pursue. However, an absence of activity is not necessarily held against a student.

Doolan holds that "you can't penalize an individual for lack of participation." Athletic activities sometimes help. If a superior athlete, or "specialized individual," as Doolan refers to them, does not have a high academic record, he may receive special treatment. "We bend with these people."

The current admissions philosophy, according to Doolan, is aimed at producing a "good mixture of the state" when the university stops growing within the next few years. The staff is accepting more women for professional fields and, through pre-retirement conferences, encourages older residents to consider going back to school.

Doolan also notices an increase in "non-traditional" students, those who are likely to work through B.D.I.C. and hopes to admit individuals who will explore all the facets of university life. After twelve years with the admissions department, Mr. Doolan says, "It's a fascinating business; the most fun I've had in my life."

Mitchell, Stans go on trial today

NEW YORK (AP)-Two original members of President Nixon's Cabinet, John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans, go on trial here today accused of selling their influence for a secret $200,000 contribution to Nixon's re-election campaign.

Neither man was still in the Cabinet when the alleged crime occured in 1972. Mitchell had quit as attorney general to take over operation of the Committee to Re-elect the President. Former Commerce Secretary Stans was the connittee's chief fund raiser.

Delayed three times since last September, partly while both sides wrangled over availability of White House tape recordings, jury selection may start Tuesday unless there are last-minute pretrial motions for U.S. District Court Judge Lee P. Gagliardi.

Mitchell and Stans are the first Cabinet men indicted on criminal charges since the Teapot Dome scandals of the 1920s. While this case is not related directly to the Watergate scandal, the two former administrators and an alleged coconspirator, John W. Dean III, were major witnesses in the Senate Watergate inquiry. Dean, not a defendant here, has pleaded guilty to conspiring to obsturct the Watergate investigation.

A missing defendant is Robert L. Vesco, the financier who made the secret cash contribution at a time when the Securities and Exchange Commission was launching a major civil action against his business empire.

Vesco has lived in the Bahamas and Costa Rica since the indictment last summer and beaten government efforts to bring him back for trial.

Academic affairs committee

Rhetoric requirement, teacher evaluations debated

By DONALD WILHOLM

Maybe when you register next September, there will be a fresh copy of a teacher's evaluation booklet awaiting your thorough examination. Maybe the rhetoric requirement will be altered. The Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee is working these topics and many others that affect UMass students and their education.

Monday night's meeting was the first of the semester. Chairpersons Martin J. Miller and various committee members outlined some of their activities for the coming semester.

The rhetoric requirement was one of the main issues for discussion, though the committee did not appear overly optimistic about its abolishment. The same applied to the language requirements. Hopefully, a teacher's evaluation booklet, which will rate individual teachers as to how well they impart information, their interest in their students, and so on, will be prepared this summer. The sheer difficulty of gathering and processing such a mass of information will make the production quite a job.

The University possesses a wide, but scattered array of counseling services, and the UMass student can put in a day's work trying to find out who he should see about a problem he may have. The Committee is attempting to consolidate information about counseling services into a single booklet.

Also discussed was the subject of maintaining relationships with residence area academic affairs committees, for helping the colloquia program, and as a means of getting feedback from the student body on what issues they feel the Academic Affairs Committee should concentrate on.

The Course Description Guide and the Handbook on Alternative Education are produced by the committee; and the mechanics of producing them and on maintaining correspondences with other universities around the country was also discussed. The latter is considered valuable, as university student governments correspond with each other to find out how different schools cope with similar problems.

All in all, it looks like a busy semester for the Academic Affairs Committee. Between the Course Description Guide and the Committee's efforts to reform academic policies, it looks like a term in which both the Committee and the UMass student will benefit.

Prof stresses freedom

The Ad Hoc Committee for Intellectual Freedom argues that "to have a secure world peace, you need free regimes." However, Holesovsky is disturbed by Henry Kissinger's Soviet diplomacy, which "separates the internal political regime of the Soviet Union from the diplomatic game with the Soviet Union."

"In other words," Holesovsky stated, "if one must deal with a totalitarian regime one can be sure that it does not act on good faith. Therefore, the results of any negotiations remain shaky.

"Both parties must share the same values to make the contract solid. Kissinger and other theoreticians of power equilibrium are making a serious mistake if they leave out the state of the internal regime in the Soviet Union in their power equations and calculations."

The Committee would aid in establishing free regimes in the Soviet Union by emphasizing the support from the Western public, and in transmitting as much information as possible to the Soviet population through western channels. Consequently, a peaceful coalition between the U.S. and the USSr would prevail, they say.

Professor Holesovsky was born in Czechoslovakia and exiled himself in 1948 after the Stalinist regime took over. He has been teaching at UMass since 1965 and is now teaching Marxian Economics and Soviet Area Economics as well as courses about other economic systems. Contributions to either "The Norman Thomas Fund, Inc." or to "The Andrei Sakharov Campaign" should be mailed in check to Bayard Rustin and Charles Zimmeman, Suite 802-1182 Broadway, New York, New York 10001.

Phonothon: Alumni Office starts new method of fund-raising

By MARJORIE MORSE

During the month of April the University Alumni Office will be exercising a new type of fund-raising. In previous years, the impersonal mailing method was used to solicit pledges for the annual Fund. This year the Alumni pledges will be reached by telephone. The phonothon was used successfully in Boston and is expected to be effective in Amherst.

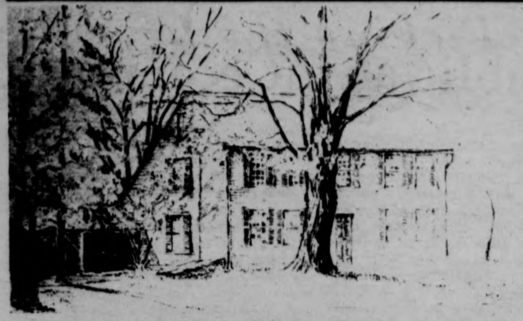
A unique aspect of the Amherst phonothon, as pointed out by Brenda Rau, Annual Fund Officer at memorial Hall, is the number of students involved. No other project of this type has been tried using such a large group of volunteers. Approximately six-hundred workers will be needed throughout the month to man the forty phones in Memorial Hall.

The organization of the phonothon revolves around team competition. Most dorms, sororities, fraternities, or any other campus group will have representative teams working one night out of the month. A prize will be awarded to the team collecting the most money and possibly the most pledges. Anyone, however, is welcome to participate any evening.

Students volunteering will be committing themselves to a 6:00 to 10:00 for one night during April. All volunteers will be briefed on the art of telephone soliciting and provided with a meal. Volunteers should find the calling especially interesting as they will be contacting alumni from all over the country. The regional soliciting has already been completed.

The reason for stressing the enlargment of the Annual Fund lies in the fact that the state legislature's support of the University's needs will be lessened in the future. Alumni are considered as generous supporters of any school, therefore it is reasonable to turn to the Annual Fund for help in strengthening UMass. The money raised will be used toward the Alumni Scholarship Program, Library and Fine Arts support and Spdcial Academic Projects. These include BDIC, Everywoman's Center, Outreach, Institute for Man and His Environment, etc.

The goal of the April Phonothon has been set at $50,000. Its success depends on student volunteers and it is the students that will benefit from the project. Find a team and sign up now to solicit for the future of UMass.



Stockbridge House, together with the Homestead, are presently used as the Faculty Club house.

Stockbridge House: oldest in Amherst

By FRITS GEURTSEN

First in a three-part series dealing with the history of Stockbridge House.

The oldest house on campus bears the distinction of also being the oldest existing house in Amherst. Stockbridge House, situated behind Morrill Science Center.

The house, which has been described by Alumnus Magazine as the "collective ancestor of all the buildings on campus", is a classic New England saltbox — white with green shutters.

Slate tiles and a large chimney grace the roof. On either side of the front door hang two antique carriage lamps and an old sign proclaiming the builder's name and the date of construction.

Stockbridge House, together with the Homestead, are presently used as the Faculty Club house. The Homestead was recently moved from its old location across from the Northeast Quad to where it now stands on the right hand side of Stockbridge House.

According to town records of the period, the house was built by Samuel and Hannah Boltwood in 1728 in the area then known as "New Swamp". This name changed consecutively to Hadley East Farms, Hadley Third Precinct, District of Amherst, and finally Town of Amherst.

Samuel Boltwood, according to historian Charles Hiram Thayer, was a member of the Hadley militia who fought against the French and Indians in Queen Anne's War.

He was very instrumental in the development of Amherst as a community, being involved in the establishment of the first church, the laying out of a cemetery, and the calling of the first town meeting.

Because he had no male descendants, Samuel Boltwood bequeathed the house and property to his son-in-law, John Field. Field became Amherst's largest property holder as well as being a farmer, innkeeper, and retailer of liquors.

Due to his Tory leanings, John Field was locked up in his house during the Revolutionary War along with eight other Tory sympathizers. He was released at the war's end and once again took his place as a prominent Amherst townsman.

Field, it appears, was a born loser. In 1787 he joined the men of the ill-fated Shay's Rebellion to protest what they felt were unjust taxes imposed by the wealthy merchant class of Eastern Massachusetts.

Soon after, the taxes became so intolerable that Field was forced to sell everything to Nehemiah Strong, who for a long time was mistakenly considered to be the house's original builder.

Strong in turn sold the property to Elijah Hastings, who established a blacksmith's shop at the site. At Hastings' death, his widow remarried, to Levi Cowles.

It was his nephew, Chester Cowles, who sold the house and land to the Trustees of Massachusetts Agricultural College in 1864. The College in time became the present University.

Weight Watchers works wonders

By FRED NOBLES

Jerry, according to Weight Watchers' literature, "lost 51 pounds and is now a member of the thin world."

But does their approach really work?

Richard Weiner, a senior in the theater department says, "If I ever went on a diet again it would definitely be Weight Watchers." Richard should know, during the past ten months he has lost 94 pounds.

A year ago Richard weight 275 pounds and was still stuffing into all those ugly clothes," like the biggest Levis on the local market. Today he has a 34 inch waist, weighs 181 pounds and plans to reach 172 before the semester is over. "That's three pounds underweight for my height according to Weight Watchers."

Richard began taking dieting seriously last spring during the Diet Marathon held to raise money to improve the campus for handicapped people. "I lost 26 pounds the first month and raised about 600 to 700 dollars for the marathon." He won the Marathon's hundred dollar first prize and appeared on Channel 40 television news.

At the end of the spring semester he went home, "I gained a couple of pounds right away, got really scared, so I went on Weight Watchers." In three weeks with the Weight Watchers' diet he lost 18 pounds.

"I was very happy on the diet. You can just eat and eat and eat." He thinks the weekly meetings are a "great incentive, everyone gets up and gets weighted, everyone claps if you've lost a few pounds."

Richard had to quit Weight Watchers when he went to the beach for the rest of the summer. "It took me about three weeks to get over being scared of going off the Weight Watchers diet." He finally found a substitute for Weight Watchers in a book, Unitrol: The Magic of the Mind by Alfred Cantor.

Richard thinks Unitrol isn't for everyone; the approach is to "positive think your way out of everything. You have to repeat over and over until you believe it. 'I'm getting happier and happier, slimmer and slimmer and sexually more attractive every day.' "

Most people, he thinks, can't use the Unitrol method because they think its either a joke or it won't work. Richard is a believer; with positive thinking and plenty of exercise he didn't have to worry much about his eating. At the end of the summer he was down to 196 pounds.

Richard has a few weight losing suggestions of his own. "Don't get into the rut of sitting home watching TV and eating. Get a positive attitude and get out and do things."

He also thinks anyone can lose weight on dining commons food. "I lost 30 pounds eating at the dining commons. I ate fish, chicken and things like that and stayed away from macaroni."

As Weight Watchers say, "He did it...so can you."

David Graham DuBois to speak Wednesday

David Graham DuBois, son of black scholar W.E.B. DuBois, will speak here Wednesday.

"Dr. W.E.B. DuBois: A Son's Perspective," will begin at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, School of Business, and is sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program.

W.E.B. DuBois was born in Great Barrington in 1868, graduated from Fisk University, and earned a doctorate in history from Harvard University. He was chief founder of the NAACP and the Pan African Movement, and an Ambassador Extraordinary to Liberia for President Coolidge. He was also a scholar in history, sociology, and anthropology, and the author of 22 books, and hundreds of papers, articles, and essays. Dr. DuBois died in Ghana in 1963.

In 1973 a collection representing the bulk of his papers and unpublished manuscripts was acquired by UMass-Amherst.

Predicts 6% unemployment

Meany: Nixon is misleading public about economy

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — AFL-CIO President George Meany said yesterday the economy is going into a recession despite administration claims to the contrary. He predicted unemployment will top 6 per cent this year.

Meany also made clear that the 14-million-member labor federation would continue to push for President Nixon's impeachment despite what he said was the administration charge that the AFL-CIO was trying to drag out Watergate for political purposes.

"Blaming us for the President's trouble is ridiculous," he said. "The President could have ended Watergate last May if he just came out and told the whole truth."

Meany fielded a wide range of questions at a news conference after the opening of the AFL-CIO executive council's midwinter conference.

On the economy, Meany said that for years economists generally agreed that if the gross national product failed to rise by at least 1 per cent for two consecutive quarters that would constitute a recession.

But now, Meany added, Herbert Stein, the President's chief economics adviser, says there's nothing "sacred" about that definition.

"So I don't know whether there is going to be an official recession or not," Meany said.

In any case, he predicted inflation would continue rising with the nation's unemployment rate climbing possibly as high as 6.5 per cent. The administration has forecast a rate of under 6 per cent, up from the current level of 5.2 per cent.

Meany called wage-price controls "complete fantasy."

He said it was unfair for the government to hold workers' wage increases to 5.5 per cent while proposing pay raises of 7.5 per cent a year for congressmen and Cabinet officials.

The administration has asked Congress to let controls expire April 30 except on the health, petroleum and food industries.

Meany said the energy crisis has created the worst "mess" he has seen in Washington and has resulted in a lot of double talk with no solution in sight.

Commenting on his private meeting here last week with Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, Meany said he found the governor "has mellowed somewhat" in his views, particularly on race. But he said "I doubt it" when asked if he could support Wallace for president.

Nixon, Wallace attend rally

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Stumping for the support of Southerners, President Nixon yesterday derided those who say the nation is sick, declaring "the heart of America is good, the character of America is strong."

The President detoured through the heart of Dixie en route back to the capital from his Florida home to join Alabama Gov. George Wallace and a crowd estimated at 40,000 at an Honor America rally.

In his speech, Nixon made no direct reference to the Watergate scandal but accused the Washington news media of painting a distorted picture that "America is sick, that there is something wrong with the country that cannot be corrected."

"We're going to continue to be a great nation," Nixon said.

The appearance was part of a continuing White House campaign to overcome the impact of Watergate on Nixon's presidency. The beaming chief executive clearly was pleased with the reception he received.

"...God bless you Mr. President...you are among friends here," Wallace said in introducing Nixon.

The Democratic governor who was a third party candidate for president in 1968 said "we in Alabama have always honored the office of the President of the United States...we are flag wavers in Alabma and we don't mind admitting it."

Nixon in turn had words of praise for Wallace especially for his courage in recovering from bullet wounds which left him paralyzed and confined to a wheelchair.

A few signs urging Nixon's impeachment were sprinkled throughout the crowd jammed into a downtown Huntsville park, but there was no noticeable heckling like that which has greeted Nixon in some other public appearances.

In what perhaps was a fleeting reference to his own current difficulties, Nixon said "there have been men and women in our history who have had great problems and they survived them."

His references to the national news media came as a "personal note" at the end of his address.

He said there is "sometimes a tendency in reporting of the news...that bad news is news and good news is not news."

Because of this, he said, "many get a distorted view of what is America and what it is really like." It is in Washington more than any place in the world that you hear America is sick that something is wrong with the country that cannot be corrected."

He concluded by saying those distorted views are wrong, then stood alongside Wallace's wheelchair as the rally ended with the band playing "God Bless America."

Nixon left Huntsville for Indianapolis, where he planned to pick up his daughter, Julie Eisenhower, and bring her to Washington. Mrs. Eisenhower is recovering from surgery to remove an ovarian cyst.

White House helicopter prankster seen as "quiet, industrious"

PANAMA CITY, FLA. (AP) - The flying instructor of Robert Preston, the soldier who flew a stolen helicopter onto the White House lawn, remembers him as a conservative pilot not given to wild stunts.

Preston was "a quiet, industrious, clean cut youth.. a regular hair-cut type of guy and wore conservative clothes," said Joe Ashbrook, aviation instructor at Gulf Coast Community College where Preston received an associate degree in aviation technology.

"He is not the individual I would have expected it of," Ashbrook said of Preston, who has a private pilot's license for fixed-wing, single-engine airplanes.

Preston, 20, an Army PFC helicopter mechanic stationed at Ft. Meade, Md., buzzed over the nation's capital for two hours early Sunday before landing his the military chopper on the White House lawn in a hail of police buckshot.

Army officials said Preston started the Army's helicopter pilot school at Ft. Wolters, Tex., in January 1973 and amassed 157 hours of flight time in 24 weeks of training before being washed out for "deficiency in the instrument phase."

He began training as a helicopter mechanic last October and was assigned to Ft. Meade on Jan 23.

Luther McDonald, the principal of Panama City's Rutherford High School, said records showed Preston was a highly intelligent student who graduated in 1972 at age 16.

But he said Preston was "a very quiet young man" who had few friends and participated in no social activities.

"Bob did quite a job for our aviation club at the Inter-collegiate Aviation Association meet in Tennessee about 18 months ago," Ashbrook said.

Efforts to locate Preston's mother and father have been unsuccessful.

Rebel gunners blow up Cambodian ammunition

By MATT FRANJOLA
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PEHN, Cambodia (AP) — Insurgents attacked a 10-vessel convoy en route to Phnom Penh, blew up an ammunition barge, killed one sailor and wounded four others, the capital's port authorities said yesterday.

In Saigon, informed sources said South Vietnamese government forces have occupied a fifth island in the Spratly chain, a South China Seas archipelago claimed by Peking.

The Cambodian rebels jumped the convoy about 30 miles southeast of Phnom Penh on the Mekong River, the capital's only major supply artery that remains open.

The barge that blew up was carrying 700 tons of ammunition, the port authorities said. Another barge caught fire, but the blaze was put out.

The vessels continued on toward Phnom Penh for a Monday evening arrival. Other vessels in the convoy were cargo ships and petroleum tankers.

The ambush was the first major attack on the shipping lane during the current dry season.

Government forces nine miles northwest of the capital drove insurgents from the Somali Pagoda and tried to trap 1,200 rebels believed to be in the area, field reporters said.

The pagoda was destroyed in the fighting. Scores of foxholes were abandoned by the insurgents, a newsman reported from the battle area.

Beer, rice and Cambodian whisky were hauled in for the government troops after they attacked the pagoda, the newsman said.

To the south of Phnom Penh, government troops tried to cross the Prek Thnot River to establish a bridgehead, but were driven back by heavy machine gun fire from insurgent bunkers, filed reporters siad.

Saigon sources said about 30 South Vietnamese government soldiers were put ashore without opposition on the fifth of the Spratly islands to be occupied by Saigon troops.

The seabed in the area is believed to contain oil deposits.

The Chinese apparently have not taken up arms to contest South Vietnam's claim to the Spratlys. Last month, a Peking flotilla drive South Vietnamese forces from the Paracel islands to the north in the South China Sea.

Americans emigrating to Canada

BOSTON (AP) - Statistics show that at least 14,325 New Englanders have emigrated to Canada since 1966, first because of the Vietnam War and now because of Watergate, according to the Canadian consul here.

"A couple of years ago, theywere moving to Canada because of the Vietnam war. Now, they're fed up with Watergate and feel insecure about the future," he said.

"Most of those going to Canada nowadays are younger people who are moving to the Toronto metropolitan and industrial area to seek new opportunities," said Gaston Beaupre.

BITTER LAKES, OCCUPIED EGYPT--A convoy of United Nations soldiers wait to move into Egyptian territory evacuated by Israeli troops.

Kissinger, Arabs make progress to bring Syria into peace talks

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two Arab foreign ministers and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger made some progress yesterday on bringing Syria into the Middle East pace talks and lifting the oil embargo against the United States.

The ministers, Ismail Fahmy of Egypt and Omar Sakkaf of Saudi Arabia, will call today on President Nixon at the White House. Fahmy told newspersons he would be bringing "good news."

"There is progress on every avenue," the Egyptian said after an hour's talk with Kissinger in the secretary's office and lunch at the State Department. But he declined to provide specifics.

Kissinger, meanwhile, said there had been some "solid" accomplishments."

"We had very useful and constructive and friendly talks with foreign ministers Sakkaf and Fahmy about the whole range of Middle East problems and I agree with his Fahmy's characterization," the secretary said.

Asked whether they had actually reached an agreement, Kissinger replied: "They weren't of this nature but they were constructive talks."

Sakkaf, suffering the effects of a virus, stayed for only part of the meetings with Kissinger. Vice President Gerald R. Ford was in the luncheon group.

Kissinger has been eager to get the Arabs to agree to a lifting of the embargo before the disengagment negotiations with Isreal. The Arabs have maintained that before the oil squeeze is relaxed the Israelis must pull back from the Golan Heights.

However, when Sakkaf was asked whether disengagement and the oil embargo were directly connected, he said: "Not necessarily the way you think it is connected."

This appeared to raise the prospect of a lifting of the embargo once negotiations reach a serious point.

He said that before he could consider traveling to the Middle East as a mediator there would have to be "a framework" for negotiations.

The secretary said he called President Nixon at Key Biscayne, Fla., before meeting with Fahmy and Sakkaf and that he would talk to them again before today's White House session.

Protest strains U.S., Jordan outlook

By PAUL THEUTHARDD
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Influential circles in Jordan are asking whether the United States is preparing to abandon its old ally King Hussein in the interests of an over-all solution in the Mideast.

There is speculation in Amman that reports of demonstrations by units of the Jordanian army were influenced by the United States to weaken Hussein's hand in his forthcoming talks with President Nixon in Washington.

There is also open suspicion in the Joridanian capital that Washington will come down against Hussein and for the creation of a Palestinian state in the occupied west bank of Jordan, on the heels of an eventual Israeli withdrawal.

Hussein's most conciliatory position has been to call for a referendum among Palestinians to decide the future of the west bank at an unspecified date after the Israelis give way to a return of Jordanian civilian administration.

The United States has never taken a public stand on the future political rule of the west bank. The nearest it has gone is to state that the "legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" must be respected in an over-all settlement.

The immediate strain between Amman and Washington arose from the army demonstrations at the garrison town of Zerqa north of Amman two weeks ago.

Informed sources said Hussein may have "misunderstood" early U.S. Embassy reports of the demonstrations, sent to him as a normal courtesy while he was in London.

Reports from his own officials in Amman are understood to have given a much less dramatic view of the affair, and advised there was no need for his return to Jordan. But he disregarded the advice.

Influential Jordanians maintain their belief that Hussein and Premier Zeid Rifai were astonished at the speed U.S. reports reached them in London, and of the detailed information they contained about the army troubles.

U.S. officials in turn were astonished that such reports, relayed as a gesture to their ally, could have been misinterpreted.

The U.S. charge d'affaires in Amman, Pierre Graham, has been in constant personal contact with Hussein and Rifai in efforts to resolve any problems.

Amman has been without a U.S. ambassador since Dean Brown left at the end of November. Ambassador-designate Thomas Pickering, a career diplomat and a close aide of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, is due in Amman after Hussein's expected visit to Washington.

Gold Prices Soar

By JULIE FLINT
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - The price for an ounce of gold on the free market soared through the $150 barrier on all European bullion market yesterday as Common Market finance ministers met in Brussels to discuss raising the official price of the metal.

But the dollar eased throughout the day across Europe, closing in Paris at 5 francs, its lowest level since the French currrency was floated Jan. 21.

In Zurich and London, gold hit record highs of $152 an ounce, a jump of $34.50 since the start of the year.

In Zurich, the price held steady throughout the day. But in London it dropped $2 to close at $150 still up from $149 at Friday's close.

Dealers attributed the sharp increases to reports that the finance ministers were prepared to raise the value of the gold buttressing their national currencies from its present undervalued price of $42.22.

By increasing the official price, the ministers would immediately raise their gold reserves, now valued at about $18 billion, and so help to cover deficits caused by the ever-increasing cost of oil.

Gold trading was split in March 1968 into two tiers, official and free.

Dentists, jewelers, industry and speculators buy and sell the metal on the free market. National banks deal on the official tier with fixed-rate transactions.

Vermont rationing off

Shutdown of service stations hinted

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gov. Thomas Salmon of Vermont has suspended a voluntary gasoline distribution program scheduled to go in effect Wednesday. And service station operators throughout New England are hinting at possible shutdowns unless they get clarification of federal allocation plans.

Salmon said yesterday that the Oregon plan scheduled to begin in Vermont Wednesday was being suspended because "there is both massive misunderstanding of this plan and its purposes and strong evidence of unwillingness by a substantial number of gasoline stations to comply."

He proposed a Feb. 27 meeting with service station operators to discuss supply and distribution problems and said, "we will continue to fight the battle with Washington to get Vermont its fair share of the action."

Operators in Barre, Rutland and Burlington had indicated they would not comply with the voluntary plan because it would not ease the supply situation.

Salmon said the plan, based on serving motorists with odd or even numbered license plates depending on the date of the month, was designed to "ease long waiting lines for gasoline, ease panic buying of gasoline, deal with irregular hours of opening and treat all Vermonters as equitably as possible."

He said suspension of the plan was intended to indicate to service station operators his "willingness to listen" to their side of the problem.

In Rhode Island, meanwhile, a spokesman for the Eastern Seaboard Dealers Association said members were considering a week-long shutdown to protest federal gasoline allocation rules.

Irving Guyette, president of the association, said a delegation of operators wanted to meet with Gov. Philip Noel, but he declined to discuss the specific of the delegation's operations.

Atty. Gen. Richard Israel's voluntary gasoline distribution plan went into effect in Rhode Island yesterday, urging motorists to stay away from gasoline pumps unless their tanks were below half full and placing a five-gallon minimum and 10-gallon maximum on gasoline sales.

A group of service station operators in Greenwich, Conn., said they will shut down their stations unless the Federal Energy Office issues immediate clarification of its ban on preferential treatment for regular customers.

Waterbury operators shut down for two days last week in protest of the same issue.

Dick Roina, an attorney representing the Greenwich group, said dealers want to be allowed to reserve 15 to 25 per cent of their supplies for regular customers and they want a 1.5 cents per gallon increase in prices.

In Massachusetts, state police reported unusually light traffic for the holiday weekend. The American Automobile Association said about 25 per cent of the state's service stations were open, but most were limiting sales from $1 to 10 gallons per customer and were staggering operating hours.

The Oregon plan of gas distribution has been in effect on a voluntary basis in Massachusetts since Feb. 11. Gov. Francis W. Sargent has said compliance with the plan is good, but service station operators have been grumbling for the past week over the federal Energy Office regulation against preferential treatment for regular customers.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn met with Massachusetts dealers Saturday and advised them to fill the tanks of regular customers but continue to sell some gasoline to other motorists.

The Federal Energy Office said the dealers who take Quinn's advice are subject to a $5,000 fine, but the attorney general vowed to defend in court any dealer prosecuted under the regulation.

New Hampshire was scheduled to begin the Oregon plan yesterday. But holidays are considered exempt from the voluntary distribution, so motorists with either odd or even numbered plates were permitted to purchase gasoline.

Service station operators in Nashua began the plan on their own last week. In Manchester and in Keene, variations of the Oregon plan were reported, with gasoline distribution apparently being left to the discretion of service station operators.

Most Manchester dealers indicated they would stick to the alternate-day plan regardless of whether gasoline was requested on a holiday, 31st day of the month or Saturday. Under Gov. Meldrim Thomson's voluntary program, holidays, the 31st and Saturdays are days on which any motorist can purchase gasoline, regardless of license plate numbers.

Maine, the only New England state to be included in a federal list of 12 states scheduled to receive increases fuel allocations, reported heavy traffic during the holiday.

Eighty per cent of the state's service stations were reported open and pumping gasoline. No voluntary program of gasoline distribution has been instituted in Maine and Gov. Kenneth Curtis indicated last week that he would reject any suggestion to implement the Oregon plan.

Service stations in Maine have not reported long lines of customers, except in the Rockland area.

Last week's energy picture

By week's end, the focus of the nation's energy shortage had shifted from trucks and diesel fuel to gasoline: How to sell it, how to buy it.

A three-day meeting of 13 Western oil-consuming nations and Japan ended Wednesday in Washington with agreement to develop "a comprehensive action program" and establishment of machinery to prepare for a joint meeting with the oil-producing states, possibly by May 1.

But a meeting of Arab oil ministers, scheduled for last Thursday in Tripoli, Libya, was called off abruptly. United States officials had hoped the meeting might lead to an end of the Arab oil embargo.

The truckers' strike, which left two drivers dead and scores injured, began on a national basis Jan. 31 over complaints of high fuel prices. Before it was over by the middle of last week, 100,000 workers in affected industries had been laid off temporarily and spot shortages of food developed.

A settlement, reached in Washington Feb. 7, guaranteed the drivers all the fuel they need, provided for Sunday fuel sales, permitted freight rate hikes and promised future rate action to so they can pass along rising costs.

With the diesel fuel problem out of the way, the gasoline shortage reasserted itself. New Jersey and Maryland instituted mandatory gasoline distribution programs at the first of the week. New York State, Washington State, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C., started voluntary plans.

Two states, Vermont and New Hampshire, were scheduled to begin voluntary programs this week. And Pennsylvania is contemplating making its plan mandatory.

Meanwhile, gasoline dealers in Norfolk, Va., and Waterbury, Conn., closed their stations as the weekend neared to protest the Federal Energy Office's ban of preferential sales.

Because of the protests, the FEO issued a clarification Friday that said service stations may continue to give preferential service to commercial customers.
